1903. There is something deeper than mere sentiment in the custom of making some new resolve at the commencement of the New Year. It is rather an instinct than a sentiment. There is undeniably a great solemnity about the passing of the years, and we realise it most at the dying of each old year. The "Watch Night" service touches this secret feeling, and very properly seeks to turn it into the right channel. Resolutions, apart from the grace of God, are generally short-lived — that is why so little often comes of the solemn emotions awakened at the end of the old year and the beginning of the new. Christian hearts, however, as Miss Havergal used to say, may well make some fresh resolution in the strength of God on New Year's Day. Particularly might we offer ourselves afresh to God to-day for more strenuous work on behalf of His Kingdom. Recent returns tend to show that the majority of people are forgetting God; this is a clarion call to seek new power and to undertake new work. The greatest boon that could come to England during this year would be the religious revival for which so many have been long praying.

A Timely Message. We have received a Christmas and New Year card of texts by Mrs. J. Penn-Lewis, which has been a message to ourselves, and which we gladly pass on to our readers :—

O LORD . . . I know not how—(1 Kings iii. 7).
The LORD knoweth how—(2 Pet. ii. 9).
Stand still and see. . . . He will work for yo to-day (Exod. xiv. 13).
Prove Me now, saith the LORD (Mal. iii. 10).

Prayer for Revival. Special meetings for praise and for prayer, seeking the blessing of God upon the approaching mission of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, and for a great and general Revival, are being held at the Noon Meeting, 186, Aldersgate Street; also on Monday and Wednesday afternoons at three o'clock in the same place. They are seasons of close and increasing fellowship with God and with one another. It was urged, on Monday, in pursuance of the suggestions in our last issue (p. 26), that groups of about four persons should meet at stated times for the same object. The reason for so limited a number as four in a group is that there can be more definite agreement in a specific subject for prayer than in a larger meeting, and in many such groups far more would be exercised in actual and fervent praying than would be possible if the same number were gathered into one aggregate assembly. Communications from any who feel able to adopt this method in their own homes, will be appreciated.

The Promises of God. May we not begin the New Year with a fresh grip on our souls of the predictions and promises of God—that the fourth kingdom upon earth, dreadful, terrible, and strong exceedingly, shall pass away; that its end is near; and that "the saints of the Most High shall receive the Kingdom, and possess the Kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever"? That the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy it unto the end? That the Kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdoms under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose Kingdom is an everlasting Kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him?

Time and Eternity. One of the saddest errors of our lives is our disproportionate estimate of the things of time and of eternity, of the seen and the unseen; for the things which are seen are transitory, the things which are not seen are eternal. Nothing avails to correct this error more certainly than the blessed hope, the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Death and the Advent. The fear or even the hope of death works no such result. Death does not affect the continuity of the race or of our earthly interests. With one foot in the grave, the old man arranges his affairs, and sets his house in order, because he shall die and not live. "Their inward thought is that their houses shall continue for ever; and their dwelling places to all generations; they call their lands after their own names." But the coming of the King will bring to a sudden end all our arrangements. When we live in the power and vitality of that blessed hope, not as a doctrine and a controversy, but as a promise and a fact, we estimate the transitory by the eternal; weigh the passing present by the ever-nearing future; and because in every sign of the times we hear the footsteps of Him who loved us and gave Himself for us, we set our mind on things above, not on things of the earth; and seek to be found of Him without spot and blameless. If we love the Lord we love His appearing. This lies in the nature of things. Whatever our theory may be as to the time and circumstances of His coming, if we love Him we cannot but love His appearing.

A New Year's Request. The Editor has just received a letter from a man of affairs which looks at first sight readable and intelligible. But while the whole is indistinct, the names, which are the most important part of the letter, are peculiarly so. From time to time mistakes occur in the printing of names, there having been no time to verify them. Will our correspondents kindly assure themselves, before posting their letters, that every word is legible, and especially the names of persons and places?

Methodist Reunion. An important step has been taken towards the amalgamation of the Methodist New Connexion, the United Methodist Free Churches, and the Bible Christians. Committees have met in furtherance of the informal discussion of the question at the Œcumenical Conference in 1901, where certain preliminary difficulties were disposed of. There was an excellent attendance from all parts of the country, and a no less excellent spirit shown in the discussion. The matter is to be further considered by the various conferences of 1903 with a view to practical action, in the hope that "an ultimate wider movement may result in the organic reunion of every section of Methodism in one great Methodist Church." All this is ground for great encouragement, and a united front will do much to disarm the criticism of a cynical world. But care must be taken that even so desirable a step does not make "Methodism" a synonym for Christianity, nor induce the enlarged denomination to evince a spirit of aloofness from other sections of the greater Church of Christ.

The Expanding World. The triumph of Signor Marconi in transmitting a wireless telegram from Canada to Cornwall opens a new vista for the scientific and commercial world. A decade ago the suggestion of such a thing as that which has now been accomplished, would have been derided. Little by little, however, people have been prepared for it, and now it has actually been achieved. The Christian apologist may well point to these newer discoveries as hints of what miracle was and is—not the violation of natural law as the ignorant say, but the use by God of powers which, although unknown to us, are natural to Him. Each new revelation of the powers in the universe should drive men to their knees in grateful adoration of the Most High.

The Great Stumbling Block. From all parts of the country official testimonies are being received as to the devastating effects of the traffic in drink, and the authorities appear to be awakening to the urgent need for the suppression of a large number of the licences which hitherto have been so lavishly issued. Canterbury is in an unenviable position as regards intemperance, and stands second in the county and sixteenth in England, as regards the number of publichouses to the population. At Marylebone, it has been stated, there is a drinkshop to every forty-three families, and in St. Pancras one to every forty-nine houses. What is the necessary result of this demoralizing condition of things, may be gathered from the report of a conference in the latter borough, the Council secretary of which has said :

> The number of apprehensions in the borough last year were 1,800, and admissions for lunacy 1,572, while the figures for pauperism showed 287 per 10,000.

The movement to secure a reduction of such appalling totals, is one that calls for the prayers and the active co-operation of every Christian man and woman.

A Promising Opening for Philanthropists. The report of Dr. Welsh Braithwaite, Inspector under the Inebriates' Act, contains some valuable facts for temperance reformers. For instance, he points out the large number of persons who would be willing to submit to treatment, but are prevented because they are unable to find means for even the smallest weekly payments. He urges the need for retreats where the wives of small shopkeepers, artizans, and labourers, can be received; and urges on the attention of the benevolent and wealthy, the pressing call for founding such institutions where patients will be expected to pay little or nothing. There are few better ways in which well-disposed people could devote their gifts than in this direction. It has been proved again and again that habitual drunkenness has been apparently cured by proper treatment with the consent of the victim. It is lamentable that so many who have become slaves to the habit, but are sincerely desirous to reform, should be debarred by lack of means. Above all, such retreats should be made redolent of the blessed Gospel of Christ, through which alone the sinner can be saved from his sin.

Noble Workers. It is refreshing to turn from the unhappy revelations of wasted lives, with which some of our journals continue to fill their columns, to such records of noble devotion as those given in Mr. David Williamson's "Woman Workers of To-day," now appearing in The Sunday at Home. The sketch of and interview with the Countess of Meath in the January issue, with its incidental reference to the philanthropic labours of the Earl, is deeply interesting as showing what can be crowded into one sanctified life, and how far such a life "in the world, but not of it," can be made a blessing to thousands. The list of the institutions and societies, charitable and religious, which Lady Meath has been privileged to originate and conduct is a long one, as readers of The Christian are aware, but it is a revelation to find how widespread and far-reaching some of them have now become. The lesson of such altruistic lives, to those who find their selfish round of days culminate in weariness, is indeed a striking one.

The New Secularism. When a mind is perverted, it is astonishing to what lengths of folly and contradiction it leads. The failure of organized secularism in this country might well have opened the eyes of even aggressive infidels to the real character of their work. Not so, however; they are now pleading for a "new secularism," since it is clear that "the old secularism is nearing the close of its mission." And what is this new thing to be? In all seriousness, it is urged that "we ought to give the people a modified and rationalized church, with all the apparatus of symbol, ceremony, music, and parochial institutions"—and this, it is thought, would remove from infidel meetings "coldness and irreverence." It is both amusing and tragic, this warfare against the deepest claims of the soul. On the one hand the need for warmth and reverence is felt and admitted; on the other hand the only thing that will satisfy the heart is rejected. And so, in the very attempt to dispense with God these men tacitly admit their need of Him.

The "Intolerance" of the Gospel. In these days of religious eclecticism it is the fashion to treat with scant courtesy all who proclaim with dogmatic assurance the truths of the Gospel. "Tolerance" for all opinions is applauded as being more worthy than definite insistence upon one truth. The Apostles th mselves, who spake of there being "no sa^{e}vation in any other" name than the name olf Jesus, are today ranked among the ignorant by those who have no sympathy with definite teaching. Dr. Denney, in his book on the "Death of Christ," deals with this temper, and says of it:—

> As there is only one God, so there can only be one Gospel. If God has really done something in Christ on which the salvation of the world depends, and if he has made it known, then it is a Christian duty to be intolerant of everything which ignores, denies, or explains it away. The man who perverts it, is the worst enemy of God and men. . . . Intolerance like this is an essential element in the true religion; it is the instinct of self-preservation in it; the uncompromising defence of that on which the glory of God and the salvation of the world depend.

The True Broad Church. It is surely time that men who employ the terms "broad" and "narrow" by way of expressing their own attitude towards the Gospel, as well as their estimate of the attitude of others towards it, should give us some better basis for the use of such terms than their own personal caprice. It is easy enough to brand a man "narrow" because he does not agree with what another holds as "broad," and it may chance that, after all, the "narrow" man is the real "broad" man. There is a breadth which is fatal to truth. It is possible to be so broad as to forfeit all true ideas of reality and substance. Quite recently a prominent preacher advocated a Church broad enough to include everybody who had "a moral temper, a spiritual affection, and a surrender of the heart and will," these things being the "faith which Christ regarded as essential." Such vague ideas leave out of reckoning the very essential of a Church, i.e., the need of a central binding force. A collection of heterogeneous elements does not constitute a Church, not even if the elements be all moral. The only binding force for the Church is the Divine Person of our Lord, and any "breadth" which excludes this is simply impossible. The true broad Church is that which is comprehended in faith in the Deity of our Saviour and Lord.

Culture and Evangelicalism. Rev. R. J. Campbell, of Brighton, speaking a few nights ago at Leeds, lamented that the Evangelical churches attracted so few men of culture, as well as so few from amongst the working classes. So far as the first fact is concerned, we think a simple and frank explanation can be offered. Proportionately the Evangelical churches attract as many men of culture as the other bodies, but positively none of the churches attract very many of the class which regards itself as the superior class. And the reason is not to be found in the alleged low intellectual status of the ordinary Evangelical pulpit, but in the proud spirit which dominates so many of the class referred to. The malady of "swollen head" is exceedingly common in the world, and it is to this that abstention from public worship on the part of very many is due. We shall not allow for one moment that the brilliant apologists and teachers of the Evangelical churches are inferior to their proud and disdainful critics. An examination would probably prick the bladder of many of the haughty persons who sneer at Evangelicism. Pride is at the bottom of the greater part of the opposition to Divine truth. Creatures are too proud to admit themselves in debt to their Creator.

The Church at Prayer.

DURING the first week of the New Year, as of many previous years, the Church of Christ will be upon her knees. Will she be saying her prayers, or will she pray? Perhaps in some cases she will only say prayers, but we believe that, to a very great extent, she will really pour out her soul to God. We must not think of the Week of Prayer as being only observed at the public meetings of the saints. It may be that the spirit of grace and of supplications will be chiefly manifested in those who, like Hannah, in bitterness of soul, weep sore, and out of the abundance of their complaint and grief, speak to the Lord; or, again, in those who, like Elisabeth, Mary, and Zacharias, are filled with the Holy Ghost, and bless the Lord God of Israel who hath visited and redeemed His people.

In the public assemblies, also, we doubt not that prayer will be very generally made with faith unfeigned; for it is not the formal professors, but the genuine believers and workers and givers, who are drawn together in the Week of Prayer.

On Monday we praise God for what He is to us; on Tuesday we mourn before Him for what we have been to Him; on Wednesday we pray for the Church of Christ.

What a wonderful word that is—the Church of Christ! What is it? Not the building into which we congregate, but the body of true believers who have been called out from the world—the people taken out of the nations for His name. A great mystery attaches to the Church; indeed, she is a mystery. Her being dates back before creation, for every member of the mystical body was known and chosen before the foundation of the world. Just as Eve was in Adam, so was the Church in Christ; and as God took the rib out of Adam's side and builded a woman to be his helpmeet, so that he said, "This is now bone of my bone and flesh of my flesh," so is the Church to Christ, for we are members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones. As Eve was the helpmeet for Adam, his companion, his Isha, so is the Church the bride of Christ, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. Out of the sleeping Adam, Eve was taken; out of the second Adam, sleeping the sleep of death, was his Eve taken; for He loved the Church and gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word, that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing.

The Church and the Bible are the two divine things upon the earth now. For the sake of the Church, and working by the truth treasured in the written Word, the seven Spirits of God, which are like lamps of fire before the throne, run to and fro through the whole earth.

We are not now thinking of the Church as under dispensational distinctions, but in its largest sense as inclusive of all the redeemed—that body whose infancy and childhood were in the patriarchal age from Adam to Moses; whose period of bondage under the schoolmaster was from Moses to Christ; and whose manhood is from Christ's first coming to the end: according to Gal. iv.

> How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
> Is laid for your faith in His excellent Word.

All sound doctrine is built on this firm and sure foundation; there can be no full assurance of hope which is not as an anchor taking hold within the veil upon the eternal purpose and promise and covenant of God to His people, foreknown and predestinated and chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. Unless we hold fast the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end, we cannot claim to use the words, "Whose house are we." What a high responsibility to hold fast the form of sound words, what a warning not to be blown about by every wind of doctrine, is implied in such a title as "the house of God, the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth?" What assured security in and deliverance out of all manner of tribulation is contained in the title given to the persecuted Church of the Thessalonians—"the Church which is in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ!"

Let but the Church of God continue as she begins the year, praising God, confessing her own sins, pleading for every member of the Body of Christ, for Families and Schools, for the Nations, and for Missions, Home and Foreign, and for the Peace of Jerusalem—praying in the Holy Ghost—and this may be the best year the Church of Jesus Christ has ever known, for the path of the just ones is as the shining light, shining more and more unto the perfect day.

New Year Thoughts.

WITH the opening of another year, many thoughts crowd the mind. "Ye have not passed this way heretofore." As the gift of God, the year will assuredly be laden with blessings; whether we receive them is another thing. All God's appointments are designed for our well-being and growth in grace; though they may become ordinances of judgment to those who despise the goodness of God (Rom. ii. 4; xi. 22). On what have we set our hearts as the New Year opens to us? The word of Christ comes to us with as much power as it ever had—"If ye shall ask anything in My Name, that will I do . . . If ye shall ask anything of the Father, He will give it you in My Name" (John xiv. 14; xvi. 23, R.V. marg.).

Do we desire a saving knowledge of God? Let us rejoice in the fact that, at the beginning of another year of grace, the Lord says, "I am the Way, and the Truth, and the Life . . . he that hath seen Me hath seen the Father" (John xiv. 6, 9). Do we long after advancement in Christian experience and service? Then the old-time counsel may be our present heritage: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom" (Col. iii. 16). Whatever the year may bring in its unfolding, we praise God that at its beginning it is our privilege to share the vision of the martyr Stephen—to see the heavens opened and Christ standing on the right hand of God. What promise of blessing and assurance of good there is in this fact! There is still an Advocate with the Father, so that the evangelist may go forth with his urgent message:—

Hasten, sinner, to return!
Stay not for the morrow's sun,
Lest thy lamp should fail to burn
Ere salvation's work is done.

With the glorified Saviour pleading for sinners, the Christian worker may still "spend and be spent" in glad and blessed service:—

Toil on, and in thy toil rejoice;
For toil comes rest—for exile home;
Soon shalt thou hear the Bridegroom's voice,
The midnight cry, "Behold I come!"

The Gospel has an imperial note which finds little or no satisfaction in contact with daily concerns as such. The spiritual life maintains a correspondence with eternal things; the man who is "renewed in the spirit of his mind," prefers heavenly issues to those which are of earth and time, and "perish in the using." Human movements, whether progressive or retrograde, lack that element of finality which belongs to the Kingdom of God. In mundane affairs we labour for that which is not bread, and spend our strength for that which satisfieth not. It is altogether different when our time and energy are laid out as a sacrifice in work for God—as notable labourers in the cause of philanthropy and religion have plainly admitted at the close of long periods of public ministry. "Wherefore, receiving a kingdom which cannot be shaken, let us have grace whereby we may offer service well-pleasing to God with reverence and awe" (Heb. xii. 28).

If the past has its lessons, so the future will have its problems. May God give His people grace to face these with a large faith. Not with faith in themselves, or in one another, or in human righteousness, but with faith in God, in virtue of which, whatever may come in the course of life's experience, we may not only endure but persevere "as seeing Him who is invisible." The service of God is not to be expressed in passive terms, but in such as are active and progressive. We are called upon to "go," to "pass over," to "press on." Our Captain knows the way; and we do but follow where He has gone:

Christ leads us through no darker rooms
Than He went through before.

The gracious assurance, "I am with you!" is admittedly in the present tense, but its fulfilment reaches into a future that is worthy of Him who is the First and the Last: "Lo, I am with you all the days, even unto the end of the world." In days of sorrow's fasting as well as of the feastings of joy, He will be with us. "Goodness and mercy" will attend us; some of the good things will take the form of trials, bringing grief and pain; they will be none the less mercies on that account:

God sendeth sun, He sendeth shower;
Alike they're needful for the flower;
And joys and tears alike are sent
To give the soul fit nourishment.
As comes to me, or cloud or sun,
Father, Thy will, not mine, be done.

"All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose."

Whatever the New Year may bring to us, of pleasure or pain, of comfort or anxiety, let none of us forget our privilege as children of God: "Return unto thy rest, O my soul" (Psa. cxvi. 7)! The Lord, who "sitteth King for ever," is ready to bless His people according to their preparedness. "The Lord will give strength unto His people; the Lord will bless His people with peace" (Psa. xxix. 10, 11). Only let us have faith. Like Noah of old "being warned of things not seen as yet," let us set about our daily duties, witnessing for God and preaching righteousness. Care is needed here, however. Political duties, church responsibilities, and business calls have a tendency so to assert themselves that the higher interests of the soul are placed in jeopardy. Let us "return unto our rest"—seek refuge in Him who is our strong tower of safety. We need not be indifferent to the immediate obligations of daily life in the world; we MUST NOT neglect the supreme rights of the soul—the privileges that belong to our calling and standing as children of God.

God calls us to holiness in days when men cease not to dispute about the term and the thing; to obedience in a time when lawlessness abounds under disguises that command a large measure of public esteem; to faithfulness in service in the midst of wickedness which loses none of its hatefulness because sometimes refined and respectable in its exterior. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Practical Papers.

On "PROMISE AND PERFORMANCE."

A NEW YEAR EXHORTATION.

WHAT an indefinable charm there is about a pyrotechnic display, whether it be on a large scale at the Crystal Palace, or a feeble attempt in our own backyard! With minutest care the combustible ingredients have been selected, arranged, and packed in their stout paper cylinders, capable of wondrous things, and waiting only to be set at liberty by the simple application of taper or of torch. Open-eyed and open-mouthed the children stand—and we are all children for the moment—to greet with prolonged "oh-h's" of admiration the wondrous fire—shooting, leaping, curling, in many a strange contortion; issuing in showers of brilliant stars, or beauteous golden rain; or rushing wildly over fantastic frameworks of clever and fanciful design.

Is it not thus in the world of Life? (1) We are surrounded by men and women, youths and maidens, boys and girls, inert and unresponsive to the highest aims of earth or heaven, but in whom are numberless dormant only until the spark of inspiration or of love shall set them free. And we, who are but simple folk—parents in the home, companions in the business, teachers in the school, may be the means of their emancipation to lofty flights of usefulness and grace. What a sphere of effective service, what mighty issues for time and for eternity, are open to us, if, during this New Year, we are willing instruments in the Great Designer's hand, to impart His light to others.

Down in the human heart,
Crushed by the tempter,
Feelings lie buried that grace can restore.
Touched by a loving heart,
Wakened by kindness,
Chords that were broken will vibrate once more.

(2) We are naturally attracted by display, and whatever will win the admiration of men. There is fascination in brilliant show. Too readily we prefer passion to permanence, and spectacle to spirituality. In the New Year resolutions that we make, in our daily work or Christian service, we are apt to be carried away by that which does not last; and overestimate the flights of fancy, as against the unromantic prose of fact. But alas, the plaudits of men die down on the evening air; the life that should have burst forth in golden stars fizzles out in disappointing gloom; and the rising sun reveals a sorry litter of charred remains and smouldered sticks. The Chinaman, heathen though he be, is such an adept in the pyrotechnic art, that he views with disdain the climax of Brock's endeavours; how, then, must the Father of Lights regard the substitution of fleeting promises for steadily burning zeal! How much pious resolve is spoiled by

BRILLIANT INSTABILITY!

"I go, sir!" was the too ready rejoinder of the young man in our Lord's parable, whose father bade him, "Go, work to-day in my vineyard." Up like a rocket, down like a stick—"he went not!" Thirty-two thousand men arose to follow Gideon; twenty-two thousand went home as their firework impulses abated (or "like cabbages—with big heads and little hearts," as Rev. John McNeill so quaintly puts it). Nine thousand seven hundred more collapsed under the weight of further test, and left three hundred to do the work. "1 in 200," we sometimes read on a board by the railway side, indicating the upward or downward level of the line. About the same estimate may be made of promises fulfilled by too many of us, after our New Year resolutions.

This is an age of "go." In business, in journalism, in church and mission life, there is a spirit abroad of bustle, of competition, and of push. "Here am I!" said Isaiah, in response to the Divine call (vi. 8)—"Whom shall I send? Who will go for us?" And had that been all, his example might not have been one for us to follow. But he went further. "Send me!" If we are sent, we may go. But preceding this, there must have been the process of humiliation and of cleansing:—

Woe is me, for I am undone! I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts. Then flew one of the seraphim unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar; and he laid it upon my mouth, and said: Lo, this hath touched thy lips, and thine iniquity is taken away and thy sin purged.

When this experience has been ours, when our zeal derives its heat from God's coals and not Satan's cinders, then we may respond with joyful hearts, "Here am I; send me!" assured of power to remain steadfast in all service that we undertake.

(3) Are you, perhaps, entering the New Year, troubled and perplexed with which you cannot understand? Is life a puzzle without a key? If you visit the Crystal Palace, and stand amid the crowd to witness a firework display, there rise before you the "set pieces" which embody the climax of the designer's skill. To you they may appear to be skeleton frameworks of wood, and nothing more. But wait! The torch is applied to their tiny fuse, the fire leaps from point to point, and out of the darkness there gleam faces and figures of heroes and public men, which draw forth an outburst of admiration and applause. God has a design in your life, though you apprehend it not. Christ came as a light into the world to reveal the Father's purpose. Seek His illumination, that so your life may glow resplendent with the Divine flame. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him."

(4) To other readers of these lines God may send a New Year warning through His servant (Is. l. 30)—"Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks; walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled . . . ye shall lie down in sorrow." For years, few or many, you have been kindling and compassing yourself about with sparks of good or evil habits that will make or mar your whole career. What are your sparks; what your fire? Do they amount only to a round of careless pleasure, or a self-indulgent life of sin? If so, God help you to stamp them out while yet they are small, lest, fanned into a flame, they make your present life a foretaste of a future hell! Playing with fire is a dangerous pastime, with its certain sequel: "Ye shall lie down in sorrow"—the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

Think! What can earth offer in exchange for heaven? "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Pleasure and sin may charm for awhile with their tawdry show; but a Godless life is a living death; penury for plenty is its only guerdon—a pitiful recompense indeed! God has planted in your soul elements that may be kindled by the spark of Divine grace to respond to His undying love. Pray Him to apply it to you, my reader, that so you may not "lie down in sorrow," but may share the endless glories of the land of light. G.

"All the Days."

A NEW YEAR WATCHWORD.

"A BRIGHT and Happy New Year!" is a well-nigh universal wish and hope for our dear friends at this season; yet we know that its journey will be commenced by many sad-hearted travellers, and to them its 365 miles may seem in vista prospects somewhat dreary, and, like the ancient Israelite pilgrims, their souls may be much discouraged because of the way. To all such I would offer a word which came to me—as Scripture words have such a blessed habit of doing—with wonderful freshness and comfort but yesterday. "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life."

We all know the particular cluster of gems from which it flashed out its message—that place, I suppose, in every regularly-used Bible which always opens to us of its own accord, and has been marked, and gazed at, and prayed over, and quoted, and preached from until, if the words had been but human, they must have become flat, stale, and unprofitable long ago. But there is always some fresh teaching, fresh inspiration in that radiant Twenty-third Psalm, and I should think one of David's greatest joys in Heaven will be to know what an inexhaustible source of comfort he has stored there to cheer, through the lapse of three thousand years, the hearts of struggling wayfarers.

I had often thought of occasional days of special need, when an importunate cry to an ever-listening Father in Heaven might arrest His attention, and bring down special help; but in the light of this text a new scene stretched before me — the daily march, the daily life, sometimes eventless, sometimes so eventful, but with carefully provided supplies always following, like the commissariat waggons of a well-organised army, in the rear, ready to be ordered to the front at once when needed.

A DAILY SUPPLY.

We, with narrow thoughts that may befit our narrow hearts, anticipate a spasmodic and doubtful supply, dependent largely on our merits and opportunity. Here we are shown certain provision, only dependent on our being Heavenward travellers, and on the cry of faith unto the Father's ear in time of trouble, a cry that is one of His appointed means of keeping up definite communication with His children and begetting in them a spirit of praise for deliverance.

All the days—let us classify and look at some of them. There are, as we know, days of very real anxiety as distinct from days of merely undisciplined worry and unbelieving fear; and these days may possibly come very early in the New Year to some of us, days when our sky becomes suddenly black with clouds, and a cherished gourd, which yesterday yielded such grateful shelter, lies withered at our feet. On such days how shall we act? I know how I have acted many times. I speak it to my shame. I have just folded my hands in despair and sat down beside my blighted idols, and questioned, "Has His mercy clean gone for ever?" And if I have not been as outspoken as Jonah, I fear that in my heart there has been the murmur, "I do well to be angry!"

That is not the way to bring up the supplies. They are there, prepared and ready; but if God gives the oil, we must bring the vessels of submissive, trustful hearts. Sit before Him, it may be with a grief that has no voice; but if we show before Him our trouble, then, in ways which all Christian readers can illustrate from their own experience, the goodness and mercy will come to us. Remember there is a surely —a "promise to pay"—in the verse, and God writes no cheque to dishonour it. And remember, too, that the supplies generally come from behind. Very often they are a storage of blessing from processes in our life-history which, as they went on, caused us much cavilling and dismay.

Poor Jacob little thought that those grand waggons, laden with the rarest of Egyptian dainties, which came to revive his spirit in his old age, were fashioned out of the crosses which he had so positively declared to be "against him"; and have we not often proved that the discipline that cut deepest, and was at the time so mysterious, was but the sharp sword severing a Gordian knot of perplexity that the united wisdom of our most sagacious friends had failed to unloose?

IN ALL CIRCUMSTANCES.

All the days—days of wealth and prosperity, when the peril is great of leanness in the soul, unless the attendant "goodness and mercy" take the form of an irresistible prompting to large-heartedness to men, and devout and practical gratitude to God. Days of bereavement, when, though the Saviour may test us, as He did the Bethany sisters by apparent delay, He will as surely come with the deliverance best suited to our need. Days of perplexity about our work in the home and in the church; of domestic worries and cherished purposes cut off. These are days when an entrance into our "closet," and a cry—it may be half inarticulate—to Him who seeth through that "shut-to" door will surely bring an open reward.

We look back to the days of childhood, and remember how our mother used so tenderly to lead us by the hand into her inner chamber, and gently point out our faults, and soothe our griefs, and teach us to pray. So our Father draws us into the sacred hush of His presence in the dark and cloudy days, and we find that as one whom his mother comforteth so doth He.

And if all the days of our life, in their variety and need, are thus provided for, and compassed about with songs of deliverance, shall we not put into them more strong, real trust in our God and more loyal dedication of their best to him? Glad, indeed, shall I be if this very inadequate tribute to His never-failing faithfulness constrain some reader to say:—

Lord, in the strength of grace,
With a glad heart and free,
Myself, my residue of days,
I consecrate to Thee.

New Year Poems.

Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee (Isa. xxvi. 3).

SWEET is it, Lord, to have the restful mind,
On perfect love and perfect power reclined;
Know perfect peace, stayed fast alone on Thee,
To-day, to-morrow—through eternity.

HITHERTO—HENCEFORTH.

A NEW YEAR'S "STONE OF HELP."

Hitherto—the Lord hath helped us,
Strengthened, comforted, and blessed,
Guided by His chosen pathway
To the promised land of rest.
Over hills, and through the valleys,
Lonely wilderness and plain,
He hath led us in the sunshine
And the rain.

He who hath redeemed from evil,
Guarded in the pilgrim way,
Fed us with the "food convenient,"
All our lifelong to this day,
Will be with us through the passing
Years, if many or if few;
Goodness, mercy, aye have followed
Hitherto.

Jesus is the same for ever,
"Hitherto," "henceforth" upholds,
What He hath been bears a promise
That each coming day unfolds;
With His hand upraised in blessing,
Still He blesses as of yore,
On we press for He is with us,
Evermore.

As we raise our Ebenezer
On the threshold of the year,
Lord, we pray Thou wilt deliver
Us from every faithless fear.
So the pillar of our witness
Shall to others stand as true,
When recording, "God hath helped us

By Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS.

DURING the recent South African War—certainly one of the most arduous conflicts of modern times—the Young Men's Christian Associations have heartily co-operated through their auxiliary, the Soldiers' Christian Association, for the purpose of affording the help of Christian succour and consolation to the soldiers, and also contributing towards their social comfort, rest, and recreation. These efforts have been crowned with blessing, and have created a new interest, which is finding expression in increased activity, not only on behalf of the soldiers on their return, but in the organisation of special work amongst the volunteer encampments on Dartmoor, Salisbury Plain, and elsewhere.

The World's Conference, held in August at Christiania, was one of the largest and most representative yet held. The French Associations celebrated their jubilee in October and November, and recalled the times when, in 1852, a mere handful represented the first Association formed on French soil. I had the honour of being directly concerned in that interesting occasion, and when I recall the fact that in that year, 1852, there were in existence but thirty-five Associations, compared with 7,507, which it is now our privilege to record, with an approximate membership of 620,700, I am overwhelmed with a sense of God's goodness, and am unable, in words, to express my profound gratitude to Him. I can only exclaim, "What hath God wrought?"

But I believe God is going to do even greater things through the agency of the Associations. The returns given in the Year Book for the past year show healthy growth both in the number of Associations and in the membership.

We have abundant cause for encouragement. Let us, therefore, start upon the New Year, cheered by the music of Divine hope, with fresh enthusiasm, renewed consecration, and re-quickened zeal; let us each devote ourselves to the work which God has entrusted to us. Conscious of our own insufficiency, and in the realization of that Divine sufficiency which is ever available, we would press onward, in the spirit, and under the inspiration of the Motto Text selected by the National Council, "I will go in the strength of the Lord God" (Psa. lxxi. 16).

A good resolution is in itself an offering. It is the response to a noble impulse. The power to say, "I will," is a God-given power. It involves human responsibility, which is the distinguishing glory of man. We are to-day, in the moral and spiritual realm, very much where we willed to be. Will-power is the determinating force in life. Our "I wills" are the bricks with which our characters are built.

BROKEN RESOLUTIONS.

But, alas! for our broken resolutions. Life's pathway is strewn with them. Over these we have good reason to mourn, but they should not unduly discourage us. Discouragement is the devil's most effective weapon. He reminds us of our broken vows. His object is that he may lead us to give up in despair, and to follow his behests.

God calls upon us to profit by past failures. He would have us learn from them wherein our weakness lies. And is it not in ourselves? We have failed in the past because we have relied upon our own strength. Probably we have said, "I will go," and stopped there. Herein is the explanation of non-achievement.

Our motto is worthy of adoption, not only by every member, but also by each Association. We are not called to be soldiers in the literal sense; nevertheless, we are all called to be soldiers of the Cross.

These are fighting times, and no one must shrink from the conflict. Never in the history of the world was the battle against evil fiercer than it is to-day, nor was the call for good soldiers of Jesus Christ ever louder or more distinct. Let us then to a man respond to the bugle-call of duty.

"I will go"—to wage warfare against materialism; against gambling: against the drink curse; against vice in all its forms; against infidelity; against indifferentism; against all the opposing forces of evil. The resolve must be personal. In each Association every member should maintain his individuality. Our hopes lie not in the Y.M.C.A. as an organization, but in the men who fight in our ranks. Each member has a work to do which is distinctively his own.

The Y.M.C.A. is essentially a "Forward Movement." Every year has been marked by growth. But "Go" must still be our watch-word. We have as yet but touched the fringe of our possibilities. The world is our territory. "Go ye," says our Master, "into all the world." And our response should surely be, "We will go in the strength of the Lord God." If this be our attitude as Associations, opportunities will not be wanting.

"A Happy New Year."

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR! Fling out the wish far and wide. Let it float on land and sea, at home and abroad. To all, A Happy New Year."

And yet a Happy New Year takes more than any man's wishing—it must be made, and home-made; each one must do for himself in this matter what none other can do for him.

A Happy New Year must find its beginning in settling old accounts. Do not carry old quarrels and old feuds into the new year. No one can begin the year well if in his heart he harbour ought of bitterness or ill-will. Christmas Day must ever come before New Year's day—first the goodwill towards men and then the Happy New Year.

There is one thing alone which can make life worth living, one thing which if lost all is lost; one thing which is the music, the strength, the sunshine of the soul—it is Love. Life comes to us in all its fulness of health and wealth only through the golden door of love. The door which shuts out any, shuts out much or all.

How contemptible the causes of many quarrels, which often last for years and fill the life with bitterness! Drummond tells how that he landed at one of the Pacific Islands—there is an irony in the name Pacific! The natives were a fierce set of cannibals. At one end of the island lived a missionary and his wife, at the other end another missionary and his wife. No tidings from the great outside world reached them except about once in six months. Now, one would have thought that the two families would have seen each other constantly for strength and solace; but they never spoke, they never met. The two had quarrelled fiercely, furiously, and now one never recognised the other. What had happened? In translating the New Testament together into the language of the natives they had differed as to the word by which the Name of God was to be rendered. And His Name is Love! No doubt each thought the other was very mistaken, very stubborn, perhaps very wicked, and counted himself right; but what rightness or wrongness can atone for such misery? Your quarrel, no doubt, is about a much more serious thing than this; we are all apt to think so, at any rate. Well, whatever the cause, stretch out the hand to-day; open the heart; write the letter; take the step, and make it a good long stride; love can find the seven-leagued boots that go round the world in an instant. Love has wings and can fly.

He who seeks a Happy New Year must find it in seeking the happiness of others. Selfishness is death, and love alone is life. "We know that we have passed from death into life because we love."

There is a well near to Bethlehem called the Well of the Wise Men, of which the legend is as follows:—"The wise men had come on their way with camels and laden asses, and were eager to find Him of whom the heavens were telling, the Holy Child who was born King of the Jews. But watching only the heavens they forgot the weary beasts, hungry, thirsty, and tired; then the star was gone. In vain they stood and gazed, and in their trouble turned to one another. The heavenly guide was lost. Then they thought of the thirsty camel and the laden ass, and hastened to undo the burdens that the beasts might rest, and they hurried to the well for water. And, lo! as they bent down they saw reflected in its stillness the glimmering star."

They seek in vain for the sign of God who forget the need of man or beast. To look down at the wants of others is to find the brightness that they lose who only look up.

To our Readers.

FOR the benefit of readers willing to join in promoting the circulation of The Christian, who may already possess "The Topical Bible" as offered recently, we have pleasure in making a further announcement.

In view of the arrival of Rev. Dr. R. A. Torrey in this country within the next few days, and of the special missions which he hopes to conduct at important centres, the time seems opportune for calling special attention to one of his most useful works—What the Bible Teaches—the scope of which is well summed up in the words of the sub-title, "A Thorough and Comprehensive Study of what the Bible has to say concerning the Great Doctrines of which it treats."

Dr. Torrey is well known as the superintendent of the Bible Institute, Chicago; and there are many in this country who have desired to enjoy the benefit of his guidance in the study of Bible truth. Here Dr. Torrey has placed within the reach of private students the fruit of years of meditation and labour. The contents of the volume have been practically tested again and again in the class-room; and the unsectarian character of the teaching will be understood when it is stated that the teacher often had before him representatives of all the principal denominations. So that what is provided is a summary of Scriptural teaching on the fundamental doctrines concerning which Evangelical Christians are agreed.

In six main divisions an inquiry is instituted into the real purport of Biblical statement about (1) God, (2) Jesus Christ, (3) the Holy Spirit, (4) Man, (5) Angels, and (6) Satan. Each of these is analyzed in a series of chapters, the method followed being to group under suitable sub-headings the passages in which the particular points are set forth, each group of texts being followed by a proposition summing up their contents, and that again by such comments as experience has shown to be necessary or desirable. It is not to be supposed that every topic in the Bible is dealt with, or that what the Bible has to say about those treated is exhausted; but in these 539 large octavo pages believers will find the basis for a systematic study of the Christian faith, which will not only nourish their own spiritual life, but make their witness to the world more effective by enabling them to state in clear and cogent terms a reason for the hope that is in them.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, January 4. 1 Chron. vi.

IN the first paragraph (1-15), the line of the priests is recorded, and amongst them some of the most famous sons of Israel. Zadok, David's friend; Johanan, the good Jehoiada; Seraiah, who filled the priestly office at the destruction of Jerusalem, and was executed by Nebuchadnezzar's orders at Riblah (2 Kings xxv. 18, 21). In the second paragraph (16-48), we have the genealogy of Levitical families, who were not priests. This list carries us to the reign of David, who made a new and different classification of the Levites by courses.

It was in David that the rise of the Hebrew College for Sacred Song originated. Heman, "and his brother Asaph, who stood on his right hand" (39), and many others, "ministered with song." They have had many successors all down the ages, and in their ranks we may include Wickliffe and his Lollards, Luther, Gerhardt, Wesley, Hemans, Havergal, Sankey, Bliss, and many others. Let us join this holy band, and minister with song.

I cannot give youth's burning tear
And kiss, its service glad and free;
But I can bless Thee, O Thou dear
Redeemer, who hast died for me.

The cities of the priests were distributed far and wide through the country, according to Jacob's prophecy (Gen. xlix. 7), and the result was that they served as salt and light throughout the land, instructing the people in the knowledge of the Law, and urging them to walk in the precepts and commandments, which had so important a bearing on their private happiness and national prosperity.

It is most instructive to compare the Book of Malachi, and learn how high was the Divine ideal (ch. ii.), and how sadly the servants of God failed in their high office (ch. i. and ii.). Let us specially ponder Mal. ii. 6, 7, and ask that it may be realized in us, as it was in McCheyne, who greatly loved these words.

The numbers of the tribe of Issachar were very considerable, which is accounted for by the wide-spread practice of polygamy. "They had many wives and sons" (4).

The other great families of Benjamin, of Naphtali, of Manasseh and Ephraim, of Asher, are slightly touched on. What a numerous clan that would be, which has sprung from God's honoured servant, Charles Simeon, of Cambridge, or from C. H. Spurgeon, or from John and Charles Wesley, or from Whitefield. Why should you not ask God that He would make you to become fruitful and multiply, so that you may build up the waste cities and restore the desolations of many generations?

In vv. 22, 23, we have a glimpse of the state of Hebrew society in Egypt, when the patriarch Ephraim was still alive, though at a very advanced age. Instead of the word because, some authorities would insert when (21), and we learn that the Philistines made a sudden foray on the Ephraimite flocks, and killed the shepherds, including several of the sons of Ephraim. This calamity plunged him in the profoundest grief, and led to visits of condolence and sympathy (comp. Job ii. 11). Beriah was the living memento of this awful sorrow—but those tears have long since been wiped away, as yours and mine will be.

TUESDAY, January 6. 1 Chron. viii.

This is a supplementary list of the sons of Benjamin, in addition to those mentioned in the preceding chapter. We must remember that the Hebrew uses sons of grandsons and descendants, and this will account for the variations between this list and that in the book of Numbers.

It is interesting to notice all this care over the enumeration of Benjamin, because it was the smallest tribe, and was almost exterminated, as we learn in the closing chapters of Judges. It was as though God's pity were specially extended towards this tribe that it should not perish like a lost star out of the sacred zone of Israel. The weakest must be most carefully nourished and cherished. The uncomely must have the more abundant honour.

The fact of Shaharaim having children born to him in Moab (v. 8) suggests that he had been driven to take refuge in that foreign land, under the stress of the same calamities as had forced Elimelech to emigrate thither (Ruth i. 1). But he appears to have been destitute of natural affection, for he divorced his two wives, and married a third. What heart-breaking sorrow, what tears, what high-handed wrong is hidden under all these names! We seem to be treading great battle-fields, unable to realize all the tragedies that have taken place at every step. We can only believe that to God each of these souls is distinguishable and existent somewhere; each lived his own life, for good or evil, while on earth, and, equally with ourselves, will respond to his name at the judgment of the last day.

WEDNESDAY, January 7. 1 Chron. ix.

The Hebrew records were very carefully kept from the beginning of the national existence. In this chapter the names are given of those who returned from the Babylonian captivity. They are almost the same as those enumerated by Nehemiah. Verse 2 has reference to one of the earlier bodies of returned exiles. Evidently the same division of the people into four classes was continued after, as prevailed before, the Captivity, namely, the priests, Levites, Israel, and Nethinim—the latter name standing for the natives of Canaan, now incorporated with the Hebrew nation.

The restored Jerusalem was peopled principally by the remnants of four tribes (3): and note the sub-division of the Levites into porters (17), those that had charge of the vessels of service (28), those that prepared the confection of spices (30), those that prepared the shew-bread (32), and the singers, "who were free from other service, for they were employed in their work day and night" (33, and Psa. cxxxiv.).

This division of the Levites into various offices, reminds us of 1 Cor. xii. That Christian body is best organized in which each set of workers confines itself to its specific duties, not over-running the tasks of others, but each striving to excel in the special duty which has been allotted. Let us work, not for fee or reward, not for the honour and admiration that the doing of it may secure, but for the Lord's sake. Our work is for the King. Let us wait in the King's gate, with our faces towards the east. He will come along it presently, and happy will it be if He finds us watching. Blessed is that servant whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching.

THURSDAY, January 8. 1 Chron. x.

This chapter is almost an exact transcription of 1 Sam. xxxi., and is probably introduced here to prepare the way for the account of David's accession to the throne.

Few men had a fairer start than Saul, the first King of Israel, and few have more sadly and disastrously dashed their prospects by their own sin. The sin of jealousy, to which he yielded till his soul was on fire with its blue flame, led to his undoing; but any other sin similarly yielded to would do as much. What an illustration Saul is of the words, "To be carnally minded is death," for certainly while he lived he was dead; whereas David is a living illustration of the words, "To be spiritually minded is life and peace." A man may continue to exist, and yet be dead!

He died by his own hand. Panic-stricken, he took his life. But the death of suicide was the carrying out of a Divine sentence, first because he kept not the word of the Lord in the matter of Amalek, and secondly because he disobeyed the distinct law of the kingdom and consulted the witch of Endor (Lev. xix. 31). It is remarkable to read that God slew him (14); because it seems so clear that he perished of his own hand (4). Here we stand on the borderland of mysteries that baffle us, because we do not see the connecting links in the Divine mind. Faraday told a number of children that he had analysed a tear, and found it to consist of pure water and a little salt. One of the boys, as they were going out, was heard to say to another, "I won't be sorry for my mother now, when she cries." Ah, how little he knew of a woman's broken heart. We may analyse and discuss phenomena, but who can fathom the mysterious depths that lie beneath?

FRIDAY, January 9. 1 Chron. xi.

There were three grounds for David's election as King: (1), that he was close akin to the people; (2), that he was capable of leading them; and (3), that the word of God had designated him to that office. And for these reasons Jesus is worthy to be the crowned King of our lives. Enthrone Him, and then go with Him to thy Jebus; and He will drive out thine enemies, and transform it into Jerusalem, the City of Peace.

The mighty men named here are those who held strongly with David to make him king (v. 10, R.V. marg). They had a strong opinion in the matter, which they did not hesitate to express. The three mighties (12) were the two named here and Shammah (2 Sam. xxiii. 11); but their exploits were infused with a religious spirit, and wrought in the power of God. It is expressly said, that "the Lord saved with a great salvation." The victory is not ascribed to the might of the mighty men, but to Him who wrought in and with them.

We never read that touching incident of the water of the well of Bethlehem without admiring the chivalrous devotion of David's heroes to his person; and remembering how the women came to embalm the Lord. David's refusal to drink this water might well be repeated by the resolve of professing Christian's who may read these words, that they will never again touch alcoholic drink, which is tinctured so deeply with the blood of its victims. We all long to drink the sweet waters of childhood's purity and innocence; and we may through Him, who hazarded His own life to bring it to us from the river which flows from the throne of God and the Lamb.

It seems difficult to understand how Benaiah did not attain to the first three (25). What could he have done more! God grant us grace to be among those that attain to the inner circle yonder, because we have been nearest the Master here!

SATURDAY, January 10. 1 Chron. xii.

There are three lists in this chapter of those who came to David whilst in Ziklag (1 Sam. xxvii. 6). Afterwards they became his stalwart helpers, and the foundation of his all-victorious army.

The descriptions of these notable warriors is very significant. The least could discomfit a hundred, and the greatest was worth a thousand ordinary men; they could breast the Jordan at its flood; they were equally good for defence or attack, handling shield and spear; courage was stamped upon their faces, and agility on their limbs. David at first suspected the Benjamites, but was rapidly reassured by the noble reply of Amasai. Oh! that every heart might take up these words, and utter them to the Saviour: "Thine are we, Jesus, and on Thy side, Thou Son of God: peace, peace be unto Thee, and be peace to thine helpers; for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us unto God by Thy blood!"

From the third list (28, &c.) we learn that the cause of David was least popular in the tribe of Benjamin (29), and that the intelligent and learned classes were at one with the military in tendering their allegiance (32). Some 300,000 armed warriors seem to have gathered at Hebron on this great occasion, which was celebrated with royal profusion (40). But "what will it be when our King comes," and is crowned King of men! Shall we be among those who were true to Him in the days of His rejection and humiliation? It is only they who have suffered with Him in the Cave of Rejection, and in Ziklag, who shall be acknowledged by Him at Hebron; of others He will be ashamed.

F. B. M.

From Rev. F. B. Meyer.

THE four days at Montego Bay have been in my judgment the best in our tour. It is, of course, for ever memorable from its association with Burchell, whose great chapel is in a rather dilapidated condition, and Knibb, who was imprisoned in its courthouse. The town is beautifully situated on the shores of a bay washed by the tideless Caribbean Sea. It is one of the hottest places in Jamaica, rich in tropical vegetation, enervating, lazy-making, and lovely.

Our four evening meetings were held in the parish church—crowded to suffocation; scores and hundreds in the aisles and doorways; the audiences composed of representatives of all the churches in the town—the Free Church ministers were strongly in evidence; and if our mission has had no other result, it certainly has been the means of drawing together, in several centres, and in a quite remarkable manner, the ministers and members of different branches of the one Church. On each of those occasions, some 1,300 persons must have been present.

Other meetings were held in the Scotch Kirk, or the Baptist Chapel—about four or five a day. But again the meetings for men only have been the most remarkable of all our gatherings. Three times the courthouse has been crowded to its utmost capacity, whilst I have pleaded for righteousness, self-control, and purity of life, The repeated cheers at certain points showed that the ideal is not absolutely lost, but, alas! alas! the standard of morality is fearfully low. Think, for instance, that a minister told me yesterday that of sixty children in his school, only eight were legitimate. Of course, where the influence of the churches is strongly felt, matters are rather better; but they never can be permanently so until mothers are compelled to register the names of the fathers of their children, even though they should thus incriminate many men among the better and ruling classes. Those who have the best interests of the island at heart have long been pressing for this; but it is not difficult to understand why the proposal has met with such stedfast and strenuous opposition. The number of ministers attending our gatherings has been large, and gathered from a wide area; and Mr. Macartney and I are trusting that the blessing may be as widely diffused.

Yesterday was a wonderful day, consisting of a drive of fifty miles, partly along the lovely coast-road, and then through the more mountainous districts, to Brown's Town, which is thirty miles distant from the nearest railway. Such an exquisitely lovely spot! Here are coffee-plants, sugar-canes, yams, plantains, cocoa-nuts, oranges, palm-trees, tropical flowers, and the wildest luxuriance of all kinds of foliage—with houses peeping out from their rich embowering foliage! I am the guest of Rev. G. E. Henderson, the devoted Baptist minister here, and Mr. Macartney, of the rector—and the most brotherly friendship obtains between these two and Dr. Murray, the Wesleyan minister.

On our way, yesterday, we stopped at Falmouth; spoke in Knibb's Chapel; stood by his grave with bare heads; saw the place where he buried, in a coffin, the whip of the slave-driver and the shackles of the slave, on the day of emancipation, which his sufferings and eloquence had done so much to bring about; sat in his chair at his study-table, and steeped ourselves in the associations that gather around that sacred spot. It was interesting to meet there the present minister, Rev. Mr. Kingdon, for forty years in this island, and two noble women, the Misses Knibb, the nieces, the grandson, a minister, and great grand-daughter of the man of God, whose life and labours invest the spot with a fragrant and undying interest.

We stopped for refreshment with Mr. and Mrs. Lee, whose manse and church are perched high as an eagle's eyrie. They were at Keswick in 1901. Here we met Miss Townsend, who is the head of a native Girls' Training College, which is doing excellent work in qualifying girls as teachers, missionaries, and pastors' wives.

And now I hear that Dr. Parker has followed Hugh Price Hughes into the presence of God; and I cannot resist the impulse of passing on the following exquisite letter, which I received on the day of leaving England, It is so characteristic and so tender:—

"My Dear Friend,—I felt miserably disappointed that I could not, except at a ruinous cost of nervous energy, see you when you most kindly called this morning. It was, indeed, a self-deprivation, and can never be otherwise than a very poignant regret. Never mind, I thank you with all my heart for your most brotherly thought, and I reciprocate your affection with the greatest cordiality. My blessing will go with you, my kindest thoughts will surround you, and my heartiest benediction will make the air balmy wherever you may be. I envy your marvellous energy, and in the name of the living God I wish you the most abundant blessing and joy.—Ever affectionately yours,

"JOSEPH PARKER."

It seems hard to imagine London without these two great leaders—strenuous in action and devout in soul. God send us more of such! And at almost the same moment I hear that the Education Bill has gone to the House of Lords. I cannot understand from these brief fragmentary reports what the precise situation is, but I fear that the controversy will be as acute as ever. It is enough to break one's heart to see this strife among Christian Churches; but England must be saved from Sacerdotalism. F. B. MEYER.

*The Gospel in Gaol.

IT is said that King Henry VIII., wandering one night in the streets of London in disguise, was met by some of the watch, and, not giving a good account of himself, was carried off to the Poultry Compter, where he was shut up for the night without fire or candle. On his liberation he made a grant of thirty chaldrons of coals and a quantity of bread for the solace of the night prisoners. "A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind."

I could almost have wished that a gentleman whom I met on board the Nile steamer, when visiting the prisons of Egypt, and who asked leave to accompany me, might have felt a little of the misery and privation which the inmates of a gaol were suffering in that land. My only chance of seeing these poor prisoners was while our boat stopped for the night. It was at Soag, and about 10.30 p.m. Late as it was, the Governor of the gaol took us through the prison, and when I had given to all those who could read copies of the Gospels in Arabic, they entreated the gentleman referred to above to give them some cigarettes to make the ill-smelling dungeons less horrible. He had taken out of his pocket a box full, but he absolutely refused to give them one, and, relighting another for himself, the aristocratic M.P.

From the Bass Rock in Scotland—the prison-house of the Covenanters—to the Mamertine dungeon in Rome; from the Fortress of Imperial Russia, on the Neva, to the lazar-houses of the Orient, I have travelled. I have seen something and heard more of the cruelties in dark Morocco, and the sufferings of those who were most unjustly detained in Egypt; I have visited and re-visited the dirty gaols of Italy, from Milan to Pozzuoli, and entered the darker and more horrible prisons of Spain from end to end. I have known somewhat of the life's history of some of the world's greatest criminals, from the moment of their being "trapped" to the day when, having "grown their feathers," these gaol birds were prepared to take their flight once more into the outer world. I have sympathised with Siberian exiles, and rubbed shoulders with those who are termed Nihilists; I have seen most of the penitentiaries in the Old World and the New; and have compared the discipline and the SYSTEMS OF DIFFERENT CONTINENTS.

Those experiences have been gained while engaged in carrying the good news to those who have never heard of salvation through our Lord Jesus.

My only object at first was to carry the Word of Life to those who had neither seen nor heard it. In Europe alone there pass through the prisons a million criminals annually, costing £10,000,000, and the majority of whom have never heard or read the Gospel.

In prosecuting this work in this untrodden and unwholesome field I have met men by hundreds who were starving and as many who were unjustly detained, and I have felt bound to do as our Master would have done—viz., first to feed the starving, and also to protest against men being unjustly detained or barbarously treated. Thus the work became in measure philanthropic, as well as spiritual, by sheer necessity. Then an opportunity offered, and other doors opened. I have been invited to preach to the prisoners, and have invariably found the hearts of these captives respond to the message of love, if told in tender tones of mercy, in a brotherly way. Being neither a convict nor a State official, what is here related may be believed, as my only object has been the glory of God and the salvation of souls, and the amelioration of the state of our fellow-beings not so favourably placed as ourselves.

I have been asked to make another journey in the Prison World to

and seek to right the wrongs of those who are helpless to help themselves, and am prepared, if God shall direct and supply me with means, to do so; but I shall hope to aim at the higher object also, carrying eternal life through the Gospel, in the form of the inspired Scriptures, as well as preaching the Gospel orally. There are lands within a few days' sail of England where men languish in sorrow and in sadness, and apparently no man cares for their souls. The authorities provide them neither with bread to eat nor water to wash with. Having credentials from many Governments, I have no difficulty in getting admission to any of the prisons, and if others are stirred up to do similar work I shall be grateful to help them in any way in my power. Seeking the prayers of all who read these pages for guidance, I pray God to stir them up to pray: "That it may please Thee to show Thy pity upon all prisoners and captives."

Mrs. Meredith's Mission.

AT this New Year season we can praise God for all His mercies to us in the year that is gone. It is just twelve months since our foundress passed away, and not one good thing promised her has failed us during the interval.

Trials and difficulties have not been wanting, neither has spiritual blessing failed us, and many a poor outcast has sought the Good Shepherd, and many a poor little one has been folded in our school. Will readers of THE CHRISTIAN now enable us to give the poor, the cold, and the hungry in our Mission some seasonable help, with a cheerful fire and a warm garment? Good cheer at this season commends the love of God to the sinner. He makes no distinction, and sends His rain "on the just and on the unjust," on the good and bad alike. He gives freely to all.

From Deacon Abraham.—In a recent letter from the Orphanages, Urumiah, Persia, Deacon Abraham says:—"I shall be sixty-eight in January next, and have known the Lord for sixty years. Our family, orphans, teachers, and servants, comprises forty-eight souls, all of us depending on the Lord. We meet with many difficulties and trials in this Moslem land, and feel a real need for the prayers of Christian friends."

A Statesman Archbishop.

THE LATE DR TEMPLE.

A STRIKING and noble figure has been withdrawn from the front rank of the clergy of the Church of England. Full of years and honours, Frederick Temple, Archbishop of Canterbury, has been called from the scene of his earthly service, and has entered into his reward. Nonconformists as well as Churchmen admired him for his manly qualities, feeling that, although the path of duty was to him one of success and distinction, he did and would have done the right at any cost, because it was the right and in the line of the will of God.

Born in the Ionian Islands, Dr. Temple had entered the eighty-second year of his age. The foundation of the boy's education appears to have been laid at Helston, from whence he passed to a school at Tiverton; and many of the most treasured memories of his youth gathered round days spent at Culmstock, near Cullompton, where his first definite religious impressions were formed under the personal influence of Rev. John Blackmore, of whom he never thought or spoke in later years except with reverence and gratitude. From his wise and brave mother we are told that he had early acquired habits of obedience, industry, and self-reliance; and the administrative ability which has throughout marked his career, has been traced in some measure as an inheritance from his father, Major Octavius Temple, who was for some time Governor of Sierra Leone.

OVERCOMING DIFFICULTIES.

Gaining a scholarship at Balliol College, the young student matriculated at Oxford University in 1838. A constant struggle to make the most of an inadequate family income called for the practice of self-denial and all possible exertion for self-support, and did much to confirm the independent character for which he was already noted among his fellows. Speaking six years ago at the Church Congress, held at Nottingham, he said:—

> I have earned my own living since I was seventeen years of age. Though I had received an excellent education, and though I have exerted my brains to the full stretch of their powers, I have experienced many privations in my time. I have known what it was to be unable to afford a fire, and consequently had many cold days and nights. I have known what it was, every now and then, to live upon rather poor fare, and I have known—what perhaps I felt most—what it was to wear patched clothes and shoes.

HIS EARLY PUBLIC WORK.

But this ardent spirit was not to be deterred from seeking the highest education within his reach; and his own attainments made him an enthusiast in the helping and pushing of others forward. Elected to a fellowship at Balliol in 1843, he became junior dean in 1845; but resigned these three years later to undertake the principalship of Kneller Hall, an institution at Hounslow for the training of masters for poor law schools. After seven busy and useful years spent there, he acted for three years as a government inspector of training colleges.

By those who criticised severely his efforts to use educational advantages for the furtherance of Church interests he has yet been described as the ablest and most clear-headed educationalist of his time in this country.

The large-heartedness and power over his fellows of this born leader alike found full scope during his eleven years as head master of Rugby school (1858—1869). He insisted on thorough work in class-room and study, and showed not only that it must, but how it might be done. He entered with as much zest as the most active boy among them into their cricket and other games. Above all, he never lost sight of the highest spiritual aims. More than one generation of boys returned the affection of the somewhat stern man who loved them with all the power of a strong nature. He declared afterwards that he would gladly have sacrificed every other aim, if by so doing he could help any of his pupils to live in the spirit of the Bible and to love the Lord Jesus Christ; and the witness borne both by his words and his life was effectual in the winning of some of them to the higher allegiance.

The name of Dr. Temple will always recall the criticism and indignation which were aroused by the publication, in 1860, of "Essays and Reviews," the first paper in which was his "The Education of the World." When in 1869 he was appointed to the see of Exeter, it was found that there was deep anxiety in many minds as to the broad teaching to which he appeared to have committed himself, and the feeling of distrust in many quarters has never been altogether allayed. Since, to use the words of Dr. Armitage Robinson, a single word of self-exculpation was all that was asked of him, it seems a pity that the word was not spoken. Bishop Tait and others urged on Jowett and Temple the duty of stating, for their own sakes and on account of those who were under their influence, the positive Christianity they held. In addition to friends who are still alive, Archbishop Benson freely championed Temple's orthodoxy, declaring that he was incapable of holding any other views. Dr. Temple's own contribution to the volume did not share the features to which the most serious exception was taken, and it would have been possible for him to dissociate himself from teaching that was causing the gravest concern and pain. But, partly it is believed from determination not to desert his friends, he allowed his life to be the exponent of his beliefs.

THE LATE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

A GREAT BISHOP.

As a bishop Dr. Temple has left a splendid record. His earnest, faithful labours for sixteen years in the West country left a deep and abiding mark on the diocese, of which Cornwall then formed a part. The religious nature of the people appealed to him, and as at an earlier time so many had gladly responded to the spiritual call of the Methodists, others were now drawn out by this bishop, who showed an interest in his flock to which they were entirely unaccustomed.

The translation of Dr. Temple to London in 1885 was received with almost general satisfaction, and the experience of the twelve following years justified the high anticipations that had been formed. The burdensome duties, as he conceived them, of the position would have been too much for any ordinary man, but he went forward, believing that as his days so should his strength be. It was during this period, too, that he began to be recognised as one of the great powers in the promotion of the cause of temperance, and through that channel of influence was able to manifest the anxiety to do justice to Nonconformity which won for him many friends and admirers. The cry of the heathen reached his heart also, and, even when home duties crowded him on every hand, he could be relied on as an enthusiastic and effective advocate of the foreign mission cause. Among other characteristic features of his work may be noted the holding of monthly conferences with his suffragans and archdeacons, which he said afforded him the most valuable help he received, and the organization of conferences for laymen as well as clergymen in the rural deaneries, each of which he addressed himself annually, giving frank and helpful utterances on pressing questions affecting belief or practice.

RECONCILING DIFFERENCES.

His removal to Canterbury raised Dr. Temple to a position in which his abilities found the widest possible field. There have been difficult questions to settle, and although he has not always been able to take what may be called the Protestant position in dealing with questions of Ritualism—indeed, he had strong sympathy with the High Churchmen—he has done much to reconcile conflicting parties in the Church. As our readers are aware, he was a warm supporter of the Education Act, but, while holding opposite views, we believe none will doubt his sincerity when he declared the Bill to be "an honest and statesmanlike measure."

Recently, members of all the Evangelical denominations joined hands in a common sorrow over the graves of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and Dr. Joseph Parker. Distinctions and differences were for the time being forgotten in the great fact that two great leaders had fallen. Now another champion has been taken. It is well with him. We would not recall him if we could; for he served his own generation by the will of God, and has entered into a well-earned rest. But after every depletion of the ranks the Church must gird herself anew to press forward; and much prayer is being made by the people of God—without distinction of name or creed—that there may be raised up for this high and influential position a man fitted to discharge the onerous and difficult duties, who in and through all will seek the glory of God alone.

The London Jews Society.

INTERVIEW WITH REV. CANON KELK.

AFTER a long and fruitful ministry to Israel in Jerusalem, on behalf of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, Rev. Canon Kelk returned some eighteen months ago to England, and at a time when evening days of rest and quietude might well be looked for, has taken up with an undimmed enthusiasm the direction of the metropolitan mission of this organization.

Interviewed the other day at the Mission House, Goulston Street, E., by a representative of The Christian, Canon Kelk, while modestly deprecating anything like personal prominence, was delighted to refer to the comprehensive operations, British, Asiatic, and Continental, of the important Society in which he is a distinguished leader. The premises at Goulston Street are, if awkward for their present use, the best available. Ascending a lofty staircase the visitor first enters a large plainly-furnished room belonging to the medical section. Here a missionary is addressing in Yiddish, with much energy and persuasion, a motley but respectful congregation of Jews and Jewesses, who are waiting their turn to be seen by the doctor. The walls are bright with reproductions of Raphael's cartoons, and, in vivid colouring, the Religious Tract Society's well-known picture of Moses lifting up the brazen serpent in the wilderness.

Across the hall, past the dispensary, where an assistant is industriously mixing and labelling medicines, one finds Canon Kelk in a humble apartment, whose shelves are laden with Bibles and Testaments, in Hebrew and Yiddish, and which is at once his study and interviewing room, and the general office of the mission.

The Canon speaks first of the London work. He is able to report a stirring among the dry bones of Israel. "Here," he says, "we receive out-patients thrice a week, and, as you will see, the Gospel is preached to all who attend. Then, they are seen in turn by Dr. Bell, of Blackheath, who so generously devotes his services to the needs of Jewish sufferers. The large attendances, and the gratitude shown, demonstrate that the ministry of healing is regarded with devout thankfulness. Moreover, there is this peculiar advantage: those who desire to hear the Message of Life, can come to a medical mission without incurring that hatred of their co-religionists, which would be aroused by open attendance at a church. Not a few come purposely to hear the addresses."

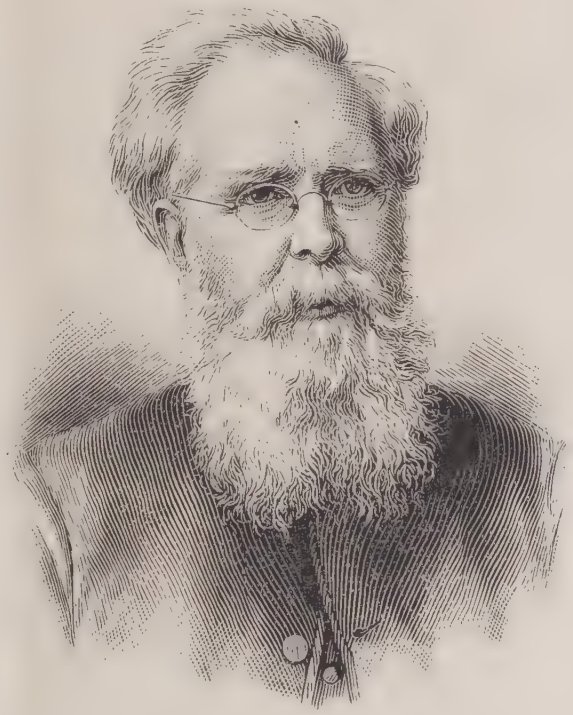
"Public meetings, of course, are also held, Canon?"

"Certainly. In our large hall downstairs we have many departments of Gospel work actively carried on. There are evangelistic services and mothers' meetings, while the place is also utilized for a Jews' reading-room. Scripture portions and tracts are given away in large numbers, and there is a missionary practically always on duty."

REMINISCENCES OF JERUSALEM.

Turning to the Asiatic branch, Canon Kelk was on still more familiar ground. His labours in the Holy Land, and particularly in Jerusalem, are well known to those who cherish a love for Jewish missions. In answer to questions, the Canon briefly touched upon his personal history. While yet a Cambridge undergraduate he placed himself at the disposal of this excellent Society, and on the advice of the Committee he spent some time at the Malta Protestant College, with the object of mission work among Jews and other Orientals. Then the way was made clear to undertake a curacy at home, and four years were thus spent in service at Leeds. Next came an appointment to a parish in the north-east of the same important town, and here our friend toiled for fourteen years. Then came a call to Jerusalem, which was eagerly received as promising the fulfilment of long cherished desires.

"The operations at Jerusalem, where I spent twenty-two happy years, were remarkable, I consider, for three departments of ministry. First, there is the House of Industry, which assuredly affords a splendid opportunity for reaching and permanently influencing Jewish young men. We give them careful industrial training in printing, bookbinding, shoemaking, carpentry, or turnery. Thoroughness is aimed at in all things, as, for example, the beautiful style and finish the olive-wood articles show. The House is situate between the Jaffa Gate and the Mosque of Omar, not far from the Church of the Sepulchre."



REV. CANON KELK.

CHRIST CHURCH AND THE SCHOOLS.

"I understand, Canon, that much spiritual encouragement is met with in the institution?"

"It is with heartfelt gratitude that one hears from all parts of the world of faithful witnesses for Christ among the converts who have gone forth from Jerusalem. Owing to the dearth of employment in Palestine they are scattered abroad, and so help to make known the Redemption story to their brethren in other lands. We have in Jerusalem a Hebrew Christian community of over 200 persons. I myself had the joy of baptizing 199 Jews and Jewesses in Christ Church, Mount Zion—that is the church which belongs to our Society, and where I was minister. I should add that our services were of a simple, Protestant character, with nothing of formalism, but warm and brotherly."

"You spoke of other important departments, also?"

"Yes. There are the schools for both boys and girls, where, including boarders and day-scholars, quite 200 children are daily under Christian instruction. A large proportion become believers on the Lord Jesus Christ. All the children are Jewish, but their parents are glad to have them educated in these Christian schools. They are, however, not baptized without the consent of their parents until they are of age. The boys' school is close to the church, and the girls' outside the city on the hill supposed to be Goath (referred to Jeremiah xxxi. 39). Then there is the Hospital and Medical Mission, under Dr. Wheeler, in connection with which Gospel work is maintained by visitation and the ministry of the Word."

Canon Kelk mentioned as facts worth remembering, that "medical and industrial missions, both of which are now held in such high esteem, were commenced in Jerusalem."

A GLANCE AT OTHER STATIONS.

"The Society has, of course, many other missions in various lands?"

"Yes, they are familiar to all who follow the course of efforts to evangelize Israel. Briefly, the Society, from its headquarters in Lincoln's Inn Fields, under the secretaries, Revs. W. T. Gidney and F. L. Denman, maintains missions at the chief European cities where the Jewish populations are large. I should also have said that there are centres of work in Persia and Syria. If we turn to Africa, we find Abyssinia has three stations, while there are also missions in Morocco, Egypt, and Tunis. The religious teaching in the schools gives special encouragement; here is a typical account, from the Society's annual report, of the school at Damascus, under Rev. J. Segall:—

"The attendance at the Sabbath School has lately assumed such large proportions that, for want of room and the lack of the necessary teaching staff, we shall soon be obliged to limit the number of attendants. Towards the end of the year we had over 600 children on the books, and about 400 in attendance. Every available place on the school premises was used, and a few members of our small congregation kindly came to the rescue and consented to take a class. The Sabbath school for boys was superintended by me, and was held from 12 to 1 p.m.; among these were a number of young men. The girls, who formed by far the greater majority, were formed into a number of classes with a teaching staff of seven teachers, and superintended by Mrs. Segall. The course of instruction was a Bible story, generally the Gospel for the following Sunday, and hymns and Messianic passages."

"I believe, too, that the Society endeavours to reach the Jews in this country by parochial agencies?"

"Yes, as Mr. Denman points out, the Society has for more than twenty years, both in London and elsewhere, supplied agents who work under the sole control of incumbents of parishes where there are Jews. In the East End of London parochial grants are thus being made by that Society, amounting annually to over £1,000."

NEEDED EXTENSIONS.

Canon Kelk was pathetic upon the subject of London extension. "Our staff here in Goulston Street includes three clergy, two lay missionaries, and four ladies. It would be impossible to speak too highly of the ability and consecration of my helpers, and we rejoice to know that many Jews regard us as their friends. It must be remembered, however, that the Society suffered a serious deprivation when it was obliged to part with its well-known premises in Palestine Place, where we had church, institutes, operative converts' home, and Hebrew college and schools. True, we have large premises for the latter at Streatham and an operative institution at Bodney Road, N.E.; but our outstanding need is a central block of buildings in East London, convenient and well equipped for labour among both Jews and Hebrew Christians. I would earnestly put the matter before friends of Israel, pointing out that while we have devoted workers, we are in great need of such buildings as I have described in order to embrace the numerous and important opportunities for extending the Master's work, which are ever before us in our daily efforts to win the Jew for Christ."

Dr. Torrey at Madras.

EXCEPTIONALLY heavy rain, converting the roads in many places into a rushing river a foot or eighteen inches deep in a few minutes, have made the attendances small at the opening meetings of Dr. Torrey's second visit to Madras. But they have been full of power, nevertheless. Latest advices show that at the time of writing, in addition to the general gatherings, much blessing was being experienced in connection with meetings for Christians attended by members of the Decennial Missionary Conference then met in the city. The following are some of the points from Dr. Torrey's address.

Notice the repetition of "He," in John xvi. 13-15, instead of the "it," "it," "it," one so often hears with regard to the Holy Spirit.

The Greek word for "Spirit" is a neuter noun, and in ordinary course the pronoun referring to it should be neuter; but so full of the idea of the Personality of the Holy Spirit is the writer of John xvi. that he goes away from the ordinary rules of grammar, and uses a masculine pronoun, and that in its most emphatic form, meaning, "that Person."

How many actually worship the Holy Ghost? Theoretically we all do so when we sing the Doxology, and say, "Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost," and also when we repeat the "Gloria"—"Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost."

We think of the love of Christ, and the love of the Heavenly Father, but how often do we praise the Holy Spirit for His love? If it had not been for the love of the Spirit patiently following us in our sin, and tenderly wooing us from our sin, we should never have been saved.

If we think of the Holy Spirit as an influence, we think we have to lay hold of that influence; but if we think of Him as a Person, it will be for Him to take hold of us and use us.

Is there not a difference in the thought of a worm using God to thrash the mountains, and God using a worm to thrash the mountains?

Jesus Christ is the Advocate who represents us at the Court above. But besides the advocate in court there is often a friend to legally advise us at our side. The Holy Spirit is just such a "Comforter," "Paraclete," or "Advocate." Jesus Christ had been a Friend at hand. Now He is going away to Court, and He promised that another "Advocate" should come, to be to them all that Jesus Christ was when He was here, and to whom they could turn for advice and cheer.

It is the work of the Holy Spirit to convict of sin. We cannot do it. The Holy Spirit does the work through us, however, for "I will send the Comforter unto you" was addressed to disciples. As far as the New Testament shows, and as far as common experience goes, the work of the Holy Spirit is done through believers.

Christ appeared personally to Saul of Tarsus, but human agency brought him into the light. The angel appeared to Cornelius, but Peter brought him into the light. The world is dependent on you and me for the saving operations of the Holy Spirit.

Maurice Gregory.

A Forward Step in the Sudan.

By Mrs. KARL KUMM (née Lucy E. Guinness).

"WELCOME! Welcome, white men! Aha! Well done, well done!"

The hot air was rent with the shouting. In the brilliant sunshine little black mites of boys and girls, without a shred of clothing were dancing with delight. And every brazen pair of lungs in that Niger village joined in a ringing cheer as the British officers and men marched through, proudly and wearily enough.

With them rode, the cause of all the cheering, a tall, patriarchal-looking Moslem chief, with flowing white hair—the deeply-dreaded Mallam Gibrella, now a captive in British hands.

"Why does he not make himself invisible now?" said the natives to each other with a hush of awe and wonder amid their jubilations. "Has he lost his skill?"

The fallen Mallam rode on, no doubt heartily wishing that he possessed the powers attributed to him. On rode the British cavalcade, to be met with a similar welcome at further villages, wherever villages remained in that slave-raided Central Sudan.

A few weeks ago our daily papers printed the whole story under a large type heading: "British at Lake Chad. How the Union Jack was hoisted. Capture of the Mallam Gibrella. Reception of our troops in Bornu." And the record of the successful mission lately sent by the British Government to occupy the country, long nominally British, between the Niger and Lake Chad, passed into history. A dozen officers, a medical staff, and a number of non-commissioned officers had led the expedition, whose work lasted nearly six months, and resulted in (as it was described)—

The suppression of the most notorious slave raider in the region, and the deliverance of thousands of people from the tyranny of his rule; the establishment of a chain of posts between the Niger and Lake Chad.

The people were not only friendly, but overjoyed at their arrival. On all sides there was the greatest rejoicing at the capture of the Mallam . . . in some cases, as the latter rode through the villages beside his captors, the whole population turned out and cheered. This was not to be wondered at, for every day the force passed ruined villages destroyed by the man who had devastated the whole of lower Bornu.

We lay aside the newspaper, and ask what does this mean, this scene in the Central Sudan? Among semi-Moslem, semi-heathen, wholly non-Christian people, what does this cheering for the white man mean? Simply that in the greatest, darkest, most suffering of all lands ruled by Islam, Islam can rule no longer. The hand of God is taking it away.

As a governing force the power of Islam here is broken. As a spiritual force it remains. God waits—we say it reverently—for that other conquering army, the soldiers of the Cross, to enter and occupy this land, theirs by right, by a far greater Right than that of England.

Alas, that greater army sends no such expedition, stands for the most part idly, ignoring its Leader's command! Rev. J. D. Aitken, of Lokoja, at the junction of the Niger and Benue, writes:—

Are not the fields here already white unto harvest? At present they are open to us. The people hate Mohammedanism, because thousands of their friends and villages have been enslaved under its direct law. If, however, we do not quickly step in, from constant intercourse with Mohammedans under English rule they will soon forget their old wrongs, they will embrace the religion of the false prophet, and be no longer open to us as now. When I came out in 1898 there were few Mohammedans to be seen below Iddah. Now they are everywhere, excepting below Abo, and at the present rate of progress there will scarcely be a heathen village on the river banks by 1910. Then we shall begin to talk of Mohammedan missions to these people, and anyone who has worked in both heathen and Mohammedan towns knows what such a work means.

No mission has worked at Ibi, none have ever gone to the Bautchi hills, none to Bornu, none since the dawn of the Christian Era anywhere near Lake Chad. Beyond Lokoja but one station in all Northern Nigeria (Gierku, near Zaria) is occupied. Three men of the Church Missionary Society labouring here, represent the entire force of the whole Christian Church working among 25,000,000 souls in Northern Nigeria only, and among 50,000,000 to 80,000,000 reckoning the whole sweep of the Sudan, across to the few and far-off points of light on the Upper Nile.

Lokoja is a place of considerable importance. Bishop Tugwell mentions in one of his recent letters that on his way down river he passed four steamers conveying one hundred Englishmen up, of whom about sixty were permanent officials. He adds:

There are in Lokoja to-day 120 Englishmen, one being a missionary. The climate does not appear to distress the Foreign Office, or to affect the courage of the British soldier or Government official; panic on the part of the Church of Christ in the face of such facts as these is surely disgraceful.

"But," you say, "we can't evangelize the Sudan, because the Government forbids it."

This is true, as regards the Moslem lands of the Upper Nile in the East Sudan, but not of the West or the Niger. By international treaty at the Berlin Conference of 1885 the powers of Europe secured to the Congo, the Niger, and all their tributaries, commercial and religious freedom. No one can forbid our going up this river and planting mission stations where we will.

THE SUDAN PIONEER MISSION.

The needs of the Sudan have been lately laid on the hearts of a number of the Lord's people scattered throughout Great Britain, and last November a group of friends, representing various Christian circles, met at Sheffield to take a forward step towards the evangelization of the populous lands of the Niger. A committee was formed, and under the name of Sudan Pioneer Mission, it was proposed, God willing, to commence work up the Benue River, where at present no mission exists, aiming at the inland mountainous country of Adamawa, south of Lake Chad, as the most healthy part of the Western Sudan known. The head waters of the Benue flow from this region, whose highest elevation is from 8,000ft. to 9,000ft., and whose capital, Yola, possesses a British Resident. Regular steam communication exists between Yola and the coast. Travellers and traders in the dry season (January-February) use canoes or the Royal Niger Company's light launches, and in the rains (July-August) the Benue is navigable by ordinary river steamers, and rivals the lower Niger in breadth. Captain Mockler Ferryman, in his new book, "Up the Niger," writes:—

There can be no doubt that this is a land of great promise in the near future, and it will probably prove . . . one of the most remunerative parts of West Africa. . . . Trade on the Benue River is established on a firm and business-like footing.

As to Yola, where a commercial centre has long existed, and where it is hoped a mission station may be planted:—

At Yola the capital of the important Mohammedan state of Adamawa . . . on the right bank the slopes of a magnificent group of mountains come almost down to the water where, we decided, in the future the European traders would establish their Sanatorium, some thousands of feet above the plains.

Who will be the first messenger of Christ to settle and labour in Adamawa to make, if the Lord will, Yola their home?

Men are wanted to form the first party of the mission to go for a year to Tripoli to study Hausa (the great trade language of the West Sudan, spoken by some fifteen (?) millions) and to gain some experience of Sudanese peoples there, in a good climate, before going to the Niger itself.

A medical man is needed to join this first party, one who is ready to go as an evangelist first and a medical afterwards. Only a few men can be sent at first—from four to six—equipped as was the martyr Stephen, "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost." But numbers are needed to stand behind them, to send them forth by prayer and gift, and sympathy, and effort.

Convinced that it cannot be according to the will of our Lord Jesus Christ that fifty to eighty millions in the Sudan should be left without the Gospel, we send forth in His Name this statement, seeking for fellow labourers, to pray, go, give, help, send.

The Case of Foreign Missions.

MISSIONARIES are often inclined to be discouraged as they hear of the lack of interest in foreign missionary work manifested by many of those who are considered members in the home churches. This want of interest is shown, not only by their disinclination to spare funds to support their various missions, but also by the very few among their young people who offer for the work.

Whether the Lord Jesus, though so full of grace, would count any one a member of His Church who had no care for His very last, and, therefore, most precious command, is a question which they should not leave unsolved, lest, after all, they find that they are living in a fools' paradise. The spirit that leads men to be careless of the spread of the knowledge of the salvation that is in Christ Jesus, throughout the whole world, is not for one moment to be confounded with the Spirit of Christ. It is rather of the spirit of him who said, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

When the heart is filled with grateful remembrance of the sacrifice that was necessary, and so freely made, in order that we ourselves should be delivered from the bondage and condemnation of sin—when the soul is really enjoying the liberty that comes to the sons of God as they look forward to the glories that are yet to be revealed—there will never be any backwardness in doing all that can be done to make that salvation known to others. It is that Andrew should look after Peter; that Philip should desire his friend Nathaniel to meet the Messiah too; and that Paul and others should give themselves gladly to take the good news even to the ends of the earth, as the Lord intended should be done when the new life was given. Necessity is laid upon those to preach, as widely as God providentially makes possible, in whom the new life throbs and works.

If there is life at all, then how languidly it must be working, when this normal instinct is found to be almost obliterated! When the physician finds the pulse feeble and intermittent, he does not diagnose a healthy and useful life; and church members, whose life-pulse is at such a low ebb, are not wise if they do not seriously examine their own spiritual condition before God, lest they be found among those of whom the Lord says, He will have to spue them out of His mouth!

It behoves those who are responsible for the carrying on of foreign missionary work, and, indeed, missionaries themselves, to examine and see whether, apart from the formality and worldliness unfortunately so much spoken of by those whose utterances command attention, they may not themselves be, in some respects, responsible for the lack of missionary interest, which they so much deplore.

Within the limits of a paragraph one cannot pretend to enter minutely into a question which is of such vital moment. A few sentences may lead some to fuller investigation. Is it possible that the higher and fundamental principles underlying all true missionary work—namely, the glory of God and obedience to His direct command—while not ignored, may not have been kept prominently enough forward? Has there been too great an effort to amuse and interest rather than to instruct in duty and fix responsibility? There never was a time when people generally knew more about the manners, and customs, and political and social life of almost every country under heaven, largely, though not altogether, the result of direct information furnished by missionary agencies than at the present time, just when the complaint is made of this lack of missionary interest. Should not the efforts of the Church, then, be given rather to emphasize the Scriptural estimate of the world's need of the Gospel?

It would be well for the home representatives of missionary work abroad, while they seek to instruct others as to the salvation needed by the heathen, to insist that their unconverted hearers are far more responsible than the heathen, because of the knowledge that is within their grasp, and that it does not meet the case merely to show interest, or give money for missionary purposes. Until they are themselves converted, they have neither part nor lot in the matter. Even among the children the interest created by a Chinese woman's shoe, or a pair of chopsticks, is a poor result if it should lead any to think of themselves more highly than they ought to think, instead of filling them with pity for the poor heathen. It is as dreadful a thing to live in England as anywhere else without possessing a personal Saviour.

Since, then, the work to be done is a spiritual work, and to be done by spiritual people, let none but the highest motives and the highest ideals be kept before the minds of the Lord's people. Let the power of the Almighty Spirit of God be our only dependence, and then among the Lord's own blood-bought people there will never be a lack of real interest in the work for which the Church of Christ has been gathered, and left, in the world—even to gather in, and care for, the lost ones for whom the Saviour died.

Servians in South Hungary.

REFERENCE has already been made in the pages of The Christian to the successful work prosecuted by Colporteur Pavkov, who is by birth a Servian, among his countrymen in Southern Hungary. The distribution and proclamation of the Word have been blest to the conversion of souls.

N.Z., ship captain, thirty-six years of age, bought a Bible of the colporteur, and read it diligently. He visited the colporteur also, read the Bible with him, asked questions, and received explanation and instruction. He repented, turned to the Lord, "who appeared," writes Pavkov, "in his heart," and, having forsaken his old sins, he is now leading a new life. He has his Bible always with him in the ship, and at free intervals he gathers his men, and men from other ships also to the number of twenty or thirty, round him, and reads the Bible to them. Pavkov found him thus engaged one evening on the River Tisza, when he had about twenty-five men round him, and was reading to them about Nicodemus. Those present testified that they listened willingly to him because he did not ridicule the religion of another, but only spoke against sin.

P. Z., gardener, eighteen years of age, also bought a Bible of the colporteur. Through the reading of it, and attendance at the meetings, he was led to the Lord. He believes that Jesus Christ came to save him, that he suffered for him on the Cross, and he has now found in Him salvation. He reads his Bible for himself, and reads it to his fellow-gardeners.

G. Z., pupil of one of the higher schools, seventeen years of age, attends the Reformed Church and the religious meetings, and takes his Bible with him to the school, where he reads it to others. Recently he related the history of his conversion. He had got a Bible from the colporteur, had read it diligently, and the story of the Good Samaritan had made a deep impression on his heart, for he had recognised in the Good Samaritan the Lord Jesus Himself, ready to help us, and to give us healing from sin.

D. S., lamp-lighter, thirty-eight years of age, cannot read, but attends the Bible-readings, and has found the Saviour. He has great power of retaining in his memory what he has heard from the Word, and repeats it to others. He has many hearers, and he usually winds up his address by telling them that it is not enough to hear, they must also obey.

There is some prospect of Mr. Pavkov being received by Dr. Harry Guinness, at Harley House, for further equipment for the work of evangelist, and I desire to commend him and the work to the sympathy of friends. Our Bible Society maintains the colportage, which has resulted in so much good, but cannot maintain the Evangelistic Mission for which the field is now evidently ripe. I trust that kind friends may come to our aid.

Nestorians in Canada.

LONG and earnestly have the Nestorians longed to be under British protection. Oppressed by the Mohammedans of Persia and Turkey, robbed and murdered by the Kurds, they have turned wistful eyes to the happy lands of the West. At last a colony is to be founded at Winnipeg, in Canada. Dr. Isaac Adams, once a boy in the well-known orphanage of Deacon Abraham, after going through college in Urumiah, went to America, where he took his diploma as a doctor, and was afterwards ordained by the Nestorian Patriarch. By his talents as an author he had acquired property, and had a comfortable home in his native country. Recently, however, the down-trodden state of his nation so filled his heart that he sold his house and all his property to pay the expenses of a band of thirty-five persons, whom he has taken to Canada to settle on Government lands.

The journey was at first in waggons, stopping at night at caravansaries, where only an empty room was given them. There they prepared the food they had brought with them, then all knelt in prayer, and then lay down on the floor, the men on one side, the women and children on the other. Ten days and nights they were in the train to Hamburg; after a few days' rest they embarked last Saturday for Canada. Dr. Adams left the party in charge of his brother, came to England for two nights, and went on first to prepare for his party necessary accommodation. The long journey and unforeseen expenses had quite exhausted his funds, and he had nothing in hand wherewith to buy food or procure lodgings. On reaching Winnipeg, a short time may be spent in the Government House for Emigrants; but their trust is in God.

Can we picture these poor Orientals arriving in the frozen north, without a penny in hand, clothed only in native dress, the women wrapped in their veils, and one with a little babe in her arms? Will not some friends be stirred by the self-sacrifice of the noble young man who has devoted his life to the service of God and his countrymen, and who has literally suffered "the loss of all things," to help these poor, simple-hearted Nestorians, who in their ignorance have unwisely made the journey in the winter? Should a Nestorian colony be formed in Canada, other families from the East would join it in due time. Mr. Preston, Commissioner of Emigration, 17, Victoria Street, S.W., has kindly consented to be treasurer of a Nestorian Colony Fund.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn.

MEETINGS held by these workers and their helpers during the last few weeks in Holland and Belgium have been attended with much blessing. A gentleman in the latter place says: "You can have no idea of the extent to which these meetings have been blessed to me; my entire life is changed." Similar testimonies were given concerning meetings in Holland, when souls sought and found salvation. In Amsterdam 600 were present on one occasion; in Rotterdam 700.

A correspondent writes to The European Express, an English paper published in Brussels:—"If Christianity is to hold its own during this twentieth century, it has need of such men and women, whose lives and examples are more eloquent for the truth which they profess than whole volumes of apologies and Christian evidences. The world is weary of controversy; it asks for living facts."

Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn hold meetings in Paris during this week, and are arranging for their visit to London and the provinces in the beginning of the New Year. They are very desirous to receive supplies of New Testaments in French at reduced rates, that they may sell them at a proportionately low price. They gratefully acknowledge the receipt of 2,000 Gospels from the Scripture Gift Mission, through Mr. F. C. Brading. The central address of Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn is 147, Rue Ten Bosch, Brussels.

Answering the Door.

THERE are certain days in the year on which, as children, we are especially on the alert for the postman's knock—I mean on Valentine's Day, our birthday, Christmas Day, and New Year's Day. We do not know exactly what we shall get—letters, presents, invitations—but we expect and hope for something nice. How eagerly we watch at the window or wait upon the stairs; or, if sitting in a room, we make believe we are deeply interested in a book, but all the while our attention is absorbed in the approaching postman's visit, hoping that when a letter comes for us it may contain a greeting, or expressions of love, or (which is more to the point) a postal order!

Or if we are giving a party we look forward with feverish anxiety to the arrival of the first guests, and do not rest until our invited friends are all within. And what a to-do there is to get ready for these happy occasions—such a washing and dressing, brushing and curling; and shoes that pinch, and gloves that split; not to mention the satisfaction with which the boys view the tables well spread with good things for tea and supper! And the manners—well, they must be of the best to-night, whatever they may be at other times!

Hark! there's a knock at the door. A visitor is in the porch, and our natural impulse is to have the door opened as soon as possible, so that our guest may be admitted without delay. But sometimes, in the best regulated households, a visitor is kept waiting. Perhaps the reason is (1) that the knock was not heard. That is a reason which the visitor will pardon, as the fault may have been his own for not knocking loudly enough. But suppose we do not open the door (2) because we are too busy; or (3) we are rude, and say, "Oh, let him wait;" or, worse still, are (4) so unkind as to say, "We won't admit him at all!" You will say that such conduct would be quite inexcusable.

Now, boys and girls, there is a Visitor who is very anxious to gain admittance to your heart and life. He comes as both Messenger and Guest, with words of invitation, of blessing, and of love; and in order to attract your attention, He says: "Behold!" which is equivalent to "Look! Listen! Attend to what I have to say!" "Behold, I stand at the door and knock!" I wonder what reception you will give Him on this New Year's Day. I am glad to know that many of you have already opened to Him the door of your heart, and have said, "Come in, Lord Jesus; there is room in my heart for Thee." And you have found that, as when He entered the homes of Jairus, Lazarus, and Zaccheus, when He was upon earth, He has brought no sorrow, but only gladness and joy.

But I am afraid this cannot be said of you all. There are some who have kept Him waiting outside, and I try to think what excuses you have made. You cannot say (1) you have not heard, because that is only true of the heathen children of whom we sing—

> But thousands and thousands who wander and fall,
> Never heard of that heavenly home;
> I should like them to know there is room for them all,
> And that Jesus has bid them to come.

Therefore your Reason must be one of the others mentioned above. Perhaps (2) you say you are too busy with your enjoyment and games to attend to Him. But you will have to find time some day, and it will be so much happier for you to "remember your Creator in the days of your youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh when you will say, 'I have no pleasure in them!'" because even pleasures will weary you after awhile.

"Oh, but," you say, "I mean to let Him in some day, but not yet!" That is like Reason (3), which says, "Let Him wait!" This you would consider very rude in reference to an earthly visitor, and I don't think you can have considered seriously what it means to treat Jesus so, when He is so full of love to you. If you read the passage in which our text occurs (Rev. iii. 17-20), you will find He reminds you that you are not really happy without Him, although sometimes you think you are (17); and He shows you the blessings which, as New Year's gifts, He is anxious to give you (18), so that you really may be happy. Considering how gladly you accept your earthly presents, it is strange treatment to refuse those which will last for ever, is it not?

Then as regards Reason (4). It would be more than unkind—it would be very wicked—for any boy or girl to say: "I will not admit Him! I don't want Him!" Verse 19 speaks of "rebuking and chastening," which means punishment, and this we do not like even in this life. God has many ways of bringing children to Himself. One of them is by illness, when they are obliged to put their toys away, and their minds become full of very serious thoughts because they are afraid to die. Now, if we should think about Him then, how much more should we do so when He is so good and kind as to give us health and strength and all the blessings we enjoy!

And so, on this New Year's Day, He is waiting for your answer. He says, "If any man (or boy or girl) will open the door, I will come in and sup with him and he with Me." This means that He will come into your life, and share with you its joys, and help you to bear its sorrows; and in the life to come He will give you a place in His heavenly home above.

There are many of you whom I have got to know and love through your letters and your diligence in Bible-searching, although I have never seen you. And I do so long for you all to become happy Christian boys and girls, taking from Jesus the spiritual gifts He is always anxious to bestow, and giving Him in return all that is best and most attractive in your bright young lives. And He who knows and loves you all, so much better than I do, will "do for you exceeding abundantly, above all that you ask or think," if you will answer the door of your heart and "let the Saviour in." Thus may this New Year be the best and happiest you have ever known, and may you "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ."

HOW TO START AFRESH (Eph. iv. 20—32).

YES, young brothers and sisters, we will all start afresh. We can always do that. However far we have got up, there is something higher; and however far we have fallen, it is always possible to start afresh. A new and better age is breaking over the mountain peaks, in which the old selfish ideals shall have no more place, and diviner methods of living will become the ideals of men. We must be ready to greet it, we must show ourselves worthy to obtain that world, and we must help to bring it nearer.

We must all go to school again, in the Divine school of Christ (20, 21). Christ is our lesson-book, we must learn Him. He is schoolmaster, we must hear Him. He is our atmosphere, we must be taught in Him. He is our standpoint of vision, we must consider all truth, as it is in Him. The Gospels of His life must be more and more the inspiration of our daily living.

We must put off, and put on (22-24). "The old man" is clearly "our former manner of life," which was always waxing more and more corrupt, like Lazarus in his grave. If we have not put it away, let us put it away now, by an immediate act of faith in the living Spirit. It doesn't take long for a beggar to put off his rags and take instead a new suit of clothes, and it need not take a moment longer to put away habits and thoughts, ways of speech and life, which are unworthy of the children of God. Do it now, and look up to the Holy Spirit, to keep renewing you "in the spirit of your mind," so that the resolution of the moment may become the habit of a life. But, more than this, let us put on the new man, which is the life of Jesus Christ, that new ideal which is in the likeness of God ("after God"), and which the Lord created for us by His blessed Life and Resurrection. It need not take more than a moment to put on the Lord Jesus Christ (Rom. xiii. 14).

Let us be very careful to do nothing to grieve the Holy Spirit. If we are Christians at all, the Holy Spirit is undoubtedly in our hearts. We must not try to feel this, because we have no test sensitive enough to detect His presence; but we must accept the assurances of such passages as these—1 Cor. vi. 19; Rom. viii. 9; Eph. iii. 16.

He entered our hearts at the moment of regeneration, and has been within us ever since. We did not hear Him enter. The fall of the petals of over-blown roses on the grass is not so gentle as His foot-print; but we believe He is within, because the Scripture says so. For my part, I like to begin every day, before lifting my head from my pillow, by saying, "Thou art within, O Spirit of Christ, though I feel Thee not."

Now, if the Holy Spirit be ungrieved, He will continue to perform all His Divine offices in the soul. He will witness to our Sonship; He will enthrone Christ, and keep Him on the throne as King; He will keep the self-life in the place of death; He will give a blessed hunger for the things of God; He will give power in witness-bearing. The one thing to care for, in order to have a strong and blessed Christian experience is to maintain an ungrieved Holy Spirit. I do not think that we can grieve Him away, but we may greatly limit and restrain His gracious work by what the world calls little things; such as:

1. Insincerity of speech (25).
2. The nursing of an unforgiving spirit (26).
3. Any kind of over-reaching, or fraudulent dealing (28).
4. Impurity of speech (29).
5. Any failure in love (31).

A boy may be bound, so as not to be able to move his arms, by a number of cotton-threads, quite as tightly as by a strong rope-thong, and it is not necessary to be grossly immoral and inconsistent to grieve the Holy Spirit; we may do it by a repeated number of unnoticed and unconfessed discourtesies. CHRISTIAN LIVING.—Phil. iv. 1—13.
GOLDEN TEXT.—Phil. iv. 4.

THE Epistle to the Philippians is one of the "prison songs" written by Paul during his captivity in Rome, ten years after his miraculous release from the dungeons at Philippi. The little company of European converts had grown into an organised assembly of believers (i. 1). Epaphroditus had been sent with messages of sympathy and supplies for the needs of their beloved teacher in his affliction, and returning, carried back with him a letter of thanks, commendation, and advice to the Church at Philippi. Joy is the dominant note throughout, though the writer was in gloomy circumstances. Five reasons for rejoicing are actually named.

PAUL'S POSITION.

A prisoner, probably chained to a Roman soldier, unjustly arrested, needy, tried, and lonely; yet peaceful and content (iv. 11). Uncertain as to the issue of his trial, suffering in body and circumstances, so that he almost longed "to depart" (i. 23, 24); yet courteous, unselfish, affectionate, grateful even to a joyous thankfulness. Only one string jarred, and that was touched with a lovingly tender, but firm and faithful hand (iv. 2, 3).

PAUL'S SECRET.

The Lord Jesus ruled in his heart as King. His peace, like "the hosts of the Lord," garrisoned his soul from fear and worry. The love and presence of the Lord filled him so full of joy (Neh. viii. 10), that he said, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." He was content to be "anywhere with Jesus."

PAUL'S ADVICE.

(a) Stand fast, keep your anchor firm in the rock of ages, and though the waves (of trouble) and the winds (of temptation) may beat and blow, your ship shall not go adrift.

(b) Do not let there be quarrelling among the crew.

(c) Live out on the upper deck, in the sunshine of the love of Jesus.

(d) Yielding, courteous. Behave to those around (at home and out) just as you would if you could see Jesus standing near you. "The Lord is at hand."

(e) "My God shall supply all your need;" do not worry, but pray and trust (Psa. xxxvii. 3, 4, 5).

"Thank Him for all that is past,
And trust Him for all that's to come."

(f) Finally, "Think on these things." Isaiah said, "Thoughts stayed on Thee" (xxvi. 3, 4).

The Lord will direct our thoughts (Psa. cxxxix. 2).

GOLDEN TEXT.

Where? When? At home, at work, as well as in public worship and at feasts. Contrast Deut. xii. 7, 12, with xxviii. 47.

Under persecution? (Matt. v. 12; 2 Cor. vii. 4.)

When those around are disagreeable? (Luke vi. 22.) Mark "you" in Rom. xii. 18.

Peter and John rejoiced when they had been "beaten" unjustly (Acts v. 41) for the Name of Jesus.

When did the Lord tell us to rejoice over a lost sheep found "with Him," and names written in heaven? (Luke x. 20; xv. 6.)

When does Jesus rejoice? (Luke xv. 5; x. 21.)

Of an officer in the Crimean War, his fellow-officers were heard to say of him one day, "He is blue (i.e., religious), but then he is such a bright blue."

Who so bright as the children who can rejoice in Jesus as their own Saviour?

FIRM ON THE ROCK.

On one occasion Mr. Moody said that we were in need of more Christians like the man who was asked if he did not tremble during a severe storm, as he stood upon a rocky eminence. He replied: "Yes my legs trembled, but the rock did not, and because my feet were upon the rock I felt safe." The Apostle had, himself, a strong and sturdy faith, and was able to say, "I know in whom I have believed." He urged the Philippians to "stand fast in the Lord," and if we, when buffeted with doubt and anxiety, would think more of the Rock, Christ Jesus, on whom we stand, and think less of our own disturbed feelings, we should be of stronger faith, and have a more robust confidence in the things pertaining to the kingdom of heaven (v. 1).

A BROTHERHOOD OF LOVE.

During the recent war in South Africa, there were a number of instances where the Boers and the Britons freely fraternized, when brought together as prisoners and captors. It was sometimes the case that two men, who had been bitter enemies on the battlefield, discovered that, as Freemasons, they were united in a bond of brotherhood. The fiercest of foes have often become the firmest of friends, because of their common interest in a companionship world-wide in its influence. If members of a man-made society are able to establish such a bond of union, surely the members of Christ's Church should be (to use the Apostle's words), "of the same mind in the Lord." Minor differences should be sunk, and all enmity cease when we discover we are of one family, and that a spiritual family. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

FULL OF REJOICING.

Billy Bray, the quaint Cornish preacher, like the Apostle, could rejoice in the Lord greatly, and in whatsoever state he found himself he was therein content. He was accustomed to say, "If Billy gets work he praises the Lord, if he gets none he sings all the same. Do you think He'll starve Billy? No, no. There's sure to be a bit of flour in the bottom of the barrel for Billy. I can trust in Jesus, and while I trust Him, He would as soon starve Michael the Archangel, as He'd starve Billy!" When he was opposed and persecuted for singing and shouting, he used to retort, "If they put me into a barrel, I will shout, 'Glory!' through the bunghole. Praise the Lord!"

TIGHTENING THE FASTING GIRDLE.

When Robert Moffat was itinerating in South Africa he often had to go hungry, because of the nature of the country he was traversing. He and his party depended upon the hospitality of the natives, and if they were friendly a draught of sweet milk would be offered at the conclusion of the customary Gospel service. Sometimes the missionary received milk, sometimes water; as often as not he would have to go hungry and thirsty. When food was scarce Moffat was accustomed to tie on his "fasting girdle," and at times tightly—and go preaching upon it. The missionary and the Apostle could each say, "In everything and in all things have I learned the secret, both to be filled and to be hungry, both to abound and to be in want." In whatever state God may have placed us, we should be able to say, as did Paul and Moffat, and with triumph, "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me" (v. 12).

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

IT is evident from the many expressions of praise that continue to come in from the various centres visited by Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones, that their missions have not only awakened enthusiasm, but have left deep and abiding results. It has been felt at each place that the mission was all too short, and urgent entreaties have been received for return visits. On every hand are heard testimonies to the sterling character of the work, while the friends at places that are to be visited, stimulated by the good news of a revival of Gospel Temperance, are eagerly anticipating the missioners' coming.

Prior to resuming their labours Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones are taking a few days' well-earned rest. They are to take part in a reception at the Memorial Hall, E.C., on January 8 (when Rev. F. B. Meyer is also to speak), but their campaign proper recommences with a week's mission at Motherwell on January 9.

Death of Dr. Weymouth.

MANY will learn with sincere sorrow that Dr. R. F. Weymouth, formerly headmaster of Mill Hill School, died on Saturday last, at his home, Brentwood, Essex. He was born at Devonport in 1822, and became a student at University College, London. He then started a private school at Plymouth, which became very successful. In 1869 he passed the Doctor of Literature examination of the London University, and was the first to obtain this degree—the highest in the University. In the same year Dr. Weymouth became headmaster of Mill Hill School, and occupied that position for seventeen years. After his retirement, in 1886, he devoted himself to literary work, his writings being mainly philological. He was a member of the council of the Philological Society, and many of his papers are published in the transactions of that society. In 1886, after many years' labour, appeared his "Resultant Greek Testament," exhibiting the text on which the majority of modern editors are agreed, together with the more important variations. Since then Dr. Weymouth's main work has been a translation of the New Testament into modern English, which will shortly be published.

National Society for Employment of Epileptics.

THE Colony for Epileptics, established by this Society at Chalfont St. Peter, deals with a class of sufferers whose lot has hitherto been a particularly sad one. Of the 40,000 epileptics in this country, a terribly large proportion eventually sink into insanity, in consequence of the lack of proper care and treatment in the earlier stages of the malady. The object of the Chalfont Colony is to provide this timely care, and to give these sufferers the opportunity to lead healthy and useful lives, and to exercise their industry in farm, garden, or workshop.

The Colony, since its establishment in 1894, has been greatly extended, and the erection of many new homes and other buildings has given it the appearance of a village rather than an institution. But its accommodation is still quite inadequate to meet the demand for admission, which comes not only from every part of the United Kingdom, but also from the most distant colonies and dependencies of the British Empire. Funds for further extensions are therefore most urgently needed. The London office is at 12, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C., and Mr. G. Penn Gaskell is the secretary.

American Notes.

A FEW days ago, for the first time since the Civil War, the Northern and Southern Presbyterian Synods of the State of Kentucky held a joint session, in celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of that Church in the State.

I was present at the great farewell meeting in the Metropolitan Temple, convened to bid Godspeed to Bishop Thoburn on his return to India. Bishop Andrews delivered an address both interesting and eloquent, and the departing Bishop was, as usual, both practical and spiritual in what he said.

Mr. Herbert H. Booth, third son of General Booth, of the Salvation Army, is starting out on a lecture tour with a very elaborate stereopticon and kinetoscope apparatus, with which he gives very realistic pictures of the sufferings and deaths of Christians in the early years of Christianity. He has taken up his residence at Evanston, Ill.

Preliminary steps have been taken for the organization within the Protestant Episcopal Church of an order of priests and deacons who shall pledge themselves to the work of missionaries while earning their livelihood by secular labour, without receiving compensation from any congregation, mission board, bishop, or other source. This is to be called the Order of St. Paul.

The three mining companies on Douglas Island, Alaska, are co-operating in establishing at Treadwell a branch of the Y.M.C.A., with a building to cost 6,000dols., which is to be open day and night for their employees. This building will contain recreation rooms, gymnasium, baths, bowling-alleys, together with smoking-room and hall for lectures and entertainments. It is stated that violent opposition to the new building is being manifested by the keepers of saloons and gambling houses.

The annual report of the New York Bible Society, just issued, shows another year of active work in Bible distribution among immigrants, sailors, churches, missions, institutions, families, and individuals in the city. The work among the immigrants is represented by 31,333 volumes, in twenty-three different languages; 8,970 volumes, in thirteen different languages, were placed among the sailors in the harbour. With what were placed in churches, schools, families, hotels, lodging-houses, hospitals, city prisons, and other places, the total was brought up to 62,583 volumes.

The next step in the United States will be to take up anew the appeal made by Presbyterian missionary women of Chicago ten years ago, and seconded later by President Cleveland, that Congress shall prohibit American citizens to export intoxicants to Africa or sell them in Africa, perhaps excepting settlements where all or nearly all the people are whites. That Congress has power to forbid such exports has been affirmed repeatedly by the Supreme Court, and a new precedent is afforded by the Gillett-Lodge Bill forbidding Americans to sell in Pacific Islands not under our government.

Rev. Henry P. Weiss, the director of the Protestant Leper Asylum at Groot Chatillon, near Paramaribo, Dutch Guiana, gives an interesting account of his work. There are still two or three thousand lepers living in the city of Paramaribo who do not wish to go to the Government Asylum for Lepers, first on account of the class and character of many of the patients; and second, because they will be virtually prisoners, under guard of policemen. If the Protestant Asylum can be enlarged, many of these will come to it willingly, and a great menace to the public health will be reduced.

The Roman Catholics in different parts of the land are making continuous and strenuous efforts to get public money for their schools. The other day over four hundred German Catholics, representing fifty societies, met in a church in this city and endorsed resolutions of protest against the public schools of the United States, and the exclusion of the friars from the Philippines, adopted by a similar conference held a little while before in Indiana. There would seem to be some little unconscious humour in the view taken of the religious condition of the Philippines, for the resolution adopted solemnly asserted that all the religion, morality, and civilization in those islands to-day were due to the friars, and that to interfere with the Catholic schools there would be to jeopardise the faith of the natives! The precise opposite is the fact.

It is not often that the pastor of a New York church gives the hand of fellowship to 108 persons at a single service, but Rev. C. T. Walker, D.D., did this on Sunday night at the Mount Olivet Baptist Church (coloured). Of this number over forty were persons converted during a special revival effort that has been put forth for the last three weeks, and the rest were received by letters from churches in different parts of the country. The Communion was administered to some 2,000 people, the congregation occupying every seat in the handsome church, and some hundred or so of the men being obliged to stand. This was also a sight not frequently seen in this city—outside of that church. Dr. Walker has occupied the pastorate for three years, and has increased the membership by some 1,800, of whom only some 600 have been received by letter.

The Church News Association has just published the results of a count of church attendance at the 336 churches on Manhattan Island for the first three Sundays in November; and the somewhat surprising announcement is made that it shows an attendance of no less than 31 per cent. This is much higher than most New Yorkers would have supposed. The adult population of Manhattan Island is 1,448,910, and the average attendance for those Sundays was 451,731. Children were not counted; on all three Sundays the weather was pleasant. According to denominations the figures were:—Dutch Reformed, 10,241—official membership, 9,218; Presbyterian, 18,920—official membership, 25,742; Episcopal, 33,137—official membership, 56,050; Methodist, 20,191—official membership, 14,749; Congregational, 2,153—official membership, 2,379; Lutheran, 7,342—official membership, 18.868; Baptist, 27,225—official membership, 27,383; Roman Catholic, 317,454—official membership, 522,130. And one-third of all these Church-goers were men.

The last issue of the Twentieth Century Quarterly, the organ of the International Reform Bureau, of Washington, D.C., which does excellent work at home and abroad, under the direction of Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, D.D., contains a list of American victories achieved on behalf of "native races" by active Christian effort during the last year or two. It may encourage workers in other lands engaged in a similar way to see these successes in detail:—

"The eleven acts in defence of uncivilized races against the vices of civilization are:—December 3, 1900, President McKinley declared in favour of protecting uncivilized races against distilled liquors; December 14, Senate ratified treaty to protect Africa; January 1, 1901, Philippine licence forbade the selling of liquors to natives; January 4, Senate declared for a universal treaty to protect all uncivilized races against all intoxicants; January 9, anti-canteen law passed to protect natives as well as soldiers; March 22, Secretary Long ordered 'no licence' in Tutuila; Dec. 6, Secretary Hay approved proposed universal treaty; December 11, President Roosevelt ordered that the British Government be invited to join us in submitting such a treaty to other powers; February 15, 1902, President approved law enacted by Congress to protect independent Pacific islands against American rum-sellers; March 22, President vetoed official certification of prostitutes in Philippines; August 12, prohibition in Tutuila reaffirmed by Assistant-Secretary Darling."

New York. ROGER MARTIN

"His Favour is For a Lifetime."

(Psa. xxx. 5—R.V. margin.)

"His favour is for a lifetime,"
The days may dawn and pass,
And the noonday sunbeams lengthen
Swiftly across the grass;
And the fiery hues of evening
Sweep o'er the far blue height,
Till there foldeth down over field and town
The star-gemmed wing of night.

But the Father Everlasting,
Whose Sun can never set—
Never will He forsake us,
Never will He forget.

"His favour is for a lifetime,"
The seasons go and come,
And the springtide beauty waneth
Swiftly as summer's bloom;
And the golden autumn glories
Fainter and paler grow,
Till they droop and die 'neath the clouding sky,
And the shrouding winter snow.

But the Father Everlasting,
From the summer-land above,
Crowneth the changing season
With His unchanging love.

"His favour is for a lifetime;"
Our years are gliding by,
And swift as weaver's shuttle—
As a morning dream they fly;
The old give place to the new years
And the new so soon grow old—
Till, of all our years, with their smiles and tears
The brief, brief tale is told.

But the Father Everlasting,
Who dwells in the endless years,
Will gather us to His bosom,
And wipe away the tears!

Oxford Notes.

REV. T. FOSTER CARTER, Curate of St. Clements, and lecturer at Wycliffe Hall, has received the appointment of Principal of the Bishop's Hostel, and chaplain to the Bishop of Durham.

Rev. V. A. Barradale, M.A., of Mansfield College, who for the last three and a half years, has served on the staff of the famous Malua Institute, Samoa, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society, has, through failure of health, resigned his position.

A United Temperance Mission has been held in Oxford during the past week by Rev. L. M. Isitt, of New Zealand. For six days great audiences have filled the City Hall. The missioner had the presence and support of many of the clergy, members of the University, the mayor, and practically the whole of the Nonconformist ministry. Success has attended all the meetings, and 150 pledges were taken. Not the least interesting meeting was one for under graduates held in Hertford College Hall.

Irish Notes.

A MOTHER'S Home and Crêche costing £500 is to be erected in connection with the Dublin Prison Gate Mission as a memorial to the late Mrs. Alfred Crawford, who was an earnest worker among the outcast and fallen in the city.

In presenting his report to the Belfast Presbytery, Rev. Henry Montgomery said that poverty is not the only cause for non-church going among the masses in Belfast, but that many are indifferent, and that not a few abstain from going to church because they do not want to contribute towards the church's support.

A women's settlement has been established in Crumlin Road, Belfast, under the auspices of the Church of Ireland, with the view of reclaiming from indifference the vast multitudes of the working classes in that city. The secretary is Rev. W. H. Dundas, and many non-resident members help in holding classes, girls' clubs, and visiting; but a number of ladies who will reside in the Home and give all their time to the work are much needed.

Scottish Notes.

THE 109th report of the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland—submitted at the annual meeting recently—showed the number of colporteurs on the staff to be 149. The directors asked serious attention to the financial position. The colportage trade account showed a deficit for the twelve months of £1,955, of which the depository had met £1,050, leaving a debit balance of £905. The chairman was Sir Archibald S. L. Campbell, Bart., of Succoth, and the speakers included Revs. G. C. Douglas (secretary), Dr. Hastings, and James Mursell.

At the recent annual meeting of the Scottish Coast Mission it was reported that at present the staff consists of eleven well-qualified agents, having thirty-four stations under their care. There had been held meetings for adults, in bethels and mission halls, 1,099; meetings in the open air, 286; meetings on shipboard, 115; meetings for the young, 533; visits to ships, 7,312; visits on shore, 22,643; Scriptures sold, at reduced rates, chiefly to foreign seamen, 309; Testaments and Gospels given away, chiefly to foreign seamen, 203; book-bags placed on board vessels, home and foreign, 263; books and magazines given to sailors and fishermen, 34,160; tracts distributed in twelve languages, 71,670; woollen articles given to poor and aged sailors and fishermen, 172. The statement of accounts showed that the income was £1,241 19s. 6d., and the expenditure £1,286 11s. 11d., showing a deficiency of £44 12s. 5d.

"In School and Playground," by G. E. Morgan, M.A. (1s. Morgan & Scott.) "The talks are of an exceedingly interesting kind, and there are many young people who will be glad to listen to them read, or to read them. Teachers of the young will find them suggestive. Taking a chapter for each Sabbath, several months of profitable study would be assured." —The Monthly Evangel.

Liberty or Licence.—The Abbot of Millerace, France, laid the foundation-stone, a few days ago, at Kingsbridge, Devon, of a huge monastery, the cost of which is estimated at £40,000. The building is intended for a number of "the poor monks," Trappists, recently expelled from France, and about forty of them were present. So there, as in other charming spots in the southern counties, these idlers from all useful occupations, whose residence in France has been deemed dangerous to the stability of the State, are planting themselves to accumulate more wealth, and to endeavour to undermine the spiritual and temporal liberties of the land they desire to subordinate to Rome.

About Books.

My Children's Sunday Book. By Rev. Robert Tuck, B.A. (2s. 6d. Melrose.) Here are a score readings for the Christian home circle. The author read them again and again to his children in manuscript, and now he gives parents the opportunity of addressing their little ones in the same helpful and happy words. There are several pictures, also a portrait of the author.

The Ten Travellers, and Other Tales in Prose and Verse, is a capital picture book for the young. The lion, the king of beasts, commands ten animals to disprove the truth of certain proverbs well known among men. These pages, written by S. H. Hamer, and illustrated by H. B. Neilson, give their views and the lion's judgment thereon. The little ones will read this book with great delight. (1s. 6d. Cassells.)

Readers, young and mature, who have followed Rev. Egerton R. Young in his travels, will be glad to make a closer acquaintance with some of his animal friends in My Dogs in the Northland. (2s. 6d. Partridge.) The devotion, usefulness, and marvellous cleverness of these four-footed helpers are delightfully described; and beneath the surface there is an under-current of the deep pathos of the life of privation rejoiced in for Christ's sake by His devoted servant.

Those who have used with advantage Rev. John Mitchell's former volumes of outline addresses, and other helps for preachers and teachers, will have a special interest in Outline Addresses for Children and Young People. (1s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell.) These pages supply hints for thirty-four addresses, dealing with a wide range of topics. There is continual variety and freshness in the treatment, and we observe with satisfaction the presentation of the great spiritual truths from every point of view.

There are many helpful words on a subject of profound importance in Preaching in the New Age. By Albert J. Lyman, D.D. (2s. 6d. net. J. Robinson, 24, Bridge Street, Manchester.) The "new age" is to-day; and in a series of six lectures, delivered in the Hartford Theological Seminary, upon the Carew Foundation, Dr. Lyman says much that should be of service to young preachers. The pages are eminently practical in aim, and the author never leaves the serious side of his subject.

The Church in the House. Prayers for Daily Use Throughout the Year, and for Special Occasions. By Robert J. Golding-Bird, D.D., vicar of St. Bartholomew's, Gray's Inn Road. (5s. net. Shaw.) A handsome volume, giving morning and evening prayers, headed by three Scripture excerpts—a Text, a Divine Promise, and a Condition. The "eloquence" that disfigures some such books is agreeably absent. A spiritual tone is combined with a sense of the true needs of life; hence this is a work which will prove of practical service in the devotions of many a home circle.

At length the New Testament portion of The Century Bible (edited by Professor W. F. Adeney) is completed by the publication of St. Mark, edited by Principal Salmond, of Aberdeen. (2s. net. F. C. and E. C. Jack). These volumes combine usefulness with compactness; and this last reaches the high-water mark of scholarship and general excellence. We notice with interest that plans have been laid for bringing out the books of the Old Testament in uniform style. Each volume gives introduction, the A.V. text, and the R.V. text, with notes. There are also clear maps and full indexes.

Hymns of the Holy Eastern Church, translated from the Service Books, by Rev. John Brownlie, Portpatrick. (3s. 6d. net. Paisley: Alex. Gardner.) In some introductory chapters on the history, doctrine, and worship of the Eastern Church, our author evinces a keen sympathy with his subject; he is an advocate rather than a critic throughout. He has made a judicious selection from the Greek hymnal compositions, and the renderings are such as well sustain the translator's reputation as a sacred poet. Some of the pieces are likely to become familiar in the form in which Mr. Brownlie presents them.

Taking as the one grand essential the sound and evangelical view of the atonement, Rev. Dr. James T. Vance has pointed out in The Rise of a Soul (3s. 6d. James Robinson, Manchester) the broad outlines of the way along which the pilgrim towards Zion is led. The four main divisions are—the prospects of life in obedience to God; the difficulties placed in the way of their accomplishment by sin; the provision made by Christianity for the upward progress; and the summit to be attained. The chapters are characterized by originality of conception and spiritual power. They are written in the language of the people, and are truly fitted to be "a stimulus to personal progress and development."

Uniform with "Elisha," by the same author, Rev. F. S. Webster's excellent pocket volume of Scripture biography, Elijah: The Man of Prayer, will be found attractive and useful from different points of view. The thirteen chapters take up different events or points in the career of the great prophet, and direct attention to the spiritual lessons as those alone can do who have received blessing through the same channel. The reader will be helped to understand what marvellous things one from among the people may be enabled to do by the power of God. There is help and guidance here for the living of the life of pilgrimage and prayer. In the chapter "Caught Up," the application of history to the rapture of the saints will have an interest for many. (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

Among thoughtful pamphlets (1d. each) issued by the Baptist Tract and Book Society, are:—(1) The New Testament Ideal of Church Unity, by Professor Walter Hackney, M.A., a paper read at the Autumnal Meeting of the London Baptist Association, on September 30 last, and printed by request. It is a call to Independent churches to join hands, and thus to realize larger ministry. (2) What Baptists have done for the World, by John Horne (Ayr), a modest rehearsal of facts, gathered from religious, social, and political spheres of activity. (3) Words of Counsel to Young Christians, by Rev. G. D. Hooper (Bournemouth), suggested by an evangelistic mission, and well conceived from beginning to end. The pages will carry help and comfort to many a young convert.

The review of twenty-one years' pioneer work in Central Africa given in Garenganze: West and East, by F. S. Arnot, is full of instances of personal consecration. The carrying of the Gospel into the recesses of the Dark Continent goes forward, though the steps of the way are marked by gravestones. But this simply told though deeply interesting story of the devotion of those who have gone before and some who remain, proves abundantly that God is never without those who will obey at any cost. The eleven messages which make up For Me and Thee, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, touch, in sympathetic and luminous fashion, Christian life and experience at many of the points on which young believers yearn for counsel and guidance. It is an affectionate brother who addresses the reader, and freely uses his own experience for the benefit or others. Much practical and helpful advice in the quest after holiness is given in Consecrated Husks, by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle; and some who have been mistakenly praying for the outpouring of the Spirit will be led to see that the action required is on their part. (1s. each W. G. Wheeler & Co.)

The issue of The Statutory Prayer Book of 1662, under the able editorship of Rev. J. T. Tomlinson and Dr. Charles H. H. Wright (2s. 6d. Sunday School Supply Co., 27, Paternoster Square, E.C.), will meet a want much felt by the Evangelical section of the Church of England. In view of the importance of the matters at stake, it is of the utmost importance that the English people should know what exactly are the "standards" of their national Church. It is a great pity that the dispute whether grace is conveyed or received by the act of participation in either of the sacraments should depend on punctuation; but since it can be shown that the comma in question was in the MS. "Book Annexed" to the Act of 1662, it is surely much to be regretted that it should be omitted from modern editions, and thus allow of doubt where there might be certainty. The variations indicated will be followed with deep interest. Many minute changes have been ignored, the object of the editors being "not a mere slavish reproduction, but to rectify certain unwarranted departures from the Authorized Text which have been relied on for inculcating doctrines and practices foreign to the spirit of the Church of England."

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Rev. Jesse Mayo at Faversham.

WE have been favoured with a visit from Rev. Jesse Mayo for a week, and are thankful to the great Head of the Church for his faithful and helpful ministry. The Bible readings were well attended each afternoon, and much thankfulness expressed for help received. We have been greatly cheered by the numbers who have been brought to decision. Many, we believe, have been saved, and we are looking for further fruit.

(Rev.) George Stanley.

Mr. Bob Johnson in Wales.

This remarkable "minstrel" evangelist paid his first visit to Wales, and conducted a Gospel Temperance Mission at Penarth, near Cardiff, from November 29 to December 7, during which time he addressed eleven meetings, under the auspices of the Local Temperance Federation and P.S.A. Society, assisted by Rev. Tertius Phillips, South Wales superintendent of the United Kingdom Alliance, and others.

At every meeting Mr. Johnson interspersed his address with original selections upon the banjo and guitar. Penarth, a residential town, is not easily moved, but Mr. Johnson, on the Sundays especially, secured large audiences. There are many places in South Wales where the services of the missionary would be highly appreciated, and it is to be hoped that he will be heard of a good deal in the mining and other districts. P.

The Weaver Brothers at Wisbech.

We have just been favoured with a second visit of these missioners. Their previous meetings were most encouraging, and the results proved solid and abiding. The whole town had been well visited, and from the first service the church was crowded. The afternoon Bible talks were largely attended, and were times of refreshing to the workers in the various churches. As the mission proceeded the audiences grew, until on the second Sunday the church was too small for the crowds that gathered. Every night the inquiry-room was filled with seekers. The young life of the church was well represented among the inquirers. Although the week preceding Christmas is an awkward time, on the last night the church was filled to the doors, and the message both in song and speech was in evident power. C.

Rev. E. Davidson at Liverpool.

There has been a gracious work of God at Seaforth, Liverpool, where Rev. Edward Davidson has conducted a mission, which closed on Tuesday, December 16. The Wesleyans had long been looking forward to Mr. Davidson's visit, and elaborate preparations had been made for the mission. A series of addresses or "Revivals" had been given at devotional meetings by the pastor, and the week prior to the opening of the mission was given up to prayer-meetings, which were addressed by the ministers of the circuit. From the first Sunday-evening service there was a continuous stream of inquirers throughout the mission. Mr. Davidson's manner, exposition, appeal, and fertility of illustration and incident, combined to make his sermons and addresses most interesting and impressive. The power of the Holy Spirit was richly manifested throughout the services. The Friday evening service for Christians was a time of great blessing, and the closing service will be long remembered. One delightful feature of the mission was the large number of the elder boys and girls of the Sunday-school who boldly confessed Christ. Several new classes are being formed for the new converts. Valuable help was rendered in open-air work during the mission by the brass band of the Linacre Mission Hall. Temperance work was not forgotten by the evangelist, and a large number of pledges were taken.

Mr. George Clarke at Pembroke Dock.

The mission conducted by Mr. George Clarke at Pembroke Dock, Dec. 6-21, has proved a blessing. There had been no little preparation for the mission. United prayer meetings had been held and there was deep-felt expectancy. The missioner was a complete stranger to the town, but his good works in other places were "manifest beforehand." The need of the mission was felt specially in the interest of the young men of the town. The conviction that these would be reached proved to be well founded, for scores were won for Christ, A large number of young women, also, have given their hearts to the Saviour, and not a few older persons. Mr. Clarke appealed both to the intellect and the heart. His illustrations were apt and his statements of doctrine clear. In addition to the evangelistic addresses, "Bible Talks" were given, which proved helpful to believers.

It is fully expected that, in all, between 300 and 400 persons will be added to the churches as the fruit of the mission. The evangelistic gatherings were held in Wesley Church, and the Bible talks and prayer meetings in the Baptist and Presbyterian churches. All the ministers took part, as well as a great number of church officers and Sunday-school teachers. Each evening a mission band went through various parts of the town, singing and announcing the services. The whole town has been moved. Ministers are active in taking charge of the converts, and it has been decided to continue the united prayer meetings.

(Rev.) W. Evans.

Mr. William Forbes gave addresses at Leeds on Sunday last in Y.M.C.A. Hall, and in Lees Hall. He is now conducting meetings in the provinces for the pantomime women.

Rev. John Robertson, LL.D., of Glasgow, has gone to America on an Evangelistic tour in connection with a forward movement of the Presbyterian Church. He has arranged for Rev. John Mitchell, author of "Silver Tongues," &c., to conduct a special mission in Glasgow from the 11th to the 25th January.

Mr. James Wharton has just closed a week's meetings in Hillsboro', N.C. The members of the different churches have had great spiritual blessing, especially the young Christians. This is Mr. Wharton's fourth visit to the town. A large majority of the Church members are converts of his, of previous years, and his visits to these Southern churches are among their red-letter days. B. C. Beecham.

An eight weeks' mission, conducted by Pilgrims of the Faith Mission, Rothesay, has just concluded at Billymarlow, Ballymena, Ireland. Probably at no meetings in this district since 1859, have there been so many decisions for Christ. Many of the younger people, especially young men, have been led to accept Christ as their Saviour, and have taken a bold stand for Him. Christians in the district have been greatly strengthened and encouraged, and the cause of Christ generally has received a great impetus. J. A.

Mr. Newton Jones has just concluded a ten days' mission in the Town Hall, Kidderminster, under the auspices of the local Sunday School Union. The boys' and girls' meetings were crowded, especially on the Sunday afternoons, when some were turned away for want of room. Mr. Jones is a forcible speaker and an earnest pleader for Christ, and the interest in the meetings was well sustained. Eighty boys and girls signed decision cards, and fifty young men and women also professed to find the Saviour. A feature of the mission was a meeting for young men and boys only, when Mr. Jones urged the claims of the Anti-Cigarette League.

A ten days' special mission has been conducted at the Central Mission Hall, King Edward Street, Grimsby, by Mr. J. Westwood, of Cleethorpes, from December 14 to 23. The Hall is situated in a very poor neighbourhood; of late it has gone through many changes, its members being scattered here and there. Eighteen months ago it was taken in hand by Mr. F. H. Mapplebeck, a Wesleyan, who with a few of the old members have been carrying on the work. The visit of Mr. Westwood, who has worked earnestly, has been made a blessing to many, both in the open air and at the Hall. He has also visited many homes.

A three week's mission has been concluded at Barnsbury Chapel, N., by Mr. Leonard Weaver, and with very encouraging results. The old building, scantily attended for so long, has been filled by the crowds that flocked to hear the evangelist. Scores have publicly confessed their trust in Christ. Workers have been kept busy dealing with special cases. A man and five of his family were converted in one of the tent missions of last year, leaving four of the same circle unsaved. All of these have been brought in during the Barnsbury mission, and the father's testimony to the Lord's exceeding goodness in this respect provoked tears of gratitude and pæans of happy praise. The victory recorded is the result of sustained and strenuous effort. Early morning meetings for prayer, night marches around the district, are some of the methods which have borne precious fruit. J. N. G.

Mr. A. T. Towers (of the Evangelization Society) has just concluded a series of special services in three different places, but in the same locality—Thurlston, Penistone, and Ingbirchworth. Mr. Towers had been to Thurlston last year, when he had a most encouraging time, over fifty deciding for Christ. His second mission has also been a success, the chapel being well filled night by night, and sometimes crowded to its utmost capacity; as in the previous mission, we realized the presence of the Lord. At Penistone and Ingbirchworth, also, good work was done, which "that day" alone shall declare. There has been much enthusiasm on the part of the people, who, having received blessing in one place, followed and helped the missioner in the next. The Word was faithfully declared, and with much power and attractiveness. The results were great; some we saw; other fruit of these services we shall find in days to come. F.

Mr. G. R. Cairns, who is on an evangelistic tour in the United States, conducted a series of meetings at Spokane, when the place was deeply stirred. A correspondent writes: "A saloon keeper was converted, and his saloon closed. A prominent opera singer has also been brought to Christ and his voice is now given to singing of redeeming grace. At McMinnville, Oregon, many students were among the seekers. Boise City, Idaho, followed, and there, too, there was much encouragement. At the two last-mentioned centres Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the blind singers, gave valuable help. These friends, so well-known in London, are making a tour of the States, and God is greatly blessing their visits to the unconverted. Omaha, Neb., followed with marked results, and then came a gracious work in Des Moines, Ia. Mr. Cairns is proceeding to Los Angeles and other cities, and hopes to return to England for a mission at Dr. Barnardo's "Edinburgh Castle," in May.

The Life of Chundra Lela,

By ADA LEE. With an Introduction by the Right Hon. LORD KINNAIRD.

In Art Canvas Boards, with sixteen full-page Illustrations, specially prepared for this work. 1s. 6d. net.

At the early age of seven, Chundra Lela was married, in great pomp and magnificence, to the only son of another branch of the priesthood. Two years later, her husband died. She remained in her father's house until she was thirteen years old. She learned to read her own language, and also Sanskrit. Her father, being a learned man, was her teacher.

On her first pilgrimage, her father, as he was dying, said: "My child, I must leave you. Here is a bunch of keys; when you reach home, open the chests and boxes to which they belong, and what you find is yours, left you by your husband."

She took the keys, and with a sad heart watched her father die. Soon his body was burned to ashes, and then she was alone. Gloomy and cast down, she returned with some fellow-pilgrims to her own land.

She spent the following year in the close study of her sacred books. She determined she would do everything laid down in the sacred books of the Hindus.

She made herself a long narrow bag, and going to her boxes, took out from them the gold left her by her husband. Filling the bag she bound it about her waist.

She then selected two trusty maid-servants, and confided to them her secret. They consented to take the journey with her. Two brothers and sisters, with her stepmother, were asleep in the house on the night this young girl stole away, and began that awful journey in search of God.—Extract from "An Indian Priestess."

Welsh Notes.

THE aggression of Roman Catholics in North Wales continues to be most marked. Their latest opening is at Newtown, Montgomeryshire. In this case the initiation is due to the presence of a Roman Catholic family in the neighbourhood.

Considerable interest has been taken in Anglesea in a discussion which has just taken place in the Holyhead Board of Guardians. The discussion was occasioned by an offer from a local clergyman—Rev. D. Price—to christen the children of the workhouse. Ultimately the Board decided that the local ministers should co-operate to administer baptism to the children.

The statistical returns of the various Nonconformist bodies in the Principality are now complete. On the whole, they are decidedly satisfactory. The Congregationalists head the list with an increase of 2,439 in membership; the Calvinistic Methodists come next with an increase of 2,219; the Baptists have gained in membership by 1,806; the Wesleyans by 131. The increase among the Calvinistic Methodists is made up of 800 from the Welsh and 1,419 from the English congregations.

The moral condition of Carnarvon and district is so serious that it has caused three well-known ministers to take steps to draw the attention of the Nonconformist bodies to the matter with the view of doing something by way of agitation and reform. As a first step a conference of Christian workers is to be held at Carnarvon early in January. A deputation will also appear before the magistrates of the county, and will urge them to make investigations—as has been done at Farnham—in order that the number of licences may be reduced.

At last meeting of the Executive Committee of the Welsh Forward Movement, the superintendent—Rev. J. Pugh, D.D., of Cardiff—submitted his report for 1902. The facts of greatest interest and importance were the opening of a fine new hall in Wrexham and the extension of the work to England. This year, at least three new halls are to be opened at Cilfynydd, Barry Island, and Pontypool. There is every probability that a response will be made to the appeals sent from South Africa, and that mission centres will be established to meet the spiritual needs of the Welsh people resident there.

The half-yearly meetings of the West Glamorgan Baptists were held this year at Penclawdd. Among the most important conferences was one on Sunday-school work and another on Temperance. At the former a paper was read by Rev. W. A. Williams, Blaengarw, on "Hints to teachers, and the best way to secure order and impart instruction in our Sunday-schools." It is announced that Rev. T. Morgan, Scriven, Glamorganshire, is shortly going to undertake a preaching tour in the United States.

The half-yearly meetings of the South Wales Women's Temperance Union have just taken place at Treherbert, Glamorganshire. Several important conferences and public meetings were held, at which leading temperance reformers took part. Among these latter was Rev. J. Rees, of Pontycymmer, one of the most earnest workers for temperance in South Wales, and a statement made by him at the meetings will prove how the drink traffic is cursing even Wales. In the Garn Valley—a populous mining valley in Mid-Glamorgan—Mr. Rees counted one night recently no fewer than 281 persons coming out of one public-house under the influence of drink.

Personalia.

Miss Mason is still in much weakness, and requiring constant attendance and most careful nursing; but, through God's mercy, recovery has commenced, and the doctor's latest bulletin is that "She continues to improve."

Mr. Philip R. Hurditch, though not out of danger, continues to make progress towards recovery. His father, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, is now in good health, and is able actively to carry forward the work of the Evangelistic Mission.

Church of England.

The Church Missionary Society has received an anonymous benefaction of £1,000 from "M.C.," and a gift of £500 from Captain J. Cundy.

Mr. W. H. Newett, for twenty-one years secretary of the Manchester branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, has resigned his office. The Bishop of Manchester has ordained him deacon, and licensed him to the curacy of St. Edmund in that city.

In 1820 the Church Missionary Society had only two unmarried women on its roll of missionaries; at the present time there are about 380, of whom eight are fully qualified doctors, twenty-five are trained nurses, and the remainder are engaged in educational or evangelistic work.

The Bishop of Durham has written a letter bidding godspeed to the Sunday School Union, in view of its approaching centenary. He concludes his letter: "May it be used greatly in the future to the promotion, in the grave and growing need of our time, of the faith and fear of God in Christ in the coming generation."

Rev. M. Sweetnam, Vicar of St. Mark's, Victoria Park, has accepted the rectory of Bidborough, near Tunbridge Wells. Mr. Sweetnam will be much missed in East London, where he has done much excellent work. He has been Vicar of St. Mark's since 1884, and he has thoroughly earned such measure of rest as this new appointment will afford him.

In the course of an interesting letter to The Times, on dealing with law-breaking clergy, the Bishop of Liverpool says:—"If, by a simple and inexpensive process, the clergy who are seeking to Romanize the Church of England could be deprived of their benefices, the evil, which is as much deprecated by the great majority of the clergy as it is by the laity, would be removed."

Rev. W. H. Davies has issued his annual report on the work of the church in the parish of Spitalfields. In a preliminary letter he asks: "Where else can be found so many Jewish parishioners? Or so large a common lodging-house accommodation? Or so extensive a system of 'furnished rooms'? Or so many beds in free shelters? In what other parish will you find nearly 25,000 people dwelling together upon seventy-two acres of ground? Where else than here would you find such items as the following in a summary of a year's admissions into a Poor Law infirmary: Admissions from their own or friends' homes, 850; from shelters, 633; from lodging-houses, 2,287; homeless persons not enumerated above, 891—making a total of 4 661?" Mr. Davies adds: "It is a difficult and discouraging parish in which to work; and there are times when we are tempted to flee from it for ever. Then we grow ashamed of ourselves when we think of the manifold encouragements which it has pleased God to give us from time to time."

Baptist.

Rev. E. G. Gange has closed his long and fruitful ministry at Regent's Park Chapel, N.W.

At the East London Tabernacle on Christmas morning Pastor Edwin H. Ellis, with a staff of helpers, received gifts for the Orphan Home associated with the church. A sum of £184 was brought in. Most of the orphan children were present at this interesting gathering.

A church has been formed at Godalming, Surrey, with Rev. A. A. Harmer as pastor. Services have been held for about two and a half years under the auspices of the Pioneer Mission and the Home Counties Association. Since Mr. Harmer has taken over the work considerable progress has been made. The erection of a building will be proceeded with at once.

The reports presented at the annual meeting of the Herbert Street Mission Church, East Nottingham, on December 1, showed a steady progress of work, and a deepening of the spiritual life of the church. Very encouraging addresses were given by Revs. George Hill and J. Gay, and recognition was made of the long and faithful services of Mr. Phillimore, the choirmaster. The proceeds of an appeal for the New Building Fund amounted to £66 15s. 10d.

The annual church meeting of the Tabernacle, Upper Parkstone, has just been held, when, remembering that only eleven years ago the church was formed with twenty-four members, it was interesting and gratifying to note the large attendance and the enthusiasm and unanimity of the members who rallied round their pastor, Rev. R. Boyd Morrison. The Sunday-school has nearly 300 scholars, the Band of Hope, the Christian Endeavour, the Tract Society, and the open-air missioners are all doing good work.

The Church at Lake Road, Portsmouth, has adopted a novel scheme for paying off the debt on the new church in London Road, which has just been completed. It is estimated that the outstanding liability is £8,000, which has been divided into 16,000 shares of ten shillings each, and every member of the church and congregation at the two chapels, above the age of fifteen, is asked to take some of these shares. They are to be redeemable by instalments. Everybody will thus take a reasonable share of the responsibility and the gradual, but certain, extinction of the debt is assured.

The annual statistical returns, as furnished to the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, show that (including the Channel Islands), there are now 2,803 churches, with 3,961 places of worship, as compared with 2,747 churches and 4,012 places of worship a year ago. There is an increase in sitting accommodation for 6,121 persons. The church membership has increased from 372,998 to 377,747, a net gain of 4,749. Nearly 300 churches have failed to send in returns, and of their membership no estimate is made. The Baptist churches are served by 2,072 pastors, assisted by 5,440 local preachers. In the Sunday schools there are 53,549 teachers and 542,336 scholars.

Methodist.

The purchase of the Westminster Aquarium will be completed on January 31, and on February 2 Mr. Perks will preside at a great Methodist "commemoration meeting" in the building. The work of pulling down the Aquarium will begin within twelve hours after the meeting ends.

For some time the members of the Bible Christian church at Petten, Devon, have met for devotional purposes in a disused railway carriage. A proper chapel is now being erected, but the old carriage is to be continued to be used as a Sunday-school.

The Methodist Times states that "the services at St. James' Hall, and all the other halls of the West London Mission, are keeping up splendidly. On each of the last two Sunday nights, Rev. C. Ensor Walters has preached and conducted the services. On both occasions, not only has the large hall been crowded long before the time for the commencement of the service, but the overflow services have also filled the large room of the Architects' Society, and even then people have been turned away.

Swindon Primitive Methodist Second Circuit is having much encouragement under the ministry of Rev. James Dobson. To meet the religious needs of a growing neighbourhood an eligible site for church and school has been secured in Manchester Road. The trustees decided to erect the school first, and already sixty scholars are in attendance. Rev. Jos. Odell (ex-President of the Conference) preached the opening sermon. The cost, including furniture, will be about £1,100, and towards this amount over £400 has been raised.

A large social hall has long been a pressing need of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Wesleyan Mission. Premises have now been erected in Clarence Street, which provide sitting accommodation for more than 400 people, with class-rooms and vestries. "They are comfortable and bright enough,' says a Newcastle paper, "to form a potent counter attraction to the places from which men get very little good, and should become a social rallying point of considerable value to the many thousands of people who dwell in the neighbourhood."

A year ago work was begun in a spiritually destitute village, Clock Face, Widnes, by Mr. George Cook, who was sent by Rev. Thos. Champness. Day by day Mr. Cook visited from house to house, awakened the interest of the children, and commenced a Sunday-school on a plot of grass by the roadside. A service was arranged in the waiting-room at the railway station, a great number of persons manifested a desire to attend public worship, and a cottage was rented until more suitable premises could be provided. The work has grown and become consolidated. Feeling keenly the need of more ample and comfortable accommodation, the villagers have commenced to raise funds, and hope to erect a chapel.

Presbyterian.

The Manchester Presbytery has appointed a standing committee to deal with the question of leakage from church membership.

The first anniversary of the resuscitated congregation at Eccles has been held in the Co-operative Hall. It was reported that the congregation has made satisfactory progress, and over eighty members have been enrolled.

Society of Friends.

The quarterly meeting held at Gloucester had the company of a deputation of seven members of Home Mission Committee, whose visit was most welcome and opportune. The deputation had a considerable share in the various engagements. At the meeting on Ministry and Oversight, Mr. A. Wallis read a paper on the Preparation for the Ministry. A conference followed, for Friends to meet the deputation, when much seasonable advice was given.

By invitation of the local branch of the Friends' Temperance Union, a conference was held recently at Gloucester. Mary H. Seekings presided at the morning session, when the subject discussed was "Prospective and Recent Temperance Legislation." Speaking of the Licensing Act, which comes into force on January 1, 1903, John Hilton expressed the view that it would prove of more importance than even some of its promoters expected, though immeasurably short of the grave necessities of the case. The meeting also expressed the opinion that the public-house Trust movement, far from fulfilling the Temperance aims of many of its promoters, should be opposed as likely to prove a serious obstacle in the path of Temperance progress. The conference concluded with Theodore Neild's lecture on "The Action of Alcohol on the Mental Faculties, as Indicated by Recent Research."

Salvation Army.

There are now 201 homes and agencies connected with the Army's social work in the United States of America.

Nearly 1,200 of H.M. soldiers and sailors are also soldiers of the Salvation Army, and members of its Naval and Military League.

The crew of the Army's Norwegian lifeboat has assisted twenty-nine vessels in distress during the past year; 119 meetings were held among the fishermen of the Norwegian coasts.

In the interesting report of the mission church, upper room, Orient Street, Heyworth Street, Everton, just issued by Pastor James Heap, there is a record of good work. Deep impressions have been made both on young and old in the Gospel services, while the Bible classes are largely attended, and the open-air meetings are particularly effective. "The realization of our ideal as a Mission church that every member should become a missionary in his or her sphere of life, has come nearer attainment this year than in any previous one, and the result is apparent in several who are now under the power of the Gospel."

The Lighthouse Mission is a well-known institution situated in George Street, Camberwell, S.E., and conducted by an earnest band of working men and women whose hearts the Lord has touched, and who devote their spare time in trying to rescue the perishing. The good work has been carried on for nineteen years, and many men and women who once were a terror in the neighbourhood in which they lived have just reason to thank God for ever being brought under the sound of the Gospel. The annual report tells of a hearty continuance of the good work. The hon. superintendent is Mr. R. R. Blewer, 12, Elmington Road, Camberwell, S.E.

A correspondent writes: "The Town Mission at Hyde made remarkable progress during the year that has just closed. Since the opening of the new Tabernacle on October 5, a blessed soul-winning work has been, and still is, progressing. Whole families, including men and women who have spent months in gaol, are among the converts. Other phases of this undenominational work comprise services in mission halls and cottages, visitation, a thriving Sunday school, and open-air preaching, while there is a Bible carriage and stall for the sale of religious literature. The Police Court Mission is also flourishing, and has received official commendation. Towards the cost of the building, and seating (£520), and for the working expenses of the cause, special efforts are being put forth. The pastor is Mr. John B. Lomas, Town Missionary, Hyde, Lancs."

Over 6,000 poor men, women, and children sleep under our roofs nightly, each being pointed to Christ for salvation, and all contributing by pence or labour to the cost of their own reclamation. Yet we are turning many away in their distress through lack of means. Our Slum Sisters report the most harrowing poverty among the Poor through lack of employment, and the high prices of coal and food. Will you please send me something to lighten the burden of as many as possible?

At Home and Abroad no less than 7,641,775 meals and 4,398,854 lodgings were supplied to Destitute people last year. 5,850 Women were received into our Rescue Homes, of whom 4,916 left as satisfactory. We specially need assistance NOW for our Midnight Free Relief Depots, Prison Gate Work and Men's Homes, Women's Homes, Inebriates' and Children's Homes, and Hadleigh Colony. Fallen Asleep.

Rev. GEORGE BOGGIS, Wesleyan Methodist Minister at St. Just, to which circuit he was appointed for a second term only at the last Conference. Mr. Boggis had a paralytic seizure while attending a missionary meeting at Trewellard, and remained unconscious until the end. He entered the ministry in 1866, Norwich being his first circuit.—The death has occurred, at the age of eighty-six, of Rev. CHARLES DENNISS, for upwards of thirty years pastor of Reading Street Baptist Church, Broadstairs.—At Woodburn, Carrickfergus, Mr. THOS. GIRVAN, an earnest Christian man and a devoted member of the Methodist Church, aged eighty-three years.—At Glencarne, near Boyle, Rev. CHAS. BURTON, rector of Bective, co. Meath, for nearly fifty years, in his eighty-third year.—At Moville, co. Donegal, Rev. T. B. SWANZY, for several years the highly-esteemed curate of Moville.—Mr. THOS. COOKE TRENCH, D.L., of Millicent, co. Kildare, who has been called away in his seventy-third year. Mr. Trench was never ashamed to let it be known that religion was the only motive of his life. He assisted in the restoration of the cathedral at Kildare and he built at his own expense the handsome parish church at Clave. He was one of the largest contributors in Ireland to foreign missions, and he was a liberal supporter of nearly every good cause.—Mr. HENRY BROWNE, J.P., T.C., aged eighty-two years, a devoted member of the Methodist Church, and one of the oldest teetotallers and temperance workers in Ireland. He was a member of the Dublin Town Council, and although nearly always, as a Protestant, found voting with the minority, he never was ashamed of his principles, and was held in the highest esteem even by his opponents.—On December 1, in his sixty-second year, Mr. ALBERT EVERETT, of Ipswich. He was for more than twenty years a reader of this paper.—At Londonderry, on December 29, Rev. Dr. McCAW, who was for many years minister of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Manchester, and afterwards of the Scottish Church, St. Helier, Jersey. Dr. McCaw, who was in his eighty-fourth year, was clerk to the English Presbyterian Church Synod.

Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander. By the time these lines reach our readers, we trust Dr. R. A. Torrey and Mr. C. M. Alexander will be with us. Many have awaited their coming with warm interest, and much prayer has ascended to God for blessing upon their work. On page 22 we give some particulars of the arrangements made for the welcome meeting to be held on Friday at Exeter Hall.

"The Christian" Abroad. We are continually receiving letters from missionaries and other workers abroad expressing a wish to receive THE CHRISTIAN week by week. Home readers also write from time to time offering to post copies to ministers and other workers in the United Kingdom, as well as in foreign lands. We need not say that it will give us great pleasure to furnish addresses to friends willing thus to cheer and help workers who otherwise cannot procure the paper. This method, however, makes the delivery a week late. "He gives twice who gives quickly." It would double the boon if copies were subscribed for and sent direct from this office on the day of publication.

A Grand Effort. The coming Centenary of the Sunday School Union will be of untold benefit in drawing public attention to a movement which has had an influential share in the development of the religious life of these islands. The house-to-house visitation to be organized throughout the land, with the object of adding a million new scholars to the six and a quarter millions already attending the Sunday-schools, is a noble project. There is no reason why, with the blessing of God, it should not be signally successful, as there are at least two millions of children who have not yet been gathered in. Meanwhile, there is room for individual Christians to anticipate the general crusade, by personal effort to reduce the number of young people whose Sunday might be better spent, and who might easily be brought under ennobling and soul-saving influences, to the glory of Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me."

Ready Servants. Amongst the striking and profound illustrations which so strongly characterize Dr. Alexander McLaren's presentation of the Gospel, there are some which stand out as models of aptness and brevity, and which may be looked upon as being just what such similes should be. Thus he exhorts to prompt recognition of God's commandments in our daily lives :—

> Like the sailor at the tiller, the Christian answers his Captain's directions by repeating them. "Port!" says the captain. "Port it is!" says the steersman. "Seek ye My face." "Thy face will I seek." The correspondence in words means the correspondence in action, and in thoroughgoing obedience.

The Cup and the Fountain. Augustine once said of Faustus, the great Manichæan, who was to answer all his doubting questions, "The butler was most elegant, and the goblet was most costly, but my thirst remained." This is as true to-day of all attempted substitutes and alternatives for the Gospel as in that far-off time. The philosophers who serve up the goblet of agnostic thought, of secularist and anti-Christian socialism, may have elegant styles and much learning, and the systems which they advocate may be very complete and elaborate, but they leave the soul as thirsty and desolate as before. Augustine had drained the cups of philosophy and sensual pleasures dry by the age of thirty, and his mind was plunged in despair when at last the voice came to him in the garden, "Tolle, lege" (take and read). Then instantly "his thirst was quenched, his soul revived," and he lived for Christ in happiest satisfaction of his spiritual needs to the end of a long and happy life. "The fountain of living water" is as unspent on the first day of 1903 as when it first broke forth.

Lost on the March. There is more truth than many are willing to admit in the statement made at a recent conference that many church members and church attendants drop out of relation to the church at the time of their removal from one town to another—they are "lost on the march." The sense of strangeness has something to do with this, as also has a light attachment to higher things. This could be largely remedied by a little prudent care on the side of the church parting with such people. If, when they are missed, their whereabouts could be discovered, and notice of their removal sent on to the other town, they might at once be searched out and welcomed to another church. A little Christian attention of this kind works wonders.

A Rule for the Lord's Day. Dealing in the current number of The Quiver with one of the phrases of current irreligion, "The Neglect of Sunday," Archdeacon Sinclair makes a strong appeal to the "men and women of pleasure" in regard to the great institution of the Sabbath, and beseeches them to have some consideration for those whose lot it is to minister to their pleasures. There is, however, one point in the admirable paper which has even a wider bearing, and in that one the Archdeacon lays it down as a broad principle that the individual rule should be not to employ any single person unnecessarily on the Lord's Day. "Plain and simple fare, few courses, and as little trouble as possible," is a good regulation for Sundays as for other days, and its adoption would lead to a higher standard of observance of the Sabbath in the homes even of many professedly Christian families. Herein may we fulfil our Master's words—"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

The new Licensing Bill. With the New Year the Licensing Act came into force, and there can be no doubt that generally it will "make for righteousness." Perhaps one of its most striking features is that, for the first time, it constitutes drunkenness a crime, and deals drastically with the habitual drunkard, and with the drink-seller who shall attempt to debase him or her still further, also with those who, while intoxicated, carry about their children. Doubtless, however, the most important clauses are those which deal with clubs of every class, and these should go far to extinguish the bogus places which, dignified under the name of clubs, are simply drinking shops, and gambling dens, and worse. Various Temperance societies are taking active steps to disseminate knowledge of the provisions of the new measure, and it is hoped that individual Christians will do all they can in their various districts to see that the beneficial clauses are duly enforced, and thus diminish the causes which keep men away from God.

Licensed Sabbath Breaking. The terrible drink question is being continually emphasized, and the Christian duty of individual action against the growing evils has been insisted upon—with what effect? Outside the Christian Church there is a feeling developing that the traffic must be regulated into something resembling decency; but the great work of limitation, if not suppression, will sooner or later have to be done by men and women whose combined action is primarily for Christ. Why should not the united Churches speak out for Sunday Closing? That question at any rate is ripe, and it is a simple one after all, for why should we have stringent legislation against the baker and the grocer while the publican and the ginshop keeper have State sanction to set forth the degrading attractions of their traffic on the Lord's Day.

Drink-making Monks. The Roman Catholic Press finds a grievance in the fact that M. Combes has aptly described the Carthusian Order in France as "a princely business concern masquerading in the name of religion," and "paying a tax of a million francs to Propaganda." It is possible that, as one of our Roman Catholic contemporaries has said, France may be pecuniarily poorer for the loss of "La Grande Chartreuse," but the real point of the difficulty is that those orders which are permitted to remain in the country must submit themselves to the laws which govern ordinary civil life. So, too, in Spain, both political parties seem alike determined to oppose the growth of monastic institutions, and to leave to the parochial priests alone the task of dealing with the Spanish people. This healthier state of things in the two Continental countries forces the (Roman) Catholic Times to remark :—

> At this rate there will soon be not one single country in Europe, except Great Britain, where the monks and nuns can obtain sure foothold."

How earnestly could we wish that Great Britain were not the exception.

Rome and the Press. Our contemporary, the Methodist Times, publishes a remarkable letter from a novelist in Rome—himself a Roman Catholic—respecting the manipulation of the English Press by agents of the Vatican. The writer wishes his letter to be made public so that Englishmen may know what is going on. He makes it clear that every honest criticism of the methods of the Vatican is discounted and doctored by reviewers and others, who are pledged at all costs to uphold the Ultramontane party. Writing as a member of the Roman Communion, this novelist disclaims any attempt to attack his religion, but he openly avows that his intention has been, and is, to expose "a political and financial Tammany masquerading in the name and under the protection of" religion. This Tammany it is which "threatens the peace and the progress of the world." The charges made by Protestants concerning the capture of the Press by Roman agents have been made sport of again and again by Jesuits and others. What will they say to this trenchant exposure by one of their own writers?

The Broil in Morocco. The fierce conflict in Morocco seems to be due to fanatical rebellion against the march of Western ideas into a land for ages abandoned to retrogressive movement. The Sultan, like the Shah of Persia, sees that his country needs the infusion of new blood if it is ever to revive; and, so far as he has been able, within a limited area, he has welcomed changes introduced from Europe. The fanatics resent this, and the result is the present broil. It would seem as if Europe's opportunity to step in were nigh at hand. The sympathy of civilization is undoubtedly with the Sultan, and Europe cannot permit the triumph of the rebellious troops. If cool-headed common-sense is allowed to sway the action of the Powers, the "blot upon Europe" may soon be wiped away, and by means of the railway and mines, the whole country be opened up. In the accounts given by the daily journals of affairs in Morocco, we should like to see a more just recognition of the splendid part taken by the missionaries for the weal of this sad country. The hospitals and medical work have accomplished untold good in introducing the Gospel light amongst the people.

The War with Disease. The new Sanitary Commission for the city of Paris has drawn up certain regulations for the prevention of disease, and these are to be enforced by municipal authority. There are one or two items we might with advantage take note of for use in our great centres of population. That, for example, which compels builders to observe health conditions from roof to basement is a wise and necessary measure. The Parisian authorities touch the house in detail, and not en bloc, so that the chances of contamination are greatly reduced. And in cases of actual infection there is the most rigid provision made for complete disinfection. The rapid spread of small pox and other diseases from town to town in England shows that there is a serious defect in disinfecting methods at present. Appalling ignorance on these matters exists amongst the people. One of the chief needs of the day is instruction, to be given to the people upon the elementary principles of health and disease, as an adjunct to a strong body and a sound mind.

The Free Library. A writer in the Daily News, dealing with the question of the working and results of the Municipal Free Libraries, points out the undoubted advantages which have followed the establishment of such institutions. He also notes, however, the somewhat startling fact that 65 per cent. of the books issued by these libraries are of the low fiction kind. Recently two books were asked for at one of these institutions. One, a "serious" book, likely to be of great value to any thoughtful reader, had been issued only once in some years, and was perfectly clean; the other, a novel of the depraved type and immoral tendency, was positively grimy, so continuously had it been in circulation. The moral is obvious, and it is desirable that local Christian influence should be brought to bear upon committees of management with a view to lessening the purchase and distribution of injurious literature at the public expense, and aiding in the moral growth of the youth of our land.

The Undesirable Alien. We should be very sorry if England ever forfeited her reputation as a free country, whose doors are open to men of every nation. It has been our boast that the system of espionage and passports, common in most countries, has no place amongst us. And yet it is evident that the word "free" will have to be redefined and emphasized in face of the alien invasion of undesirables. A public peril is created by the presence amongst us of foreign idlers who have been chased from their own countries. They take to forging and other forms of criminality, and so exploit our countrymen to their own advantage. Besides those who become criminals, there is a vast number of foreign beggars and idlers whose presence is morally and socially ruinous. Without resorting to harshness, there ought to be some way of preventing this wholesale invasion of foreign paupers and criminals. A Royal Commission is already dealing with the question, and we hope some strong steps may be taken to reform matters.

The Post Office and Gambling. While it is illegal to use the Post Office as a vehicle for transmitting material for gambling purposes, there seems to be at present little prospect that anything will be done to bring to account the English and foreign scoundrels who abuse the Postal institution as they do. The Postmaster General says he can do nothing. We think the British public might help him to do something. It would not be difficult for those who receive advertisements of lotteries, &c., to dispatch them to St. Martin's-le-Grand, so that communications from abroad in that handwriting might be stopped and examined. It would mean a little trouble, but it would be well worth that. The same thing applies to the pornographic literature which is circulated through the post. Surely it would not be difficult to trace these circulars to their senders. That done, the police would do the rest. And for the sake of our sons and daughters the work needs doing immediately.

A Critical Bubble Burst. The peculiar theory of Professor Schmiedel, in his article on the Gospels, published as part of the "Encyclopædia Biblica," has received a drastic exposure at the hands of Professor Jannaris, the eminent Greek scholar, in an article in the current Contemporary Review. Dr. Jannaris completely pricks the Schmiedel bubble regarding the Fourth Gospel, by showing that the passage from Eusebius, upon which the latter bases his opinion, has been incorrectly translated by him, and that Eusebius says the exact opposite of what is attributed to him. Of course, the foundation of the critical error concerning the Fourth Gospel is thus destroyed. It is, no doubt, most humiliating for one who has been lauded to the skies by an "advanced" section of critics to be caught tripping in a simple matter of translation. It should be a greater humiliation for any man to reflect that he has tried to build up a system on so slender a basis as a stray sentence. And what shall we say of those who greedily accept any new opinion hostile to the Gospels, and spread airy notions as if they were solid facts? Not so are souls built up on their most holy faith.

The Triune God.

THAT "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh" is a law of nature, and is true of the creature because it is true of the Creator. God must reveal Himself. "The only-begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father . . . the Word made flesh . . . He hath revealed Him." "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." And as the Son reveals the Father, so the Spirit reveals the Son: "The Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, He shall testify of Me." "He shall glorify Me, for He shall take of Mine, and shall show it unto you." This was not a new function of the Spirit, true only of New Testament times. Just as in earth's earliest ages the delights of Wisdom, the Son, the Word, were found in revealing Jehovah (who was daily His delight) to the sons of men—so the Spirit rejoiced in those earliest ages to reveal the Son, the Man who is the Prototype of man. In the first human being He foreshadowed the Son, who is the Ish and the Isha in one Person. And all through the events which He impelled holy men of God to record in Scripture, He was anticipating, in history, and type, and prophecy, the words of Jesus: "He shall take of Mine, and shall show it unto you."

HOW THE SPIRIT IS HONOURED.

Many devout souls are exercised by the desire to honour the Spirit, and they think to do so by praying to and testifying of the Spirit. Some even speak of preaching the Spirit. How, then, are we to honour the Spirit? Just as in the days of His flesh Jesus was honoured by those who listened to Him as the Messenger of the Father, and obeyed His message, so the Spirit is honoured by those who receive Him as the Messenger of the risen and ascended Lord, and obey His testimony.

Jesus sought not His own glory, but the glory of Him that sent Him. He came in His Father's name, and they who received Him not, dishonoured the Father who sent Him. In like manner, the Spirit is sent by the ascended and glorified Son, and is honoured only so far as His testimony to the Son, through the written Word and the preaching of the Gospel, is believed and obeyed.

Neither the Son nor the Spirit seeks a personal glory apart from the glory due to the Triune God. When Jesus prayed, "Father, glorify Thy Son," it was "that Thy Son also may glorify Thee." That was the all-inclusive purpose for which He came. That is the ultimate purpose of His high-priestly ministry in heaven and of the Holy Spirit's ministry on earth.

We truly worship the Son and the Spirit, then, and only then, when we worship God—Father, Son, and Spirit—one God. The Spirit testifies of Jesus; Jesus died and rose to bring us to God. If we honour the Son, it is as the Sent One of the Father. If we honour the Spirit, it is as the Promise of the Father, received from the Father and sent forth by the Son of His love. M.

On "THE LION AND HIS PREY."—I.

GREAT and terrible persecution had arisen against the early Church. Nero was doing his utmost to tear the name of Jesus from the breast of every friend He had, that it might never be heard in all the earth again. The roaring lion, was walking about, seeking whom he might devour.

Following the example of their Master, the Apostles drew some of their most important lessons from earthly objects and events with which they and their hearers were familiar. By an allusion to the Roman games, Paul stimulated his converts to "fight," to "run," to "wrestle," to put on "armour," &c.; and Peter declared that, if faithful, they would receive "the crown of glory" that fadeth not away.

During his stay in Rome, Peter would also have heard of (if not seen) the bloody encounters between the gladiators and wild beasts in the amphitheatre. Multitudes, too, of innocent victims were, for their faithfulness to Christ, thrown by Nero's commands into these arenas, to be the prey of the lions there confined. So numerous, indeed, were the victims, that the ferocious brutes were more than satiated; gorged with their prey, they would then sleep, and, on awaking, with growls and roars would prowl about to seek again the choicest portions unconsumed. This clothes with fearful meaning the Apostle's words when he says: "Your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour" (1 Peter v. 8).

It is, of course, perfectly true to picture the lion as wild in his native lair, sallying forth in search of his prey; but there is a ghastly weirdness in that terrible arena-scene, which renders it the more realistic; and while we are told that the devil goeth to and fro in the earth, yet we are painfully aware that he does not have to search much for his victims. Alas! there are too many within his deadly reach; the only question is which first he shall devour.

Come with me to the Zoological Gardens, and stand before the lion's den. Note his noble and stately mien—the bold, open face, with its profusion of flowing tawny mane; the bright, penetrating eyes; the muscles and limbs, so fearfully and wonderfully made—all combining to assure us of well-nigh irresistible strength. In the next cage see the handsome lioness, with, perhaps, three or four cubs. How harmless and pretty they look, with countenances as mild as a kitten's. You might nurse one, as I did when a child, and it would do you no harm. But wait until they are fully grown, and though instances have been known where such have been successfully tamed, more often they put an end to those from whom they have received the greatest care.

So with our great adversary. Our first knowledge of him comes, perhaps, in the form of a very little sin, which, instead of fearing or shunning, we embrace; and because it does not appear to injure us, we grow bolder, and again indulge, with more assurance than before. Then comes the rude awakening.

Or, it may be, in later life we see the sins and attractions of the world in their matured and more seductive forms, and we are struck with wonder, or even suppressed admiration. The brilliantly-lighted theatre, with its gilded show; the dancing-hall, with its alluring charm; the racecourse, maybe, with its wild associations; or the gaming table, with its fascinating chance—whether we patronise these things or no, unless kept by the grace of God, as we see the wealth, the pomp, the magnificence, with which Satan and his devotees are surrounded, are not our hearts apt to murmur: "What can be compared in grandeur with this?" or, as the merchants said of mystic Babylon: "What city is like unto this great city?"

Truly the lion has much in his external form to command admiration; but beneath that benign countenance are the terrible teeth with which he devours his prey; and within those velvety paws are the talons with which he tears limb from limb. Beware lest you be dazzled with his outward show; embrace him, and he will turn again and rend you; draw him to your bosom, and he will wound you with his fangs. Admire not his comeliness; foster not his attentions; yearn not for his attractions; for of all foes none is so dangerous as he. In this he fitly represents our adversary the devil, whose life-work it is to "walk about, seeking whom he may devour."

WHAT HIS "ROAR" TEACHES.

The Apostle speaks of a "roaring lion." This phrase does not necessarily imply an expression of anger; to roar is the natural mode by which he vents his feelings, as the bark of a dog, or the note of a bird. When enraged, he utters a series of sharp, short, broken yowls, rather than a prolonged roar. It is therefore the more appropriate to designate him thus as he seeks his prey. But when he has found it, if any other creature dispute his right, or endeavour to deprive him of it, then he gives vent to the short, intermittent cry above referred to. It is probable that he is more to be feared when calm than when roused to anger, or at any rate is less easily taken advantage of. Self-possession is essential to victory, as compared with recklessness and fury.

However it be, these qualities are certainly true of his anti-type, the devil. Note well the force of these expressions—"Walketh" . . . "roaring" . . . "seeking." How eloquent they are of calm, cool deliberation, of set and steadfast purpose to encompass our destruction. It is when he is thus engaged that he most successfully works our ruin; when abnormally aroused he often overshoots his mark, and, for the time, defeats the end he has in view.

Ah! how blind we are to his treachery, as he appears before us even "as an angel of light"—how ready to call him "friend," to confide and trust in him, to follow his counsels, and facilitate his plans! Then, too late, the scales fall from our eyes; our throats are parched with horror as the hideous truth is revealed, that he is an adversary after all, more cunning and fearful than any created thing. Well did Paul address Elymas, the sorcerer, as "full of all subtilty and all mischief—thou child of the devil!" (Acts xiii. 10). Our Lord also told the Jews, "Ye are of your father, the devil. He abode not in the truth because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar and the father of it" (John viii. 44).

This verse, like others in the Gospels and Epistles, indicates forcibly that in the minds of Christ and his Apostles, at least, there was no doubt as to the personality of the devil; and it is difficult to see how an honest, unprejudiced investigation of the subject in Holy Writ can lead to any other conclusion. Certainly we have more than a mere vague assertion of "hereditary bias," or "tendency to evil."

What excuse, then, have we if we fall, since "we are not ignorant of his devices"? We need to "be sober, be vigilant; because our adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour." Are we?

The Church and the Crowd.

WHY is it that with the prevalent desire in many congregations for all that is "modern" in religious thought and teaching, there is such an absence of the same element in methods of work? All is "up-to-date" but these, and while every fresh wind that blows from the restless sea of modern thought is wafted from the pulpit, and progressive theology is all to the front, yet the most hide-bound and old-fashioned ideas prevail as to reaching (or not reaching!) those that are without.

Proposals to adapt methods to the changed conditions of the times are sternly scouted. "Modern" teaching has done much to alienate the mass of the people from religious worship; holy things are treated lightly or irreverently; the claims of God are ignored; the Lord's Day is degraded into a day of pleasure; men become increasingly "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God;" and yet empty pews are tolerated because the dead traditions of past generations forbid the introduction of effective methods by which they might be filled.

AN UNWORTHY ARGUMENT.

In many places may be found a fine church, excellently situated on a main thoroughfare, and formerly filled by a well-to-do congregation, to which its ministry was then suited and acceptable. The neighbourhood having changed, the minister of to-day is faced by rows of uninspiring and expressionless empty pews. But inquire the reason why the service is not adapted to meet the altered surroundings, and you will receive the surprised reply: "My dear fellow, the idea of evangelistic services in our church! Think of its history and traditions!"

It is this spirit of "our church" instead of "Christ's work" that is making many of our depleted churches cumberers of the ground, and a laughing-stock to "the children of this world," who verily "are wiser in their generation than the children of light."

The Wesleyans in many places, notably in Manchester, have faced the problem in a truly modern and sensible fashion, with the result that crowded audiences are assembled Sunday by Sunday. Perhaps the theology is not "modern," but "a living dog is better than a dead lion"; and the old Gospel has vindicated its power to raise thousands of careless ones out of the mire of sin, and to place their feet upon the solid rock of a new life. Why should not other denominations more readily follow so wise and practical a lead?

There are hundreds of churches in which the meagreness of the evening congregations, especially, is enough to make angels weep, while the crowds pass the doors with no effort made to draw them in. Yet they treat with contempt, and denounce as "irregular," the mission-halls which, amid many difficulties, undertake the work which it is the duty of the churches themselves to do.

A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION.

It is an accepted fact, that middle-class heads of households, especially in the suburbs, who gather at the morning service, are in large numbers compelled to remain at home in the evening to set their servants free. Would it not be reasonable and wise to simplify the evening service to attract an audience that is at liberty, rather than to make it a replica of the morning worship, in the vain hope of ministering to those whose household duties make it impossible for them to attend? And if there be an obdurate minority which demands the latter course, let such be aroused to their responsibility, and told that the Church of God has a mission to the careless, as well as one to build up its well-regulated flock.

A song-service by the choir from 6.30 to 7 o'clock, interspersed perhaps with a Scripture reading and prayer, followed by a bright service and suitable address from seven to eight, would do much to clear the streets of well-meaning but thoughtless young people—servants and their sweethearts, business employés, and others—who now throng our thoroughfares for lack of any more acceptable mode of passing the evening away. Thus may many such be won for the Kingdom of God.

The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit, and United Prayer.

By Sir ROBERT ANDERSON, K.C.B.

THE days we live in are full of anxiety and peril for the Christian. But in the midst of very much to cause depression and fear there is not a little to encourage and gladden. And one rift in the cloud is the prevailing readiness to acknowledge failure, and the desire for united prayer for blessing upon Church and world.

How sad then it would be if this movement, with all its possibilities of good, were checked or hindered. And there is real danger of this at the present moment. As regards the main object and aim of our prayers we are of one heart and mind. We desire that God may glorify the name of the Lord Jesus Christ by raising His people to lead a life more worthy of that name, and by pouring out blessing on the world around us. But some there are who, not content with this perfect accord in the purpose of our prayers, seem disposed to insist on our accepting their teaching about the Holy Spirit. Not content that with one heart and voice we should ask God for the blessing which all need and crave, they require of us to fall into line with them in specifying the mode and manner in which God is to answer our prayer. This surely is deplorable, and may prove disastrous.

There are many, for example, who cannot intelligently join in a prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. If they are ignorant and wrong in this, they should be put right. But that is not the question now and here. Are we to abandon all thought of united prayer until we have settled our doctrinal differences? If I go on to state the grounds of the views I refer to, it is in order to satisfy those who reject them, nor that these views are right, but that the error, if error it be, should be no hindrance to united prayer.

The student of the Bible is familiar with the expression, "the pouring out of the Holy Spirit." And the language both of the Old Testament and of the Acts of the Apostles suggests that the blessing was one to be expected continually or repeatedly. But it is a striking fact that the expression occurs but once in the Epistles, and that there the tense of the verb indicates that the blessing was past and completed. I refer to Titus iii. 6, "The Holy Spirit, which He shed (or poured out) on us abundantly."

Now, if it were a question between the Old Testament and the Epistles, a change of dispensation would obviously explain this difference. But the language of the Acts is in harmony with that of the Old Testament, and not with that of the Epistles. How can this be accounted for? The answer, whether right or wrong, is clear and definite. Theologians divide the Book into three main periods—the Hebrew, the Transitional, and the Gentile. That the period included in the early chapters is rightly described as "Hebrew," and that which succeeded it as "transitional," is vouched for by the very general acceptance of this classification. The only question really is whether the "transitional" gives place to the "Gentile" at chapter xiii., or later on; or whether the Book as a whole is not the Divine record of the change from the old, or Jewish, to the new, or Gentile, dispensation. Certain it is, in any case, that the Pentecostal period is closely linked to the old.

The question remains whether the doctrine of the ministry and work of the Spirit is to be sought in the narrative of the Acts, or in the teaching of the Epistles. The latter, surely. Let us then look into the Epistles.

There is a good deal of theology in the use of the Greek aorist tense; and it may be grasped even by those who are ignorant of the language. The "present" tense we all understand. The "aorist" denotes what is absolutely past; the "imperfect" what is continuous, or repeated, or customary. As already noticed, in the only passage in the Epistles where the Pentecostal expression "pour out" is used of the Holy Spirit the verb is in the aorist. From the standpoint of the Epistles "the pouring-out" of the Holy Spirit is a blessing to which we look back.

And this is confirmed by a reference to all the leading passages bearing on the subject. Rom. v. 5 speaks of "the Holy Spirit who was given to us" (aorist). Eph. i. 13 reads, "In whom (Christ) on your believing ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit" (aorist). So also Eph. iv. 30, "The Holy Spirit of God whereby ye were sealed" (aorist). Again, 2 Cor. i. 22 and v. 5, and 1 Thess. iv. 8 tell how God "hath given unto us (aor. part.) His Holy Spirit," or "the earnest of the Spirit."

This again is confirmed by passages which speak in the present tense of the Holy Spirit as "being," or "dwelling," in us. See ex. gr., Rom. viii. 9 and 11; 1 Cor. iii. 16 and vi. 19; and 2 Tim. i. 14. So also the exhortation "Be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. v. 18) is in the present tense. It is not a blessing conferred once for all, and then to be looked back to as attained. Neither is it a blessing to be sought from God as a new and special gift or grace. It is the realization and enjoyment of a privilege and responsibility pertaining to all who are in Christ. A blessing, not of a transcendental kind, reserved for those who are "saints" in the Romish sense, but to be proved by the humblest Christian, albeit so weak as to need the warning, "Be not drunk with wine."

In keeping with all this, while the Epistles never bid us to pray for the Holy Spirit, we find the exhortation to pray in the Holy Spirit (Eph. vi. 18; Jude 20). But I must close; and I end where I began. The question of present urgency is not whether those who read the Bible thus are right or wrong—that can be discussed at leisure—but whether these doctrinal differences are to be a bar to united prayer for the blessing all desire. If sore famine pressed on us, and all were agreed to cry to God for bread, what would be said if someone insisted that we must be agreed also in specifying the way in which the bread is to be given? Is it not on a par with this to thwart the present desire for united prayer for blessing, because some of us cannot join in dictating the method in which the blessing is to come?

If I may add another word it shall be by way of warning. Is there not a real danger lest a misuse of the Pentecostal Scriptures should lead to some new trouble or division; and thus that a movement so full of promise should bring weakness and sorrow instead of joy and power?

Defence of Reformed Faith.—The Ladies' League for the Defence and Promotion of the Reformed Faith of the Church of England has objects and methods that are affirmative and constructive, rather than negative and destructive. The object is education, not agitation; to preserve and extend a priceless heritage, not to pull down or to narrow; and to unite in one association all loyal members of the Church of England against the introduction into the Church of things contrary to the spirit and teaching of the Prayer-Book. Nine thousand members of the Church of England, including some 500 clergy, have joined the League, and on an average ten new members, all of whom belong to the Church of England, are enrolled every day. It has founded a Home where ladies are trained and sent out to work under parochial clergy among the sick and the poor in our crowded centres of population. It has opened a Home for poor gentlewomen, which is crowded and practically self-supporting. "To the Uttermost."

By Rev. JAS. MURSELL, Edinburgh.

ONLY twice in Holy Scripture does the phrase eis to panteles occur; once in the familiar passage in which the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews reaches the sublime conclusion that our Lord, as a High Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek "is able to save to the uttermost those who come unto God by Him" (Heb. vii. 25); and again where, in the narrative of the healing of the woman with a spirit of infirmity, we read that she could in no wise lift herself up (Luke xiii. 11). The phrase translated, "in no wise," is identical with that rendered "to the uttermost" in the Epistle to the Hebrews. "She was not able to lift herself up completely, or to the uttermost," is a literal translation.

Surely it is by no accident that this phrase should be employed on the sole occasions of its use in the Word of God, once of human impotence, and once of Divine omnipotence. "She was not able—to the uttermost." "He is able—to the uttermost." She could get so far, but no further. Try to straighten herself as she would, she could not do it completely. For eighteen long and weary years none of the efforts that she made, none of the physicians whom she sought, could raise her past that point. And the spirit of infirmity bound her in more subtle adamantine chains after every failure. So far she was able to get, but never to the uttermost.

It is the uttermost that always prevails against me. I can get so far in my conflict with besetting sin, but no further. I can face my foe, but I always fall before his onset. I can make good resolutions, but I cannot keep them. I can loathe my sin, but I cannot trample it beneath my feet. The last few inches are too much for me. Resolve and wrestle as I will, I cannot lift myself to the uttermost. My uttermost leaves me what I always shall be, a man with an unconquerable spirit of infirmity.

That is the truth about myself, but it is not all the truth; for it leaves the truth as it is in Jesus out of the account. And that is like leaving oxygen out of the air. I am not able to the uttermost. But He is able to the uttermost. I cannot get there; but He can, and can take me with Him. My spirit has always been infirm, and always will be. But His Spirit has always been almighty, and always will be; and He waits to endue them that have no might with power from on high. My infirmity is the opportunity of His strength. When I come to an end of myself and my efforts, I come to the beginning of Christ and of His effortless might. Where I stop, He starts. The uttermost, which is an utter impossibility to me, is not simply possible to Him, it is divinely easy. She was not able to lift herself to the uttermost. No more can I. Wherefore—for that very reason, and no other—since if she could have done so, or I could, there would be no need of Him—wherefore He is able to save to the uttermost.

"Be Filled with the Spirit."

Be filled with the Spirit, the Spirit of God!
Then walk in the path which the Saviour hath trod!
Denial of self will bring peace to thy soul,
And sorrow and care on the Lord thou mayst roll.

Be filled with the Spirit, the Spirit of Christ!
'Tis the gift of the Saviour—a treasure unpriced!
No gift hath the world that with this can compare,
And His Spirit is given in answer to prayer.

Be filled with the Spirit, the Spirit of love!
'Tis a foretaste on earth of His presence above!
By this the commandments of Christ we may keep,
For the well of His love is unfailingly deep.

Be filled with the Spirit, the Spirit of truth!
The consoler of age, the adornment of youth!
'Twill guard against error and strengthen thy faith
In Christ thy Redeemer, through life until death.

Be filled with the Spirit, the Spirit of might;
By Him shall thou put Satan's minions to flight;
Thine arm will He nerve for the conflict with sin,
While love, joy, and peace dwell thy bosom within.

SUNDAY, January 11. 1 Chron. xiii.

IN the first burst of gratitude to God for His wonderful Providence in raising him to the throne, David sought to bring the ark from its obscurity and enthrone it in the new metropolis of his kingdom. He was anxious to secure, not only the concurrence of his leading men, but of the people generally. It was to be a united movement. What a blessing it would be if leaders in religious matters would always endeavour to secure the united following of all the scattered forces of God's elect! Such efforts always commend themselves to the masses of the people (4).

Notice the peculiarity of the statement in verse 6, as rendered in R.V., marg.: "Where the Name is called on." These words may be regarded as recalling the time when the sacred name JEHOVAH was only mentioned throughout Israel once in the year, when the High Priest entered the Holy of Holies, "not without blood." David's mistake (1 Chron. xv. 2) was in not acting on the ordinances of the divinely-instituted ritual that the Ark should be borne by priests. It was, doubtless, needful to show, by however striking an example, that the ancient rubrics were still in force. The death of Mr. Huskisson, who was knocked down and killed by the first railway train, no doubt saved hundreds of lives by showing the need of caution; and if God smote Uzza, it was in care for the nation at large, and to arrest still further acts of disobedience. The lesson for us is, that God's cause must go forward on the shoulders of living men, and not mechanically; and that our arm is not needful to steady it.

The ark that brought death to Uzza brought blessing to Obed-edom; but the difference lay, not in any arbitrary caprice on God's part, but to the difference in the two sets of character. The sun that melts wax, hardens clay.

MONDAY, January 12. 1 Chron. xiv.

David's kingdom became more and more consolidated. It was no small matter for him to secure the friendship and alliance of such a man as Hiram, King of Tyre. Its material result is indicated in the first verse, but there were other results still more valuable. All these indications confirmed David in the conviction that God had raised him up for a special purpose, and that he might be the means of blessing to Israel. This is the significance of any special position or gifts, with which we are endowed. We are blessed, that we may bless. We are exalted to thrones, that we may have lifting power; we are stars in Christ's hand, that we may light bewildered souls to the haven of God's love.

Whenever God gives special privilege and power, it is certain that we shall be assailed. It is only what might be expected, that the Philistines would come up against David. As soon as Christ was born, Herod sought to take the young Child's life. When a true work is done in your soul, expect the hatred of the enemies of God. But as you look up to God for guidance and help, you will always hear Him saying, "Go up, for I will deliver them into thine hand." God will break your enemies (11, R.V.). "He breaks the power of cancelled sin." But He never repeats Himself. If He gives victory in this way to-day, He will give it in another to-morrow. Only abide in God; only take your marching orders from His lips; and be sure to await the sound of marching in the mulberry trees. God goes up before you. General Gordon used to say that while traversing the desert wastes on his camel, he obtained victory over the slave-dealers before he reached their camps.

Some will love thee, some will hate thee,
Some will flatter, some will slight.
Cease from man, and look above thee;
Trust in God, and do the right.

TUESDAY, January 13. 1 Chron. xv.

Reflection on the death of Uzza, and a more careful study of Scripture, led David to see where his mistake had been—hence the conclusion announced in verse 2. Oh that this lesson were deeply pondered! The injury done to religion by forgetting that God's ark should only be carried forward by living men, has been incalculable. Yes, and the living men should be clean men (12). Wherefore, having these promises—promises of doing God's work in the world; promises of bearing forward His ark; promises of being taken into blessed partnership with Himself—let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit.

The progress of God's cause in the world has always been accompanied by a band of sweet singers. Heman, Asaph, and Ethan have had many successors. Some have cymbals of brass, others harps, but all have their places and their work. Let the children of the King, His mighty men and His soldiers, march in one glad triumphal procession through the world. Nothing will so quickly convince men of the genuineness of the Church's life.

The ark was thus brought to a temporary dwelling-place which David had prepared for it, and there it rested, until once more it was removed to the Temple built by Solomon. It was a great national event, and a time of much rejoicing, likely to make an indelible impression on the people, and especially the young; but, in David's case, there was a strong alloy in Michal's sneer. Ah, it is bitter when our foes are of our own household! Even our Lord seemed to breathe more freely when Judas had gone out! May the Spirit of God give us grace to be humble and gentle under such reproaches.

WEDNESDAY, January 14. 1 Chron. xvi.

As soon as the ark was deposited in its tent, certain of the Levites were deputed to minister before it with perpetual song. Note that word continually (vv. 6, 37). Similar arrangements were also made at Gibeon, before the remnants of the ancient tabernacle that were left there, because of the old association of that place with the service of God. There was always the giving of thanks, always the songs of God (R.V. 41, 42). It is a serious question, whether the Church of God and we as individuals, who are now His priests—"a royal priesthood"—are sufficiently careful of the songs of God? His name is everywhere blasphemed, do we see to it that it is by us everywhere exalted? Would it not be well for us to keep our hymn book or psalter near our Bible, and at the time of private morning prayer, recite some noble ascription of praise?

It is so good for young Christians to store their memories with large portions of the Word of God, and of hymns, so that when older, in the night, when travelling and unable to read, or in a storm at sea, when they have to intermit their ordinary devotions, they may have fuel to heap on the altar, and handfuls of incense to scatter there. Too often, I think, God's praise rises most freely, not from the favoured children whose wealth and comfort abound, but from the weak, the suffering, and the poor; these things ought not to be.

The noble Psalm, now committed to Asaph and his assistants, seems to have been compiled from other Psalms (xcvi., cv., cvi.). The people were, perhaps, already familiar with these extracts; and it must have been a stirring experience, when, from the whole vast assemblage, the "Amen" rolled forth (36). Some day we shall hear a similar response from the whole Church (Rev. xix. 1-5).

THURSDAY, January 15. 1 Chron. xvii.

We should be careful not to speak in God's name on the impulse of our own opinions. To Nathan, David's proposal to build a Temple seemed admirable; but God's thoughts were not as his (2 and 4). In the following paragraph (4-15) there is a lovely foreshadowing of God's ideal for His people and for their king, whom He had taken from the sheep-cotes; and it is enough to make one weep to contrast it with all the sins and disasters which befell. Will God ever in heaven hold up before us what He intended our lives to be, and allow us to contrast it with what has actually been our lot? We know not; but this at least is sure, that if He has taken us from the lowest depths and raised us up to privilege and service, He is willing to maintain us there, to subdue our foes, and settle us in the kingdom He has given.

Like David, let us sit before the Lord (16); and let us adore Him for all His wonderful work on our behalf (18-22). We can never understand God's reasons for His great and gracious dealings with us. We say with David, "According to Thine own heart hast Thou wrought all this greatness. Thou hast done it for Thy name's sake. Let Thy name be exalted and magnified for ever."

This is the heart of the devout life—to put God first, and yourself second and nowhere; to sink your own interests, prospects, and native tastes; to have your worldly hopes delayed and blighted, your future darkened; and to give yourself wholly up to God—then you, too, shall be "blessed for ever."

FRIDAY, January 16. 1 Chron. xviii.

David's victories laid the foundations of Solomon's vast empire. He extended the actual possessions of Israel to the limits of the Divine promise. Would that the Church of God were animated by a similar determination; for in that case her victories should extend to the limits of the known world! "Ask of Me," said Jehovah to His Son, on the morning of His resurrection, when He was begotten again from the dead (Acts xiii. 33; Psa. ii. 7), "and I will give Thee .. the uttermost parts of the earth for Thy possession." Can we believe that the Son did not ask, and the Father not give? Too long has the Church held back from assuming her rightful limits. Would that we could advance, receiving victory from the hands of God (6 and 13); consecrating to God the spoils of the heathen (8, 11); and carrying the standard of the Cross to the islands of the seas!

Gath and Philistia, with Edom, on the south; Hadadezer, Zobah, and the Syrians, on the north; Moab and the Amalekites on the west, felt the might of David's conquering arms. It was out of such experiences that Psa. lx. and lxviii. sprang. There is the shout of victory in them. It seemed as though God had gone out before the hosts of Israel, and they had simply to follow after. Should not this be always the attitude of the individual and the Church—God treading down our enemies, and we following, more than victors?

SATURDAY, January 17. 1 Chron. xix.

This incident apparently took place soon after the wars described in the preceding chapters. The indignity to which David's ambassadors were subjected, was the grossest that Orientals could imagine; and the king readily appreciated their feelings. We, too, when we go on embassage for God, may sometimes meet with similar treatment; but God's glory suffers even more than we do, and He is keenly in sympathy with us, as we endure shame, spitting, and despiteful treatment for His sake. "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected Me" (1 Sam. viii. 7).

All classes were indignant, and supported the King in his determination to avenge the insult offered to himself and his people. Joab's address before the battle displayed the piety and faith of a people which felt that they could confidently count on God. The Israelitish army was beset by the Ammonites in front, and by the Syrian auxiliaries (hired for £342,100) behind. Joab, therefore, resolved to attack the latter, being the more numerous and formidable; and no doubt anticipated that mercenaries would offer a less stout resistance than the soldiers of the nation principally concerned. If only he could break their line, a general rout would ensue. The result justified his forecast.

We cannot help contrasting these terrible scenes with the opening chapters of the Acts. When our King and His ambassadors were grossly insulted and put to death, heaven's response was a Pentecost. It is thus that God repays human insult, changing foe to friend, and overcoming evil with good; whilst those who suffer shame are assured of a great reward in heaven, when the faces that did not hide themselves from shame and spitting shall shine as the sun (Phil. ii. 1-12). Haven for Homeless Little Ones.

IN the eighth annual report of the work under her care, Mrs. Janet Wallis (Oak Lodge, Tadworth, Surrey) writes:—

About 120 little children who were safely sheltered in the Haven in 1901 were rescued in many cases from cruel neglect—in some from absolute brutality; and as we watch their wan cheeks grow round and merry and childlike, our hearts ache for the many hundreds of poor little mites needing shelter as much as these.

Little I—— P—— was brought by arrangement to our office, but we were not prepared to handle such a skeleton, nor were we prepared for the shrewd "old-mannish" face—old far beyond his years—which scanned us. He was only two years old, but he had known privation and hardship, and when put down to a good dinner of nourishing soup and bread, the famished child was so excited that he would fight and scream and seize the food from the other children's plates like a wild animal, and thrust it into his mouth with both hands, so fierce was his hunger. He soon grew fat on milk and country air, and looked like other children. A worthy couple who are childless, and longed to have their cottage brightened by the patter of little feet, have received him into their own home, and will bring him up as their own little son.

Poor little L——never walked, but throughout his early childhood he was sent about from one foster-mother to another, from one hospital to another; his poor mother well-nigh distracted to know where to find safe shelter for her boy. When he was seven she received a request to remove him from a hospital. She searched in vain for anyone who would take him in, and with difficulty obtained the doctor's consent to leave him for another week. Perhaps, in our circumstances, we should not have entertained the case, but we could not close the door against this little helpless waif who could not walk. So the poor little fellow, who had drifted about from one wretched home to another, found a veritable haven.

This is now our tenth year of effort in this difficult field so widely opening up before us. Our first desire is to help the young mother, who, with her first child, has learned the bitterness of her sin, and gives good evidence that she means to do all that in her lies to return to the path of virtue and right living. We deal with cases of a first fall. Our object then is pre-eminently preventive, and with a view to the restoration of the mother, whose sad position is often traceable largely to inexperience of life.

Our aim also is to save the child so deeply to be pitied, and to rescue it during its earliest infancy from influences which would be calculated to train it in the ways of evil; and it is no small joy to us, as we look into the faces of our ever-growing family, to know that many of these dear children have never known any vicious surroundings—never heard any wicked language, but are trained on the lines of a Christian home, and saved from the awful contamination to which so many of their class are exposed in the baneful surroundings of slum life.

We have no more dependable source of income than these mothers' punctual contributions towards the support of their children. The accounts reveal the pleasing fact that during 1901 nearly £1,000 was received from the mothers' earnings towards the maintenance charges.

One of our kind supporters, wishing to help us through the present time of financial difficulty, has offered a donation of £100 on condition that nine others will do the same. We earnestly appeal to all lovers of helpless, illused children, to rally round and enable us to raise this sum at once.

Homes for the Aged Poor.

IN the magazines and papers we are constantly being told that Denmark, Austria, and Russia are far ahead of us in providing for their aged poor, and that in these countries homes for the aged are the brightest and cheeriest resorts. It seems the statement is true, and reluctantly acknowledge that much more ought to be done in our own land to improve the lot of the aged poor, and to give them in the last years of their life the small amount of comfort they need.

The charity known as the Homes for the Aged Poor has attempted this on a small scale. The result has been eminently successful, but the scheme needs to be largely extended to cope with existing needs, and help is required if the fifteen Homes, occupied at present by 173 inmates, are to be efficiently maintained. Thirty-three years ago, the first Home was opened by a philanthropic elderly lady, much exercised by the sad fate of many a broken-down toiler. The scheme was to supply those of unexceptionable character with a room, rent free, provided a few shillings weekly for requisite food were forthcoming. This first Home was speedily filled, and gradually others were added as funds came in, and willing labourers were found to help in the cause.

If the growth of the charity has been slow, it has been sure, for nine of the fifteen Homes are permanent, being the property of the charity, and no fewer than 599 persons have been admitted and cared for. The inmates are supplied with coal during the winter months, and we wish that the fund for this purpose could be much increased. Spring and autumn are very trying times to the aged, and it would be most desirable to extend the time during which coals are given.

Nursing and extra comforts in sickness are also provided for by special funds, and herein lies the chief difficulty. Sickness is never absent among so many old folk, and the feebleness of age requires much assistance in descending life's hill.

We fancy these English Homes when visited would be found as cheery as those on the Continent. What old people need is quiet, rest, freedom from care, and, above all, a place they can call home. To a large extent all these necessaries are provided in the Homes. Pleasure is not forgotten. The annual tea party, a few drives given by kind friends in summer, gifts of flowers and fruit, plenty of books and papers, with kindly visits from the lady visitors, all help to cheer the eventide of life and drive away the feeling of loneliness.

We long for the time when every parish in the kingdom shall have its house of rest, its abode of peace, where worn-out workers could tarry a little season waiting the call from above. This would soon be the case if we looked upon each aged person as a crowned head to whom it was a privilege and honour to minister.

Bethesda Mission, Portsmouth.

FEW towns in England have increased more rapidly than Portsmouth. To the north-east the old country hamlet of Copnor has recently been joined to the town. New groups of roads and buildings are now to be found thickly inhabited. In connection with the Bethesda Mission a hall was erected at Copnor a few years ago, and it is now entirely free from debt. But to complete the work, and indeed to make it efficient, it is necessary to engage a lady missionary. A similar need is felt at Buckland.

At the various centres of the mission there has been much to encourage the workers during the year. No fewer than fifty regular meetings are held weekly in the winter months; the five Sunday-schools have some 820 scholars, and in addition to numerous other agencies there is a Rest for Aged Women and a Refuge for the Fallen. The sick and poor are helped and relieved as far as possible, and the influence of the Mission is felt in a wide sphere through the circulation of books, tracts, and other religious literature. Commander B. H. Key, R.N., 29, St. Andrew's Road, Southsea, continues to discharge the onerous duties of superintendent and secretary.

A Forty Years' Testimony.

IN the annual report of the work among Jews in Whitechapel, under the superintendence of Mr. Herman Ehrlich, of the London City Mission, there are many indications that such a ministry is no less needed now than when it was instituted forty-one years ago. The Jews in Whitechapel are still on the increase, and the conditions of life are by no means more conducive to effective Gospel work. "It is not an easy task," says Mr. Ehrlich, "to speak to a Jew about the Messiahship of Christ. They that walked and talked with Jesus, and heard from Him those loving words which even His enemies could not gainsay, were constrained to say, 'Never man spake like this Man.' Many difficulties have to be overcome before any favourable impression is made on the Jewish mind. But notwithstanding all drawbacks there is much reason to be grateful to our Covenant Father that He has not left Himself without some witnesses. On every side there are evidences that the Gospel of the grace of God has made much progress."

The various meetings and Bible-classes held in the Hebrew Conference Hall, Whitechapel, have greatly improved, and the number of those who are anxious to hear the Word has been so large that in order to prevent overcrowding and inconvenience it has been found necessary to admit the people by tickets. The work among the children is equally encouraging, and the only regret is that after admitting as many as possible to the meetings some are turned away. Many of the little ones are poorly clad, and while impressing upon them the need for early decision, the missionary is often able to comfort them with warm garments and boots. The Medical Mission, commenced twelve months ago, has proved to be a useful adjunct to the work, and during the year some 2,500 patients received attention. Mr. Ehrlich's address is 95, King Edward Road, South Hackney N.E.

Work on a War-Ship.

IN his magazine for January*, Mr. Hogben gives the following among many other notes of praise:—

From H.M.S. Mars, Spithead, March 12, 1902:—"Dear Sir and Brother,—You will, I know, rejoice with me over the work of God that has been going on in this ship since we left Portsmouth on August 18 last. As soon as we cleared from Spithead, two of us commenced meeting daily for prayer. We prayed for a revival, and for a work of grace in the Mars. Often one or the other of us would be prevented by duty from putting in an appearance at 'one bell,' but we continued to pray, and on the 25th of the same month, only a week after we started to pray especially for our shipmates, two of them were converted to God. One of them had been on my book for five, and the other for four, months.

"This was the beginning of blessing, and since then we have been rejoicing at the work of God in our midst. There has been very little of human 'means,' but it has been throughout a work 'wrought of God.' Scarcely a week has passed without some soul being brought to Jesus, and the meeting that started with two, now often numbers a dozen. (It must be remembered that it is very rarely that all can get together at one time.) Many of them have themselves become soul-winners.

"One who told the brother who was blessed to his conversion that he had 'been dodging him for months,' has himself now joined the 'One-by-One Band, and has been the means of bringing three or four others to Jesus. In all, some fourteen or fifteen men have professed saving faith in Jesus during the past three months, and most of them are witnessing faithfully for Him.

"The officers have noticed the difference in men, and know the cause, and have at least on one occasion encouraged a man in the way. The work has been 'one by one' throughout, but there has been very little personal dealing, the chief means being prayer."

The Aged Christian Blind.

THE annual reunion of the inmates and friends of the Homes for Aged Blind Men and Women, Crouch Hill, took place on December 30. Rev. J. R. Wood (President of the Baptist Union) presided at a social meeting during the afternoon. Several of the more aged inmates of the Homes were too infirm to allow of their leaving their beds to join the party; but their happy condition of contentment and thankfulness strikingly showed that they were in possession of something better than earth could give, while they bore strong testimony to the great kindness with which they were treated by Mr. and Mrs. Bright and their attendants. There are now 101 inmates in the Homes, forty of whom are over seventy years of age, eighteen are over eighty, and three are over ninety. Taking into account the great age of so many who have to be cared for, the health of the Institution has been good during 1902.

In the course of a brief statement, Mr. Bright also showed that the Institution closed the year free of debt, with the exception of the cost incurred for the new laundry and certain drainage work which the local authorities had compelled the committee to undertake, which together had cost £1,300, and half of that sum (£650) had yet to be raised. The laundry, which is fitted with modern appliances in up-to-date style, was felt to be indispensable, and will effect a large saving to the Institution.

In an appropriate address Rev. J. R. Wood wished all a happy new year. While glad to see so full an attendance, he added that Mr. and Mrs. Bright had proved no small blessing to the Institution. As regarded old age, life was to be taken in the spirit of trust and confidence in God. "My heart trusted in Him, and I am helped." Rev. J. F. Osborne said that at committee meetings they had prayed for the Homes and for the funds. The place was a happy retreat for those who were in it.

Rev. Charles Brown recognised some new faces among the inmates; and he was glad to see that Mr. and Mrs. Bright continued to wear as well as they did. While helping each other, all might thank God for mercies sent. It appears that there are now some vacancies for new inmates, and many applications have been received for them. The mansion and five villas, which make up the Homes at Crouch Hill, have now involved an outlay of over £8,000, all being freehold, and free from debt, except the liabilities noted above.

In Devon and Somerset Villages.

IN the course of an interesting pamphlet descriptive of twelve months' labours in Somerset and Devon villages, Mr. John Denning says: "I have been busily engaged principally in the eastern part of the Blackdown Hills, as I have the working superintendence of three mission halls. During that time I have visited scores of houses with the 'Bread of Life,' over these scattered and neglected parts, and found the people most willing to listen to the old Gospel.

"The numbers attending the Gospel meetings, I am thankful to say, are on the increase, which I believe is the result of house to house visitation. The general condition of the people is dark as to the way of salvation, yet they are very willing to hear, and we are hoping after a little more patient toiling they will be induced to come to the meetings. I have frequently found fruit of over thirty years' standing, resulting from my labours among them in those days. Some who were then bitterly opposed to the Gospel have since been converted, and are now living and witnessing for the Lord, even children then receiving conviction of sin had no rest until they were brought to Christ.

"I had the privilege several times during the past summer of preaching the Gospel in the open air, in a village known in the days of my boyhood as one of the darkest places in Devonshire, but now there are several Christians living in it, and there is an open door for the Gospel in the neighbourhood. One brother has opened his house for the preaching of the Gospel. I have also had the privilege of preaching the Gospel in London, Malvern, Cheltenham, Taunton, Wellington, Somerset, and Langford-Budville. At the latter place we held a week of special meetings, which were well attended and very encouraging."

Mr. Denning's address is Chelmsine, near Wellington, Somerset.

A Visit to Llanthony.

AT the time when "Father" Ignatius is making his annual preaching tours, some account of a visit paid this summer to his monastery at Llanthony may be of interest, the more so as we are informed that all the money he raises by this preaching goes to support this establishment among the lonely hills.

The writer, staying at Abergavenny, cycled some thirteen miles up the beautiful Honddu Valley, the path winding ever higher into the shadow of the surrounding hills, becoming narrower and more stony at every step, until a sudden turn over the shoulder of some height, and a quick drop to the margin of the brawling rivulet below, bring one to the peaceful, romantic ruins of Llanthony Abbey. Then the difficulties begin. Most people, on arriving there, think they have come to the end of their quest, and that this is the home of the noted monk; but, as a matter of fact, it is no such thing. I learned subsequently from a member of his nunnery that Father Ignatius tried to acquire this ruin on which to found his monastery; but that "the owner having some prejudice against him, refused to sell," whereupon he went further into the hills.

So that another five miles have to be traversed up an unusually bad path, which winds higher and higher, strewn with rough boulders, and plastered with mud, but by way of compensation with surroundings of indescribable beauty, as hill beyond hill rises in front, and deep valleys overgrown with trees and noisy with running water and tumbling cataracts are passed.

Solitary and inaccessible, remote from all human ties and interests—this is the first impression conveyed by

THE MONK'S SETTLEMENT.

It stands on a slight rise in the ground close in the embrace of two great hills that rise in grandeur above it. There is no other entrance or exit save by the winding path just traversed. High stone walls surround monastery and nunnery, over which the roof of a church shows above a mass of foliage, while a door surmounted by a cross leads to the entrance, which is locked, bolted, and barred. In the distance a farmer is seen getting in his hay. A shout brings him near, and I ask, "Shall I be allowed to see the church?" "Sure yes, but you mustn't ax one o' them there brothers, as they calls 'emselves," the man replied with a chuckle; "they'd run away if they caught a glimpse o' you; they be mortal 'scart o' a 'oman!"

Skirting the massive walls, I approached another locked gate, and caught sight of a black-robed monk, in conversation with a labouring man, evidently a gardener. My hail produced two results: the monk, as the farmer had predicted, took to his heels, the other came towards me, and I asked if I might see the chapel. He hesitated, stumbled, and was not sure, whereupon he was despatched to see if the Rev. "Father" was at home, and to inform him that a young lady had come a long way to look at his chapel, and might she be allowed? Ten minutes later he returned with permission, unlocked the gate with a great key, conducted me by a long, straight path to the nunnery door, rang a bell, and, just as one fondly hoped all difficulties were at an end, turned, and ran away. Evidently the nun inside would be as shocked at sight of a man as the "brother" would at sight of a woman!

Explaining to the gaunt nun who opened the door that "Father" Ignatius had given me permission to see the chapel, I stepped over the threshold into the nunnery, cold, dark, grim, cheerless as a tomb. The "sister" herself was as one dead, with no hope, no joy, no life, in the sunken eyes, the grey face, or the toneless voice.

"Meditation," or five o'clock service, was proceeding in the chapel, so, while waiting for it to conclude, one was able to observe the surroundings of the small sitting-room, hung with mottoes, pictures of saints, "Father" Ignatius' own portrait being conspicuous.

"We can proceed to the chapel," the sister's dull voice broke in. Traversing a garden, we entered a small outer court. A gate traversing the whole width, and hung on the inside with a heavy red curtain, veiled the interior, whence the sound of a service proceeding could be distinctly heard—the chanting of men's deep-toned voices, and even some portion of the Monk of Llanthony's discourse. A hymn followed, during which, either by accident or design, a corner of the red curtain was lifted, and a glimpse of the interior was caught. It was like an ecclesiastical picture of old-world times. While all the rest was in deep shadow, the light from a red lamp fell full upon "Father" Ignatius, who, sitting at a small organ, was playing and leading the singing. With face upturned, and shaven tonsure, with black cassock held by a rope girdle, his long white fingers moving slowly over the organ keys, he presented a weird and fascinating picture.

Then the nun with deliberate movements rose, drew back the curtain, opened a small square grille in the gate, and bade me look within. After the freedom of entry allowed both in Roman Catholic and High Anglican churches, it was somewhat disappointing to be forbidden entrance to the interior, but my guide explained that none are allowed to pass this barrier that divides the outer from the inner court, save those who take the veil. Once or twice a year only, on grand festivals, this barrier is thrown open, but even then none save the veiled may enter. It was too dark within to see much, save the glow and glitter, the subdued light of a roseate tint, and the candles surrounding the magnificent altar.

One recalled to memory a book which made a stir some years back, entitled, "Life in a Church of England Nunnery: Or Seventeen Years with Father Ignatius," in which is described this very altar, lighted as it is on great festivals with 105 candles, ornamented with flowers, at a cost of £60; also the description of the Sacred Host, whose tabernacle, covered with crimson velvet curtains, looped with gold chains, and a real diamond cross, one could faintly see, together with images of angels with bangles and bracelets hanging on their arms. The nun meanwhile was whispering various items of information, notably that this altar is the finest in the country, and was constructed specially for them at great cost, and brought from Munich. Monks and nuns coming to service, she also pointed out, do not need to go outside at all, as there are corridors communicating from their respective buildings by which they pass in and out of the chapel.

Then the grille was closed, and after another look at the outer court, with the life-size figure of the Virgin Mary (it was here, by the way, that the Virgin Mother is declared to have recently appeared), and the various statues of saints ornamented with great candles, one turned gladly from the deathly cold of the inside into the warmth and brightness of Nature's gloryland outside, wondering what is the use of it after all; and whether, in face of some of the revelations of the Book previously mentioned, some supervision of these monasteries and nunneries would not be advisable before people lavishly bestowed their money that such may be maintained.

Heavenly Fire.

The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar (Lev. vi. 13).

Lord God, to whom we yield our love,
With light our sacrifice illume,
May fire, descending from above,
Our free-will offering consume.

We would have power, Almighty Lord,
To wield the sword of truth aright;
To combat error, with Thy Word,
And prove victorious in the fight.

We would have purity of soul,
And if from sin we dare not part,
Burn Thou our dross, and make us whole:
May we, O God, be pure in heart.

We would be forceful, zealous, true,
Touch Thou our lips with heavenly love;
Transform us, and our lives subdue,
Fit us to serve in realms above.

The Late Judge Waddy.

NOT in his own denomination only is the death of Mr. Samuel Danks Waddy being mourned as that of a loved and trusted leader. His allegiance was to God, and his heart went out to every good cause. He came of a saintly lineage, and faithfully carried forward the traditions of the family. His grandfather, Rev. Richard Waddy, was converted at the age of eighteen, and died in the sixty-first year of a ministry crowned with the blessing of God, and fragrant with gracious memories. The father of the deceased judge was Rev. Dr. S. D. Waddy, a man of great influence in Wesleyan Methodism, and one of the founders of the college at Sheffield of which he was governor for eighteen years.

Previously his now well-known son, the eldest of a family of ten, had been born while he was stationed in the Gateshead circuit; and the corresponding entry in the diary of this man of faith and prayer reads: "This day our first child was born. He was consecrated to God from his birth in earnest prayer; and I trust he will at last be found of Him in peace."

REVIVAL IN A COLLEGE.

The boy was one of the first scholars received at the Sheffield College; and, during the years he spent there, he shared in the blessing of a remarkable revival when many conversions took place among tutors, students, and boys. Mr. Waddy continued at the college until, at the age of twenty, he graduated as a B.A. of London University. He had a special bent towards the study of law, but, in 1853, after being a local preacher for some time, he felt that he ought to offer himself as a candidate for the ministry. His proposal was favourably received; but, before the recommendation to accept him came before the Conference, he withdrew his name. This was in no sense a looking back. It was a recognition of the leading of God to what proved a pathway of honoured and useful testimony to the truth.

Mr. Waddy continued to be a local preacher to the end of his life; and the spirit in which he did this work is thus summed up by the Methodist Recorder: "He made his mark as a speaker in the Law Courts, in Parliament, and on platforms, but probably his sermons were the best of his utterances."

After being articled to a legal firm in Sheffield, Mr. Waddy was called to the bar in 1858, and from that time has been closely identified with the Inner Temple, of which he has been bencher, reader, and treasurer. The ability and industry of the rising lawyer soon brought him before the public, and marked him out for official position. Appointed to the Recordership of Sheffield in 1894, as county court judge for Cheshire in 1896, and to the Sheffield County Court a few months later, Mr. Waddy has won golden opinions from all classes. Previously he had successively represented four constituences in Parliament—Barnstaple, Sheffield, Edinburgh, and the Brigg division of Lincolnshire.

PERSISTENT BIBLE STUDY.

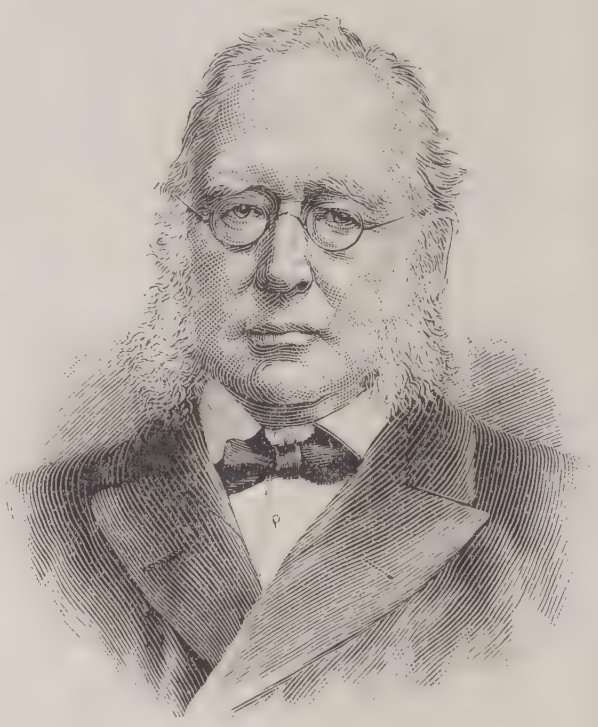
In the midst of a busy life, Mr. Waddy never lost his zest for close and painstaking Bible study. The freshness and power of his preaching proved how much the Word of the Lord was to himself personally. His chief literary work—a Harmony of the Four Gospels in the words of the Revised Version—is a permanent monument to this side of his life; and the fruit of the pains and care bestowed upon it is now being reaped all over the land. He took a deep and practical interest in the preparation of the new Methodist Hymn Book, and clear testimony to his qualification for this is borne in the fact that one of the hymns recently chosen by the Committee of Selection is his version of the Twenty-third Psalm—in which he had sought lovingly "to present every thought contained in the original, and nothing more."

PSALM XXIII.

Jesus, my Shepherd, my want shall supply:
Down in green pastures He makes me to lie:
He leads me beside the still waters of rest;
My soul He restores to the fold of the blest,

If from His paths I am tempted to stray,
He guards me from sin, and guides in the way.
I walk undismayed through the valley of dread,
Where darkness and death gather over my head.

No evil I fear: for with Me Thou art:
Thy rod and Thy staff, they comfort my heart.
Thou spreadest my table in sight of my foes:
My head Thou anointest; my cup overflows.



THE LATE JUDGE WADDY.

From Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons, 17, Baker Street, London, W.

Goodness and mercy shall follow me still:
All my life long, as my course I fulfil.
Then, Saviour! for ever—in heaven above—
With Thee I shall dwell, in the home of Thy love.

FAITHFUL TO DUTY AND PRINCIPLE.

The records of connexional committees abound with evidence of his hearty and useful service. He could be relied on alike for the discharge of regular routine duty and for valued counsel in times of special difficulty or perplexity. Particularly fitting was it that he should for a period be president of the Local Preachers' Mutual Aid Association. His life has been pointed to as an outstanding example of the value of early conversion. The spiritual movement at Sheffield College in 1848 has stamped itself deeply on Wesleyan Methodism. A few of those who were then brought to the Lord still remain, but there is a much larger and ever-widening circle of those who are their spiritual children.

Faithfulness to principle has been an outstanding feature of Mr. Waddy's life. Loyal at every juncture, not only to the Church of his fathers, but to truth and righteousness, his friends saw in his experience what it was to pay the price of such adherence. A sincere and humble Christian, he would have been the last to admit that he had not received his due; yet others observed with regret the fact that in the matter of honours and preferment he was repeatedly and unaccountably passed over. But in the hearts of his friends there is a memorial which will last for many days. He was a true and firm friend, and all who knew him loved him. He was a succourer of many, and men and women to whom he stretched out a brotherly hand in the hour of need know that they found in him a true friend.

The Late Dr. Temple and the Opium Trade

BY B. BROOMHALL.

BY the death of the Archbishop of Canterbury the movement against our national connection with the opium traffic has lost a warm friend, one who fearlessly and powerfully expressed his conviction that our country's connection with this trade was utterly inexcusable.

Now that we shall hear his voice no more, it may be well to consider some of his recent words on this great and painful subject. Surely if the Christian people of this country recognised, as the Archbishop did, the sin of complicity in this stupendous wrong-doing, we should soon see a great change. Instead of our country's connection with this trade being maintained unchecked from year to year, and from generation to generation, it would be brought to an end, possibly in less than twelve months. No government could resist the united and prayerful determination of the Christian people of the land, to sever our connection with the trade.

The Archbishop, speaking at a meeting in Lambeth Palace Library only a few weeks ago, pointed out, as our special ground of complaint our direct responsibility for this trade. He said that when a nation is > engaged in a mischievous trade, in a trade which brings a curse upon those who foster it and a curse upon those who get what is called the benefit of it, to have a Government compromising the whole nation of which it is the Government, is, I think, a very great blot upon the English name, and one which I am very much astonished that Englishmen should have allowed to continue to rest upon our name for so many years.

> We have gone on very long trying to persuade our Parliament, and to persuade our Government through our Parliament, that it is a very wrong thing. We have not succeeded.

To me it seems an injustice to the Chinese, an injustice to their Government, an injustice to the English, because we have to carry this character in the face of the world, an injustice to all those who are protesting against it. I think it is one of those gigantic injustices which, if we are to go by past experience, will probably not be set right until in some way or other some very serious interference comes from some Power higher than any to which we have yet appealed.

These words of the Archbishop represent the fears of thousands.

Soldiers on Salisbury Plain.—Among other schemes to meet the spiritual needs of our soldiers, the Congregational Church Aid and Home Missionary Society has in view the erection of a commodious chapel at Durrington, near the camp. At Bulford, two miles away, a mission chapel has been doing good and useful work for many years. The latter, with its mud walls and thatched roof, is hopelessly out of repair; moreover, the authorities of Winchester College, on whose ground it stands, refuse to renew the lease. An excellent site has been secured at Durrington, and an appeal is made for £5,000 for a suitable chapel and other premises, including a room to be open every day for soldiers and their friends and a small house for the pastor. THE LATE

Mr. David J. Cooper,

MISSIONARY AND MARTYR.

THE tragic circumstances of Mr. Cooper's death in Fez, Morocco, on October 17, and the summary execution of his murderer by the Sultan's orders, have already been recorded in The Christian. Further particulars of his life and work may now be given.

The son of an upholsterer in Belfast, David Cooper was born in 1873. He attributed his conversion, when about twelve years of age, to his mother. At that time he joined a Sunday-school at the Orange Hall, where Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lepper carried on work amongst the young. Mrs. Lepper remarked one morning: "Would God that some boy or girl in this school to-day would resolve to become a missionary when he or she becomes old enough to go out!" David Cooper was struck with the words; he resolved to know more about the question, and prayed that God would give him more light. Shortly afterwards Mr. Lepper gave him as a reward a book entitled "Robert Moffat." David read the book, though he kept his thoughts to himself.

When about sixteen, he became assistant to Mr. Black, secretary of the Belfast Y.M.C.A., and continued in that post for four years. He was a general favourite; his unfailing courtesy and obliging disposition brought him many friends. While at the Y.M.C.A., he embraced all opportunities to improve his education, by attending classes and so forth. On resigning his position, he entered upon business life, but only for a short time. Being led to consider afresh the question whether God would not have him devote his life to Christian service, he shut himself up in his bedroom, and spent several hours in prayer. He sought guidance from the Lord, asking for light on the definite issue of his future course. There and then he dedicated himself to Christ afresh—spirit, soul, and body—and realized in a marked degree the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

He then prayed that, if it were God's will he should devote himself to direct service, He would remove every barrier that stood in the way. His faith was specially helped by the words of Matt. xxi. 22: "All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." Step by step the way became clear; he continued to wait upon God, and at length offered to the North Africa Mission. He and Miss Bill, to whom he had become engaged, were, in due course, accepted by the Mission. Mr. Cooper went into residence with the hon. secretary at Barking for over a year and a half, during which time he gained much fresh experience, and began the study of Arabic. As in Belfast, so in Barking, he won friends on every hand, especially among young people, to whom he was very helpful. He had already been distinctly blessed to the conversion of several while in Ireland, and in England his labours were equally earnest and devoted.

In November, 1895, Mr. Cooper was sent out to the North Africa Mission's work in Tripoli, where Mr. and Mrs. Venables, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Reid and Miss North, were carrying on a large medical mission. When the hon. secretary first visited Tripoli, in November, 1887, there was no Protestant missionary in that region, neither had there been any regular Christian work done since the Early Church had been blotted out by the Mohammedan conquest in the seventh century. A country several times larger than England, with a population of over a million, was without a single witness for Christ, although within less than a week's travel from London, and within less than a day's journey of the great British naval and military centre at Malta!

Tripoli is under the government of the Sultan of Turkey, and mission work there has to encounter many difficulties. It is almost impossible for Europeans to go to any distance outside the city of Tripoli, as the Turkish authorities forbid this because they cannot guarantee safety. The result is that missionary efforts are very largely occupied with medical work in the city, as thereby both the townspeople and thousands who live in the country come under the sound and influence of the Gospel. Here Mr. Cooper set himself to work to gain a knowledge of colloquial Arabic, and then found an important sphere of labour in seeking to preach to the patients who attended the medical mission. The native shopkeepers and tradesmen were likewise visited, and work among Italians and others was begun. In April, 1898, Mr. Cooper was married to Miss Bessie Bill (the sister of Mr. Bill, founder of the Qua Iboe Mission in West Africa), and they laboured together in Tripoli till the latter part of 1899. They then returned to England for a time, to see the council of the Mission as to taking up the work which Miss Herdman had carried on in Fez, Morocco, until she died that year. In the beginning of 1900, Mr. and Mrs. Cooper went out to Tangier; they spent the summer there in order to get a good general knowledge of their new field of labour, before going on to Fez in the autumn.

THE LATE MR. DAVID J. COOPER.

From Photograph by Abernethy, 29, High Street, Belfast.

The work to which Mr. Cooper was appointed in Fez, was most interesting and remarkable. In the spring of 1888, Miss Herdman, Miss Caley, and Miss Jennings visited Fez, which at that time was a very uncommon thing for Europeans to do. Miss Herdman felt that, important as had been the work she was doing at Tangier, it was most desirable that the capital of the country should be reached and evangelized. She consequently formed the plan, if practicable, of returning there in the autumn, to settle in the city for regular work. On the way down, Miss Herdman was very ill with dysentery, so that her life was almost despaired of. She was most faithfully nursed by her fellow-workers, especially by Miss Caley. But, sad to say, almost immediately after Miss Caley had returned to England, with a view to being married to one of her fellow-missionaries, she was called home through malarial fever.

Miss Caley's visit to Fez, however, had not been in vain. Her testimony to her native mule driver led to his conversion, and he is to this day employed as a native colporteur. Miss Herdman returned in the autumn, accompanied by Miss Copping, a skilled nurse, and Miss Reed, a new and devoted worker. Miss Copping's medical knowledge was highly appreciated, and from the very beginning a wide and interesting work was done. In course of time, several men professed to be converted to God, and these Miss Herdman sent out as colporteur-evangelists. She and her fellow-labourers worked with indefatigable zeal, and though the council begged her to come home for rest, and sent her money for the journey, she felt the claims of the work to be so great that she remained on the field. In the spring of 1899 she suddenly broke down with an attack of heart disease. There was no doctor in Fez at the time, and although Miss Copping used her utmost skill, it was ultimately found necessary to convey the patient to Tangier. God, however, called her home while on the way. She had finished her course, and left behind her a blessed work. Miss Copping was much broken down, and was never able to return to the field. She, also, was called home in 1901.

After Miss Herdman's death, Miss Mellett, Miss Denison, and Miss Greathead carried on the work; but they felt, as also Miss Herdman had done, that it was necessary that some Christian brother should be there to superintend the colporteurs. It was no easy task to follow so able and devoted a leader as Miss Herdman, but Mr. Cooper was a man of much prayer. Robert McCheyne, whose life had been his careful study, was his ideal, and he walked worthily in his steps. At first, there were some who doubted whether the converts were genuine, and others thought they would never accept the guidance of a new leader. There were, no doubt, real difficulties and perplexities, and some among the professors did not give satisfaction. Still, on the whole, the work was found to be genuine, and thoroughly good. From the time of Mr. Cooper's arrival in Fez, till the day of his death, he laboured untiringly, and prayed unceasingly for these converts, also carrying on a considerable non-professional medical mission. The converts were gathered regularly for instruction, and the colporteurs were taught and guided in their work. Some new converts were gathered in, and the mission was consolidated.

After spending a few months in Tangier during the hot weather, Mr. and Mrs. Cooper returned to Fez last October, looking forward to a happy and blessed winter's work. In order that Mr. Cooper might be freer for the work amongst the colporteurs and converts, it had been arranged that Mr. and Mrs. Simpson should join them so as to relieve them of the medical part of their labours, Mrs. Simpson being a trained nurse with wide, practical experience. Everything looked bright and promising when, on October 17, Mr. Cooper was shot down by a fanatical Moslem, who had no particular spite against him, and probably had never seen him before in his life. The Sultan of Morocco, on hearing of the crime, immediately had the man apprehended and beaten, and, when he heard that Mr. Cooper was dead, he commanded that the murderer should be put to death also. Later on, he sent a message of sympathy to Mrs. Cooper, and also, without any suggestion from the missionaries or from foreign officials, gave her £1,000 as an expression of his sympathy. This was not as a matter of compensation, but a gift out of the Sultan's private purse to express his condolence. Surely such a thing as this has never happened before in the 1,300 years of Mohammedan history.

Mr. Cooper's life has been but short, for he was not quite twenty-nine years old when he died, yet his memory will long be fragrant. Few men were so universally loved as he, probably because of his humility, unselfishness, and devotedness.

The North Africa Mission has had a remarkable succession of devoted workers who have fallen in connection with their work in Fez; for, in addition to those already named, Mrs. Summers, for a time a labourer there, was also called home in the spring. Was it worth while that they should thus lay down their lives in the service of the Master? If we could ask them, they would, with one consent, say yes! They have not laboured in vain. The little company of converted Moslems remain; only a handful it is true, but surely God, who has prompted His servants to lives of such devotedness, and blessed their labours, will carry on the work which He has begun.

Difficulties in the Philippines.

WRITING from the Island of Cebu, Mrs. Jansen (formerly Miss White) describes the field as one in which, till recently, the friars and priests held undisputed sway, The missionaries are regarded with surprised interest by the people, who are amazed to find that the Protestants love God and have a good Book, as they call the New Testament. "Will someone give us a grant for Scriptures and Gospel tracts? We need so many New Testaments in the work, and after the services when one and another ask us to give them a Testament, we do not feel as if we could refuse them after we have been telling them the Gospel. When the work is more organised we shall have our native helper with a stand or a room attached to our hall to sell the Scriptures.

"Meantime we are having the services in our own house, and in a large room we rent from a native gentleman. Before we can get the seekers for the Truth to come in great numbers to the Gospel, the people will need literature which will make them aware of what we Protestants believe. They have had so instilled into them the thought that Protestants' belief is corrupt and sinful that sincere seekers, though they may have given up the Romish Church, fear our teaching for its supposed sinfulness; and the God-fearing seekers would be the most afraid to come to us as a rule."

A Soldier's Testimony.—"I have read with much delight Dr. Pentecost's book 'In the Volume of the Book' (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott). It is a splendid work to put into the hands of young Bible students. As a soldier, the roving nature of my life forbids carrying many books; but for two years or so I have been careful to find place for the one I have named. On ship-board and in garrison, I have often turned to its pages, and have never found it to fail of counsel and instruction."

From Rev. F. B. Meyer.

Port Antonio, Jamaica, Dec. 15, 1902.

SINCE my last letter, Mr. Macartney and I have visited Brown's Town and Chapelton, which are situated more in the heart of this lovely island, the latter being almost at the centre. The same crowds have thronged to the meetings, and very great blessing seems to have resulted.

In this land there is not the division between the white and the coloured people that obtains in the Southern States of America. All mingle freely in the same places of worship, and sit side by side—a practice which is not only British, for our British law makes no distinction between colour or race, but is also eminently conducive to the work of the Spirit of Christ, in whom are neither barbarian, Scythian, bond, nor free.

The spirit of unity among the ministers of all denominations has been very encouraging. Our meetings have been as often held in the parish churches as in the free; and I have found myself delivering my message, not only from the reading-desk, but from the pulpits of the churches. Of course the Church here is not now connected with the State, and is more nearly under the direction of the archbishop and bishop, whose offices on our behalf have been more than generous; still the concession on the part of the rectors has been most kind.

The Baptist Church at Brown's Town was founded in the slavery days by an old man, James Finlayson, who was converted under the preaching of William Knibb. He had gone down one Sunday morning to Falmouth to sell honey, went to hear the preacher, and was brought to the Lord. He never rested till he had led a number of his fellow-slaves to embrace the offer of eternal life. They bought the land on which the present chapel stands, bore incredible sufferings at the hands of their masters, saw the edifice burnt to the ground in the mad rage with which the slave-holders opposed the first proposals of emancipation, but maintained their meetings and organization in a cave until the brighter days of emancipation dawned. It was very touching to read an old, time-worn, ill-spelt paper, written by Finlayson, describing the hardships and tenacious purpose of these Christian slaves.

We had wonderful meetings at Brown's Town, in the pretty Episcopal church, the Wesleyan and Baptist chapels. There must have been 1,100 to 1,200 people at the last meeting on Sunday night, in the spacious chapel upstairs, the schoolroom underneath, and outside at the windows and doors. I hear that already sixteen are asking to join one of the churches—and only a week has passed.

Both at Brown's Town and Chapelton the meetings for men have been the most remarkable; and I have been led to address women also, urging them to arise to save the land from the awful immorality, which, like a tide of ink, threatens to overwhelm the institutions of home and marriage. I am laying stress on the necessity of love before marriage; of being content with a simple service, instead of the present overwhelming and deterrent extravagance; and of the leading people refusing to welcome men of immoral life to their homes But many of these poor coloured girls are so weak; they seem absolutely unable to withstand the advances of a white man. The temptations to young Englishmen are immense, and there is only one Y.M.C.A. in the island, with no secretary or agent. It is cruel to see the way in which the young men go down before sin, and I fear that our London Y.M.C.A. is already overweighted with responsibility to help them.

It is useless to attempt to describe the glorious beauty of the tropic vegetation. On every side scenes greet the eye which were worthy to be immortalized by pen and brush. The weather is, however, at times overpoweringly hot; and I often sympathize with the desire of an English lady, out here for thirty years, to feel the frost crunch under my feet. Final meetings are being arranged in Kingston, and then home, and church, and whatever God may have in store. F. B. Meyer.

City College, Colombo.

"THE truth shall make you free" is the motto of the City College, Colombo, which was established in 1894. Its manager, S. G. Lee, B.A., is a native of Jaffna, Ceylon. His father was a convert from Hinduism, having found Christ while studying at the seminary of the American Board. His mother. also a Hindu lady, had been a student of the late Miss Eliza Agnew, of the same Board.

Young Lee graduated in 1879 at the Jaffna College, for which Misses M. and M. W. Leitch collected funds in the United Kingdom and America, and was appointed a member of the Jaffna College Faculty, in which capacity he remained until 1887. During that period he organized a small mission in a small neighbouring island, which is still carried on by the Christian students of the Jaffna College.

In 1887 Mr. Lee became a teacher at the Ahmednagar College of the American Board in Western India. In 1890 he served the Canadian Presbyterian Mission College in Central India, and in 1891 he was made the Senior Mathematical Master of the Wesley College, Colombo, a post which he relinquished in 1894.

At that time there were several colleges in Colombo—a Buddhistic, a secular Government, a Roman Catholic and an S.P.G. College, besides the Wesleyan Methodist College with a ritualistic head-master who virtually controlled the appointment of teachers and other affairs of the institution. "Thus," says Mr. Lee, "the most important centre of the East, Colombo, possessed not one high-school whose teachers were all Evangelical Christians. I decided that, God helping me, there should be one."

In reliance upon Him who inspired him to action, Mr. Lee was able to win for his scheme the interest of a few friends, and though money was not forthcoming in abundance, the City College was opened in April, 1894, with nine pupils and two teachers, and in September of the same year it was recognized by the Calcutta University as a High School, qualified to send up candidates for the Entrance Examination. In 1897 it was made the Colombo centre of the London College of Preceptors. During the past nine years nearly 1,400 students have gained admission. The present number of pupils is 175.

All the teachers are Christians, belonging either to some evangelical church or to the Salvation Army. They are non-smokers and abstainers, and endeavour to educate the youth under their care to abstain from intoxicating drinks and drugs as well as narcotics.

The study of the Bible is compulsory. The daily exercises are opened with a short Bible-reading, a Gospel address and prayer. The students come from Buddhistic, Hindu, Mohammedan, and Christian homes. The manager can record cases of genuine conversion from Buddhism, Hinduism, and nominal Christianity.

Our visit to Ceylon fell upon the Easter holidays, so that we were not able to see any of the mission schools at work. The above regarding the City College, which, by the way, does not receive any grant from the Government, has been substantiated by several friends, among others by Rev. W. R. Peacock, pastor of the Baptist Church, Colombo, who is an honorary lecturer to the College. Mr. Ferguson, the highly esteemed editor of the Ceylon Observer, is also much in sympathy with the work done by Mr. Lee, and says that it deserves to be crowned with success. Mr. Lee's partner in life is a Christian lady of the Brahmin caste, and a graduate of the M.E. College, Lucknow, founded by Miss Thoburn, whose memory is being cherished throughout India.

We were present at the dedication of their firstborn, named George Müller, after the great man of faith whom they imitate. "During the past nine years," says Mr. Lee, "God has wonderfully helped us, and supplied our needs, for which we are deeply thankful to Him."

Maybe that in his own time the Lord will permit him to have a College-building of his own, so as not to be depending any more upon rented premises. We wish it with all our hearts. W. M.

Balaghat Mission.

THE superintendent of the Balaghat Mission to the Gonds, Mr. John Lampard, hopes to sail shortly for India, embarking at Marseilles on January 23.

Mr. Lampard writes:—Miss Waller, a new worker for the Mission, will accompany me to India, as will also my little son, now, like myself, once more in robust health. A second new missionary also, a young man in Liverpool, will probably go out to Balaghat some time next year.

Weekly letters from India, while giving occasional disappointing news as to individual converts, tell of marked blessing at each of our three mission stations.

After much prayerful consideration, my fellow-workers and I have decided that the time has now come for us to open a new mission station in the town of Balaghat. This town of 5,000 inhabitants is the only one in the district in the centre of which it is situate, and it forms the natural base for the evangelization of the whole population, of which we have hitherto only reached about a tenth. Besides being within reach of some 200,000 at present entirely unevangelized heathen, we shall be able to minister to a small native Christian community living in the town which has at present no spiritual oversight nor meetings for worship whatever. We anticipate that these few Christians will not only form the nucleus of but that it will furnish us at once with a few native helpers in evangelistic work. My wife and I are to lead this advance, and we hope to transfer our Boys' Orphanage to the new centre as soon as possible.

We had hoped to commence this new work in hired buildings, but the construction of a new railway running through the town has resulted in the taking up of every unoccupied house, large and small, and we shall be obliged to build everything we want, probably living in tents meanwhile. Nor can we build in Balaghat the simple wooden buildings that have sufficed for our village stations. The building of a mission house, home for fifty orphan boys, and, perhaps, a small church, will probably cost from £300 to £350—not a large sum for a mission headquarters.

Salvation Army in Germany.

THERE are few countries on the Continent where the Salvation Army has had a harder fight, or has had to wait longer for permanent and visible results, than in Germany. The geographical position of the country has made stringent laws necessary, and these differ with almost every State. This has been one hindrance. Militarism, Socialism, and Romanism have also been stern difficulties in the way of the methods of the Army. At length perseverance has begun to tell, and progress can be reported.

Commissioner and Mrs. Oliphant are in charge of the operations. Mr. Oliphant was once a curate of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe's, and since he has joined the Army he has been in command in Holland, Sweden, and Germany. He is most ably seconded in all his work by his talented wife, who is a daughter of Major Schoch, of Holland. They can both preach in five languages; and they win friends and supporters wherever they go by their earnestness, ability, and hard work. Notwithstanding the previous restrictions, there are now 150 halls in Germany open regularly for the preaching of the Gospel of the grace of God, and nearly 400 officers are spread over the land. There are nine social institutions, and among these a Women's Shelter, Rescue Homes, and a Prisoners' Home in the country surrounded by several acres of land.

As a proof of the progress being made, over twenty corps were opened last year, and over thirty new officers raised for the work. Some of these corps were opened in Catholic districts like Markirch in Alsace, and Freiburg in Baden, in both of which provinces there are signs of a spiritual revival. The rescue work is far-reaching, and among many other cases under their care is a young baroness saved from the hands of the white slave bullies. Owing to commercial depression there is much want, and last winter 55,000 poor people were fed and assisted. Commissioner Oliphant will be happy to give further particulars to any who are interested in Germany, by business or family ties. His address is Blucherplatz 1, Berlin. C. E. G.

Florence Protestant School.

THE latest report of the excellent work in Florence under the charge of Dr. Comandi shows that the blessing of God rests upon it. Much opposition has been experienced in the carrying on of the Boys' Protestant Industrial Home (8A, via Aretina, Florence). Every means available has been used to prevent orphans from being sent, and to induce parents to take away the day pupils. Two poor little orphans, suffering the pangs of hunger, had been left in the streets for several months. An uncle, a poor workman, had tried hard to find them a refuge, but in vain. No sooner was it known that we had received them than the doors of a Roman Catholic institute were opened, and they were taken away in an unlawful and unworthy manner. A Christian man employed at the railway, who willingly sent his children to the school, was stopped one day by a gentleman, who declared that he should forbid him to pass through his grounds for water (which he otherwise would have to fetch from a great distance), if he did not take them away from the school. This poor man, whose faith was not strong, felt himself obliged to submit, to his great sorrow.

Evangelistic work is carried on almost exclusively among the poor and the working-classes, but it is observed with sorrow that indifference and unbelief are rapidly spreading in that class which till now has been open to the Gospel. Yet with gratitude it is recorded that there are always some who obey the call of the Lord.

In the feeding of the hungry during the last two years, about 29,000 kilos of bread (about 58,000lb.) and 8,700 meat tickets have been distributed, besides 2,710f. for help in paying rent. Poor street children who attended the schools received every day soup and bread. Work was given to poor Evangelical women to the amount of 5,715f., and fathers of families without work were employed in digging, breaking stones, and building, to the amount of nearly 7,580f. Bread earned in that way by these poor disinherited of the earth has often proved sufficient to give them new courage and dispose them to listen to the Gospel, and to believe in the compassion of our Heavenly Father.

Touring in France.

A BLESSED work is being done in France by numerous societies as well as by individual workers; yet what are they among so many? I hope to add my quota. I am leaving (D.V.) on January 12 for a two-months' tour in France. Besides preaching and teaching, I shall be busy all the time in the distribution of the Scriptures.

From the Scripture Gift Mission, 15, Strand, I am receiving a liberal supply of Gospels free of charge. The people are hungering for the truth, and experienced labourers declare that Evangelical literature is readily received. I hope to spend a month in Normandy, taking Luneray and Rouen as centres, and a month at Cannes, to cast the precious seed on the Mediterranean coast.

The prayers and co-operation of readers of THE CHRISTIAN are earnestly desired. Letters to me may be addressed, Care of M. le Pasteur Joye, Luneray, Seine Inférieure; or to my new English address, "Normandie," New Malden, Surrey. SAMUEL LEVERMORE.

Some French Notes.

A GREAT loss has been sustained during the past year by French Protestantism, especially that of Paris, in the death of Roger Hollard, who had for some forty years occupied the important post of pastor of the Free Church, Rue Madame, known as the Luxembourg Church. When the Free Churches celebrated their jubilee in 1901, Pastor Hollard was president of their synod; his was, undoubtedly, the most commanding figure amongst them. It was my happiness, when a student in Paris thirty years ago, to attend his ministry regularly; then, as ever since, he was peculiarly attractive to young men. There was such an engaging candour about him; he never pretended that religion was an easy thing, and yet he made it attractive, partly by the charm of his own personality, but far more by the living portrait he loved to paint of his Divine Master.

When I went to take leave of him, and thank him for all the help I had received from him, he told me that the greatest encouragement of his ministry, even in those early days, was to find so often, when called to the bedside of the dying, that his words had been used to bring them to the Saviour, whose presence enabled them with confidence to pass through the dark vale. Of late years his energies had been largely thrown into the work of the Paris Missionary Society. It has been touching to read in the Journal des Missions the testimonies of missionaries to whom he had been not only a pastor, but a dear friend, during their time of study in the Mission House.

That Society, which in the years 1899, 1900, and 1901, lost each year three members of its Zambesi Mission by death, has lately been called to lose another valued member of the same little band. Mme. Adolphe Jalla, the daughter of M. Pons, Moderator of the Waldensian Church, has died in her native Vaudois valleys, shortly after the birth of a little girl, who survives. M. Jalla was in this country with Lewanika, the Barotsi king, at the time of the Coronation; his wife joined him here afterwards. They were to return to the Zambesi in the spring; it will be a sad and solitary journey now for the bereaved husband.

THE EX-PRIEST MOVEMENT.

The December issue of the Prêtre Converti, which is edited by M. Corneloup, contains a deeply interesting correspondence arising out of the secession of the Abbé Rouzeau from the Church of Rome. M. Rouzeau was a much respected priest in Mayenne, part of the ancient province of Maine, a district where Protestantism is practically unknown; and this correspondence, which originally appeared in the local press, excited great interest. In writing to his bishop, he tells how his earnest ministry was attended with disappointment, and how he was led to trace this to ignorance of Holy Scripture on the part of himself and his colleagues, and to the general want of respect felt for them, due to their insufficiency for their high calling. He saw that "for these reasons, faith is disappearing; France is becoming a nation of free-thinkers. The remedy is to speak to the people with the Gospel alone in one's hand, and without seeking to bind them by a number of practices which can only keep them away from God." He is evidently not of the great number who, disgusted with the Church of Rome, leave her ranks to become mere unbelievers, but of the little band who discern a purer and better faith, and cling fast to it. Sorely does France need such. J. G. A.

Tunisia.—Mr. Ahmed A. El Gamati writes:—"Torrents of rain have fallen, on the north of Tunisia more especially, causing all the rivers to overflow, flooding the country, and destroying hundreds of houses and involving the loss of many lives. This has been the case in three towns near Nabeul—Suleiman, Mauzel, Von Galfa, and Beni Khatad, many of whose inhabitants are seeking bread. Here the Gospel has been made known. We—that is, my wife and myself—desire to go to these people in their great need and manifest to them the love of Christ by ministering to their wants so far as we are able." Mr. El Gamati's address is Nabeul, Tunisia, North Africa.

Home Mission Week.

BRAVE POOR THINGS.

THAT is the name they go by, and it is a very good description of them. The "things" referred to are men and women, and boys and girls, who are all deformed in some way or other—blind, deaf, crippled, paralyzed, half-witted; all these may be reckoned among their number.

The Guild of the Brave Poor Things was started by Sister Grace, formerly a worker in the West London Mission, and it is about this movement that I want to tell you something this week.

Her idea originated from Mrs. Ewing's book, "The Story of a Short Life," in which we are told of a little boy who had a great desire to become a soldier and win renown. But, alas, he was run over and crippled for life, and all his hopes dashed to the ground. However, little by little he learned that heroes and brave soldiers are not only to be found on battlefields. One day he struck on the idea of entering in a book the names of those with whom he came in contact, who, while deformed and sometimes helpless, were living courageous lives. He called it his book of "brave poor things.

With the idea of brightening such burdened lives, Sister Grace started this Guild, and now branches are in existence at Bermondsey, Holloway, Bristol, Brighton, Reading, and other places, where the members meet on stated days. The Guild does wonders for them; it not only cheers them up, but helps them to help themselves by developing the powers that they do possess. Basket-work, bent-iron work, fancy needlework, mat-making, and many other useful things are taught. The children fill up the time by painting, looking at picture books, or playing with toys. A musical programme is arranged each time the Guild meets, tea is provided, and the gatherings close with a Gospel address. In this way dull care is put aside; weary faces grow calm; tear-dimmed eyes brighten, and lips that seldom smiled before learn to know what the sunshine of a smile means.

Not only are there these regular meetings, but the members are visited in their homes, surgical instruments are provided where possible, arrangements made for summer holidays; the boys and girls are apprenticed (when funds are forthcoming) to tailoring, silver-chasing, weaving, art needlework, &c., in order that they may learn, if possible, to make ends meet when they grow up.

What do you think is the motto of the Guild? "Lætus sorte meâ"—"Happy in my lot." Perhaps you will think that is rather a strange motto for such as these. Do you think you could learn this lesson if your back ached all day and you had to live in a dark alley, with perhaps not enough to eat, and with very few to love and sympathize with you? Ah, but these poor sufferers do learn to become happy even in their lot, because they find the strength and courage of faith in Jesus Christ.

A little girl who was terribly crippled became a member of the West London Guild. One day, when her limbs ached greatly, and she was lying on a hard bed in a stuffy room, she was heard to say: "I mustn't cry when my back hurts, 'cause it makes mother cry, and I'm a brave soldier. Sister told me so." And when, a little later, her mother came into the room, she said, with a bright smile: "Sister says yer mustn't cry; yer must always larf, mother, and be 'appy in yer lot!"

Then there is an old man who comes to the Guild meetings, and who goes by the name of Father Christmas. He is fast losing his eyesight; but poor as he is, he has taken to live with him a man, who while forty-one years old, only possesses the intellect of a little child. These two dwell together in an underground kitchen. It is very pathetic to see the love between them; the poor, half-witted fellow, while unable to understand much, seems to know that Father Christmas and the Sisters at the Guild are his friends, and will not laugh at him, or tease him, and when he is with them he is quite happy.

When you get older you may have the opportunity to start a Guild of the Brave Poor Things in your own neighbourhood. Until then, perhaps, you would like to help by sending some toys (new or old), books, games, &c., to Uncle Tom for distribution among them.

One hymn is always sung at the Guild meetings, with evident enjoyment by the members. I heard a paralysed old man and a wasted feeble child singing it once (quite out of tune, but that did not matter). It is the one which begins "The Son of God goes forth to war," and there was a ring of triumph in their voices when they came to the words—

> Who best can drink his cup of woe,
> Triumphant over pain;
> Who patient bears his cross below,
> He follows in His train.

And when they reached the last verse, one seemed to forget how deformed and helpless they were, as the words rang out—

> They climb'd the steep ascent of heaven,
> Through peril, toil, and pain.
> O God, to us may grace be given
> To follow in their train.

Truly their road to heaven is a very steep ascent, but these guilds are doing much to make the way brighter for these poor things, and many are learning to follow bravely and hopefully in His train. K. H.

Bringing Others to Christ (John i. 40-45; iv. 28-42.)

IT is good that, so early in the new year, this great question is brought before us. It is vital, first, to our own character, as nothing is so likely to promote our earnestness and devotion as the incessant endeavour to win others for the Saviour; and, second, to the kingdom of God, as its advance is determined much less by remarkable sermons and missions, than by each man saying to his neighbour, "Know the Lord."

It was Mr. Moody's habit to speak each day, personally, to some one about the Lord Jesus. If any shall say that this habit is apt to become mechanical and formal, one can only answer that it is quite likely that it may be so; but I can only say that the days when I have lived like that have been the most radiant of my life. No public sermon or service is such a gauge and test of our standing before God as this. When we are right with Him, and full of the Holy Spirit, it is as easy to speak to others for Christ as for a bird to sing. But when one cannot, it is as likely as not that the tide of the inner life has gone far down the beach.

Let us begin with our next of kin. Andrew brought Peter. The younger brother was an altogether weaker, slighter man; he could never have been so great a gift to the Church as Peter was; but whatever blessing came through Peter, must have been partly credited to Andrew. How glad he was to think that he had been the means of lighting such a fire. Begin with your brother, or sister, who may share the same bedroom!

Let us speak to our nearest friends. Philip found Nathanael, who was afterwards known as Bartholomew. We must sometimes find them, but as they are our friends, it will not be so difficult to discover the time and place when they are most open to our appeal. I think it is very wise to know something of a soul before we appeal to it for the Lord Jesus; and let it be remembered that our friends rather expect that we should make them sharers of our inner thoughts.

We may always count on our Lord's co-operation with our efforts. How sweetly He welcomed Peter, telling him at once of the latent capacity which lay within him, and of which he may have been ignorant. "Thou hast the capacity of becoming a Rock-man." How wisely He addressed Nathanael! Indeed, already He seems to have had dealings with him beneath the fig-tree.

Sometimes we can only give our simple testimony, saying, "We have found," and bring our beloved in the arms of faith and prayer, but we shall ever find Jesus Christ quick, and sympathetic, and willing to meet our endeavours with His own mighty help and fellowship.

Our personal testimony is invaluable. It was the leverage used by Andrew and Philip, for individuals; and by the woman of Sychar, for the entire city. "Come, see a man who told me all things that ever I did." This was the beginning of a revival. It was not the only factor in the great result, but it played a very considerable part in stirring up a deep and widespread interest in this wonderful Man. By her words this poor woman brought a whole city to the feet of Jesus. "Many of the Samaritans believed on Him because of the word of the woman who testified."

International S.S. Lesson.

Sunday, January 18.

PAUL AT THESSALONICA AND BEREA (Acts xvii. 1-12).

GOLDEN TEXT (Psa. cxix. 105).

LEAVING Luke at Philippi, Paul and Silas, with Timothy, travelled 100 miles to Thessalonica, the chief town of one of the four districts of Macedonia, and seat of a Roman governor. Passing through two Roman military stations (v. 1), Thessalonica presented the most promising field for missionary labour (proved 1 Thess. i. 8). A great commercial centre, mixed population of Greeks, Roman Jews, and women of rank and influence (v. 4). Now called Salonibei, population chiefly Turks and Jews, only one-third European. Berea a small country town, now called Verria.

THE SYNAGOGUE.

Followed the example of Jesus (Luke iv. 16), and attended public worship. In the synagogues Paul could (1) address his own beloved race (Rom. x. 1.), (2) those among them who were looking for the Messiah, and (3) read from the rolls of Scripture.

1. The Jews looked for a Christ who should conquer and reign triumphant over their nation. Paul showed that Christ must suffer (Is. liii. 4-6, Dan. ix. 26).

2. The Jews, as a people, did not manifest a full grasp of the doctrine of resurrection. Paul preached boldly and dominantly the resurrection of Christ (Psa. xvi. 10, 11 ; 1 Cor. xiv. 4).

3. The Jews looked for a Messiah to come in earthly glory. "A Prophet like unto Moses," a King (Psa. cx. 1). Paul preached, "Jesus Christ and Him crucified."

These doctrines were new to them, but not to us with our Bibles. Some Jews, a multitude of Greek proselytes to the Jewish religion, and many women of prominence (those who had already forsaken "idols to serve the living God"), identified themselves with Paul and Silas, though property and lives were at stake. Do WE risk anything by saying, "I love and trust in Jesus?"

SUCCESS, OPPOSITION, PERSECUTION.

Success, because the "Gospel came in power and in the Holy Ghost" to them (1 Thess. i. 5).

Opposition from the bulk of the Jews through envy. With verse 6 read Ez. xxi. 27.

Persecution. A mob, a tumult, violence, false accusation, but the enemy was outwitted. Paul and Silas were on their road to Berea ; sheltered and hidden as the little company of Covenanters who, when escaping down the hillside of their native Scotland, was completely hidden by a dense cloud of mist while the enemy passed close by in hot pursuit of them. "In the shadow of His wings."

THE BEREANS.

Bible Searchers. Seeking for hid treasure daily. Groping for light. Thirsty for the water of Life. Waiting on God. Good ground (Luke viii. 15). "Received the word with all readiness of mind," "therefore believed." No persecution there until the venom of Thessalonica reached so far; but Paul escaped, and Silas and Timothy were allowed to carry on the work of the Lord at Berea.

The false accusation brought against Paul was the same as in John xix. 12-15. Paul preached (John xviii. 36). The Jews, under their pretended loyalty to Cæsar, were looking for "the King, the Messiah," who they hoped would drive the Romans out of Jerusalem.

LESSONS.

1. The seeking soul will surely meet the seeking Saviour.

2. We have both Testaments to search and compare prophecy and fulfilment.

3. There are two ways of reading the Bible, and two ways of listening to teaching on it. We may read the letter only, many chapters each day, but the Spirit of God alone can "make us wise unto salvation."

4. The love of Jesus makes glad light in the hearts of children, and makes everything look different (v. 6).

THE NEED OF MORAL COURAGE.

There is a lad of our acquaintance working for a large London firm, and by his fellow-employés he is generally called "The Pastor." Leading a simple Christian life, he is able in his quiet way to influence many of the workmen, who ordinarily would not take any advice whatever from ministers of religion. The lad has the courage to live "as his manner was" when among his Bible class associates, and possessing a winsome, tactful manner, he is able to lead not a few into the ways of godliness and truth. Paul dared to serve God in the synagogue at Thessalonica as his manner was, and young Christians of to-day should take to heart the example of the Apostle. Too many of us are afraid of the taunts of others, and are more concerned to please those around than anxious to please the Lord. The lad fresh from a religious home fears ridicule ; the girl starting in the workroom dislikes being laughed at ; and so they, studying their fellows before they study God, fail to do "as their manner was" when previously they lived amid godly surroundings (v. 2).

DOING ONE THING WELL.

The success of Dr. Maclaren is largely attributable to the fact that he has always devoted the whole of his strength to pulpit work. Speaking once to a company of ministers, the doctor said : "I have tried to preach Jesus Christ ; and the Jesus Christ, not of the Gospels only, but the Christ of the Gospels and the Epistles." To that ideal he has remained faithful, and by his conservation of energy upon one purpose Dr. Maclaren has for many years occupied an eminent position in the pulpit. By abstaining from other forms of Christian work he is able to say, "This one thing I do, I preach." As to-day there are specialists in all departments of human affairs, so in spiritual matters workers are needed who will specialize. Paul's labours lay in the direction of reasoning out of the Scriptures, and the Jesus whom he preached unto the people was Christ. May the Lord indicate to us our definite work for Him, and may we have the grace to hold fast and continue along the line of our particular labour (v. 3).

TURNING THE WORLD UPSIDE DOWN.

During a mission held some time ago, a woman attended one of the closing meetings, and remained to speak to the missioner. She told the preacher she was anxious to have some of the religion her husband had brought home from the mission earlier in the week. At one of the meetings he had given his heart to the Lord, and his wife was astonished at the marvellous difference in his daily life. All swearing had ceased, bad temper had disappeared, and the family Bible, for years a closed book, had been re-opened. In short, as the woman put it, her husband had turned his life upside down. The people of Thessalonica unconsciously uttered a great truth when they said that Paul had turned the world upside-down. Conversion invariably has that effect on all departments of life. At home, in business, spiritually, and socially, Christianity reverses one's former life, and places all one's affairs the right way up. We shall be in good company if we dare, as did Paul and Silas, Whitefield and Luther, Latimer and Ridley, to turn our world upside down (v. 6).

A GOSPEL TO HOLD ON TO.

We have read of an atheist who, as he was dying, appeared very unhappy and, indeed, frightened. A friend at his side, also an atheist, attempted to comfort his dying friend, saying, "Hold on, man ; hold on to the last." The poor man replied, "That is what I want to do ; but, tell me, what am I to hold on to?" The converts at Berea, who listened with all readiness of mind to Paul's message, searched the Scriptures and examined daily if the things taught were so. They there discovered truths on which they could lay hold ; truths on which they were able to live ; and a support for their dying hours. The Bereans were described as "noble," and nobility as true is to be found to-day among those who order their lives according to the teachings of God's Word. If we search the Scriptures we shall find they are they which testify of Christ, and therefore many of us will believe, even as did the noble and honourable people of Berea (vv. 11 and 12).

Appeal.—Mr. H. S. Coates, Post Office, Hawkesbury, Upton, Glos., appeals for "reliable, useful, and interesting books for children to form a Sunday-school library." Volumes likely to have an influence adverse to Romanism and Materialism would be particularly welcome.

Welsh Notes.

THE Young People's Christian Union of Wales have issued an excellent pamphlet in Welsh on Bible reading. It contains suggestions for the systematic reading and study of God's Word. A second edition of the pamphlet has already been called for, and its value is considerably enhanced by the addition of an address by the late George Müller, of Bristol, on "How to read the Bible."

Arrangements for the South Wales Summer School of Theology are now practically complete. The meetings are to take place at Brecon. The chief lecturer will be Rev. A. Garvie, M.A., B.D., Chairman of the Scotch Congregational Union. Mr. Garvie will be assisted by Professors T. Rees, M.A., and T. Lewis, M.A., B.D., of Brecon Theological College, and R. H. Richards, M.A., of Bala College.

In the course of a sermon preached by the Bishop of St. David's at Llandilo on January 2 on the occasion of the induction of Professor Robert Williams, of Lampeter, to be vicar, emphasis was laid upon the position of the laity in the Ordination Service. One of the great principles of the Reformation, the Bishop declared, was that of restoring to the laity their Scriptural place in the Church and in public worship.

By direction of the South Wales and Monmouthshire Calvinistic Methodist Association a temperance letter was ordered to be read in the public services on the first Sunday of the New Year. The letter referred to the money spent on intoxicants, the crime and mortality caused by drink, and the increase of drinking among women. An appeal is made to found a temperance society in every church, and to introduce unfermented wine for Communion purposes.

The Y.M.C.A.

AN Association has been formed for Crouch End under promising circumstances.

Consequent on the resignation of Mr. W. H. Newett, after twenty-five years' service as general secretary of the Manchester Association, Mr. W. Beecher Smith has been appointed financial secretary, and Mr. C. E. Heald general secretary.

The Buenos Ayres Association, which has not yet completed its first year, is making rapid headway, and securing a large membership. A special fund has been inaugurated to enable the secretary, Mr. B. A. Shuman, to visit the neighbouring cities and prepare the way for the organisation of Association work.

The secretaryship of the important association at Sydney, N.S.W., which is becoming vacant by the resignation, after more than twenty years' service, of Mr. David Walker, has been offered to Mr. J. J. Virgo, for some years the successful secretary at Adelaide, but more recently Y.M.C.A. travelling secretary for the Australasian Colonies.

The Capetown Association is experiencing considerable difficulty in catering for the wants of the large numbers of young men reaching that port who are without any definite means of earning their livelihood. Young men should not go out unless they have previously secured situations.

A reception meeting was held at the St. Ives Association on Thursday afternoon, when the officers and committee welcomed Mr. W. J. H. Tuckett, of Exeter, whose services have been placed at the disposal of the St. Ives branch, by the district committee, for the next three months, with the idea of strengthening and consolidating the work in this neighbourhood.

The work of the associations in Eastern Europe has received stimulus in recent years through visits by Mons. Charles Fermaud and Herr Chr. Phildius, the officers of the World's Committee. From Salonica, Bulgaria, and Greece, earnest appeals have now been received by the Committee to furnish secretaries whose efforts should be directed to building up the work at large centres and to aiding smaller associations throughout these countries respectively.

At the initiative of the Derby Y.M.C.A. a local committee has been formed, elected by the Rural Deanal Chapter and the Derby Free Church Council, for the purpose of taking united action with reference to public morals. A first effort was made in the direction of urging all the local shopkeepers to close on the Sabbath. About 220 places were visited, and the replies received from a large number were distinctly favourable. The general feeling was, however, unwillingness to close until public-houses did likewise.

The opening of the Calcutta Central Y.M.C.A. building which took place on November 28, was performed by the Acting Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, the Hon. Mr. Bourdillon, who is President of the Association. General Paterson, the United States Consul, Rev. D. Reid, and many distinguished citizens of Calcutta were present, and addresses were given by the Bishop of Calcutta and the Hon. A. H. L. Fraser, C.S.I., Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces. This latest addition to Y.M.C.A. buildings has cost upwards of £16,000, and constitutes an architectural feature of one of the leading thoroughfares of the city.

Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander.

ON Lord's Day next these esteemed friends commence their mission in this country, at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N. It is not too much to say that Christians in all parts of the land are looking forward to their coming, in the cherished anticipation that prayer for Revival is about to be answered.

The fruitful fellowship in evangelism of preacher and singer has seldom been more happily exemplified since the glorious days of D. L. Moody and Ira D. Sankey than in the unity of heart and labour of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander. The latest tidings from Australia more than confirms the reports that had been received of a far-extending revival. The meetings were no mere effervescent manifestations of excitement. The churches have received many members, and higher ideals of Christian responsibility are realized, the people of God being awakened to fresh and fervent endeavour.

At this time it appears especially desirable to remind our readers, not only of the work, but of the workers themselves.

WHO IS DR. TORREY?

Dr. R. A. Torrey is superintendent of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, Chicago, having been called to that post in 1889. After graduating at Yale College, he studied under Delitzsch, Luthardt, and other masters of Biblical exegesis in Germany. He is forty-six years of age, and has been in the ministry since 1878.

As a preacher of the Gospel, Dr. Torrey has been greatly owned of God. Week by week in his regular ministry his message has gone forth with power, and many have been converted under his word. A large number of preachers and teachers have come under his influence, and by following his earnest and simple methods they have become "able ministers of the New Testament."

While laying hold of men for God and His service by Gospel preaching, Dr. Torrey has also done a marvellous work by the use of his pen. His books on "The Divine Origin of the Bible," "How to Obtain Fulness of Power," "How to Bring Men to Christ," and "How to Pray," have proved of service to many labourers in the great harvest-field. Still larger works by him are "What the Bible Teaches," and "How to Work for Christ." From these writings one may understand the man, alike as to his aims and purposes, and as to his views of spiritual things.

During the past year Dr. Torrey has been on an evangelistic tour. After visiting Japan and China, he went to Australasia. His work in Melbourne, Sydney, and New Zealand, was attended with much blessing. On his way to Great Britain he has visited India, and meetings of a very fruitful character have been held in leading cities of our great Eastern dependency.

Dr. Torrey partakes largely of the spirit of the late Mr. Moody, and is essentially a soul-winner. Direct, clear, and convincing, he sways men by addresses that are at once logical and Biblical, and delivered in the power of the Spirit of God. In Australia all Evangelical denominations, and all classes of the community, unite in thankfulness to God for the spiritual movement of the great Simultaneous Mission which gathered thousands into the Kingdom. The unanimous verdict of ministers and of the religious Press, is that such an awakening has never before been experienced on the Southern Continent.

MR. CHARLES ALEXANDER.

Mr. Charles Alexander, who is Dr. Torrey's singing colleague, has earned for himself in the United States and in Australia an exceptionally high reputation as a musical evangelist. Wherever these brethren have gone, his personality and part in the services have been used of God to draw crowds for whom no other attraction sufficed, and in very many cases the song-preacher has been the one through whom came the message of salvation.

PRELIMINARY PRAYER MEETINGS.

On recent Wednesday afternoons large companies of evangelists and others interested in the mission have joined the Central Committee in special prayer meetings at the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., where remarkable seasons of Divine blessing have been experienced. The gatherings have reached a high level of faith and expectation, and have assuredly served to fan the rapidly-rising revival fire that burns in the hearts of many of the Lord's people. At Mildmay, too, prayer meetings have been held, while from all parts of the country friends have expressed their warm interest in the mission.

AN EXETER HALL WELCOME.

Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander are to be publicly welcomed in this country at Exeter Hall on Friday next, January 9. Originally, it was intended that the reception should be of a semi-private nature and in the Lower Hall, but the number of affirmative responses to invitations has so largely exceeded the average on such occasions that the Council have decided to secure the Large Hall for a public meeting which will begin at five o'clock, and over which Mr. T. A. Denny will preside.

FORTHCOMING MEETINGS.

The Mildmay Mission opens, as we have said, on Lord's Day next, the meetings being held at 9.30, 3.30, and 7; also on week nights (except Saturdays) at 8. The mission is to continue throughout January. Other arrangements will be announced in due course. Meantime, we may mention that the evangelists hope to be in Edinburgh during February, and in Glasgow during March.

The address of the evangelists is—Care of Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

The River of Blessing.

THE River of Blessing is coming apace,
I can hear its flow from afar;
It has swept in mightiest billows of grace
In life-giving fulness all over the face
Of lands that were thirsty and bare.

It has watered with richest abundance the sod
Of Australia and Isles of the East:
With beneficent wave it has travelled abroad
To India, and there with refreshment has flowed
O'er its parchèd and burning coast.

The River of Blessing is coming apace,
I can hear its flow from afar.
It is coming! Yes, coming! Swift over the face
Of the far-stretching ocean, can we not trace
Its pathway to our island shore?

The River of Blessing is coming! O Lord,
I want to plunge 'neath its flow.
My life like a desert is dried up and hard;
I want to drink deep of the blessing outpoured,
Its precious reviving to know.

My God, lead me down from the lofty hillside,
In the deep-furrowed valley to be;
I would not be left on the mountains of pride,
But down where my need shall be all satisfied,
Where the river shall flow over me.

I want to be carried along by its tide
Wherever the blessing may go;
Poor sin-stricken souls to its waters to guide,
To join in the triumph of saints glorified,
And the glad hallelujahs below.

"In School and Playground," by G. E. Morgan, M.A. (1s. Morgan & Scott.) "A splendid book of addresses to the young. The language is clear, direct, and simple, and the illustrations are all of a kind to catch and hold the attention. There are ostensibly twenty-one 'talks,' but in reality there are about twice as many, for the thoughts are packed—are suggestive rather than exhaustive."—Presbyterian.

New Year with our Sailors.—Special festivals and meetings were held at Christmas and New Year's Day at most of the Rests and Bethels belonging to the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, and were largely attended by seamen and fishermen. At the headquarters, opposite London Dock, about 150 Germans were entertained on Boxing Day, and on New Year's Day nearly 400 British and foreign seamen attended the gathering, at which Gospel addresses in English, German, and Swedish were given by Mr. H. W. Maynard, Rev. G. J. Hill, &c. Hearty testimonies were given by converted seamen and officers.

The Week of Prayer.

THE invitation issued by the Evangelical Alliance for the holding of the World-Wide Week of Prayer, named, among causes of serious concern, the lack of converting power accompanying the preaching of the Gospel, combined with wide-spread apathy and indifference to the salvation of God; and suggested very special and importunate supplication every day for a marked manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power in the revival of God's work throughout the world. The special topic for Monday was "The Church Militant." At the meeting in Exeter Hall, the chairman (Prebendary Webb-Peploe) expressed the gratitude with which men belonging to different branches of the Church of Christ come together on a platform where all are one in Him; and emphasized the duty of the Church (1) to act as a shelter for the flock of God, (2) to watch against the entrance of wolves, and (3) to be labourers not sparing themselves in spiritual things.

In a valuable and informing address, based on Eph. v. 23-30, Pastor Fuller Gooch emphasized the necessity for subordinating the secular to the spiritual in the Church of God. It is essential that the Church should be lifted up out of the mere multiplication of organizations and outward means into the sphere of the Holy Ghost. Organization is requisite, but to the extent to which it is leaned upon the Church sinks below the level of power as God's witness in the world. The Church militant is all and everything to our risen Lord—the object of His love, His care, and His intercession; and His great desire for it is that it should be sanctified; made so separate from the world that the world feels its separateness as a testimony for Christ.

"Foreign Missions" being the special topic for Tuesday, Mr. W. H. Seagram (chairman) called for praise for what has been seen of the working of the Holy Spirit during the past year. An earnest address followed from Rev. Trevor Fielder, who dwelt on the essential unity of the work of the Lord whether at home or abroad.

ALDERSGATE STREET Y.M.C.A.

The meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. on Monday last was chiefly devoted to prayer for revival. At the outset Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, spoke briefly on the power of the Gospel, reading Rom. i. 16. People ask whether the Gospel is capable of doing its work; and it is necessary to see that preaching clearly sets forth a Gospel of power, which means the preaching of the resurrection. For wherein lies the difference between the Law and the Gospel? Is it not wrapped up in the one word Resurrection? Moreover, we need to put the truth so that it shall be clearly understood. The unconverted sometimes stumble at the terms used in preaching, not understanding the full meaning. For example, when they hear the term "washed in the Blood of the Lamb," the washing they think of is as that of a defiled garment. They require to understand that it means regeneration—identification with Christ's death and resurrection. Clear preaching of the Gospel in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, will remove the burdens and depressions of those whose minds have become clouded with doubt.

Mr. Henry Varley dwelt on the same thought, saying that while there is much preaching on the morals of the Gospel, on the teaching and example of our Lord, and on His human life, right up to the hour of His death, there is little beyond, on the resurrection. We need that His resurrection power should be felt both in life and teaching.

On Tuesday Mr. M. H. Hodder presided, and Miss Porter, who has been labouring in Japan, in connection with the C.M.S., gave an interesting recital of personal experiences, among thousands of heathen who had never heard the Gospel. She told of daily toil and much opposition—not infrequently of a noisy character—but also of obstacles overcome, of the erection of preaching stations, and the winning of souls for the Lord Jesus Christ.

Friends of Seamen.

WITH the assurance that He who used the Galilean fishermen of old can use the sailors of our own day also, the Seamen's Christian Friend Society has sought, during the fifty-six years of its existence, to enlist in the great army of the Prince of Peace those who traverse the ocean in the interests of our Empire. It is with a sense of deep gratitude to God that the committee record the fact that the past year has been one of great usefulness and rich blessing.

FOURTEEN HUNDRED GATHERINGS.

The headquarters of the Society are wisely placed in the heart of Sailor-town, and here in the Port of London a far-reaching work has been accomplished. A multitude of agencies have been constantly in operation for the benefit of mariners, and during 1902 nearly fourteen hundred services (English and foreign), limelight lectures, temperance meetings, and other gatherings were held. In addition to these the free reading-room and coffee-bar have been extensively used, while the younger folk rally in large numbers to the gatherings arranged particularly for them. The visitation of ships, boarding-houses, and the homes in the locality of the docks has been diligently pursued.

From the recently published report of the Society's operations during the year it is evident that the work at the numerous bethels round the coast has enjoyed an equal measure of Divine blessing. The institute at Southwick has been a boon to numbers of seamen. The usual ports on the south coast of Cornwall have been successfully missioned, and the Sailors' Home at Fowey has been the centre of many beneficent influences. On the North Devon coast efforts were no less successful than in former years. The Sailors' Rest at Appledore is the bright and happy rendezvous of most of the resident seamen and fishermen, and others who have visited the port, and the services at the adjoining Seamen's Bethel have been well attended, proving profitable unto many.

A HOME FOR LYNN.

Some useful work has been done at the temporary Seamen's Bethel at Lynn, and although the tenancy of the building is about to expire, an influential local committee has been formed with the object of perpetuating the effort, and it is hoped that a new Sailors' Home will shortly be built. Ports on the west coast have been missioned, including Liverpool, Preston, Morecambe, Fleetwood, &c., while the Society's institutes and rests in Cumberland are as much as ever frequented by seafarers and others. The missionary who labours on the Ayrshire coast has met with much encouragement, while at the Bethel at Ramsey, Isle of Man, many have been spiritually helped. Some idea of the appreciation of the seamen of Galway for the efforts made on their behalf may be found in the fact that in addition to the usual work at the Memorial Home, dormitories have been built and furnished. Commander Law, R.N., reports that during one month no fewer than 180 bluejackets availed themselves of this accommodation.

Correspondence has been carried on with seamen all over the globe, ships' crews have been supplied with loan libraries and bags of books, and pecuniary relief has been given to a large number of sick and destitute sailors.

The committee are at present somewhat exercised concerning the financial position of the Society. The general debt has been accumulating till it now amounts to upwards of £1,300. It is felt that the difficulties of the work are sufficiently heavy without the additional burden of inadequate funds. While in every port the emissaries of evil far outnumber those for good, it is of vital importance that every effort which is being made to bring seamen under Christian influences should not lack the support which it must receive, if the great multitude of sailors using our shores are to become followers of Him who is destined to have "dominion from sea to sea, and from the rivers unto the ends of the earth."

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

REV. DR. J. Q. A. HENRY and Mr. T. Armon Jones are about to enter on another series of missions in various parts of the United Kingdom. Applications for their services are multiplying, consequent on the remarkable effect in securing pledges and reviving the Temperance cause, of Dr. Henry's impassioned and instructive addresses and Mr. Armon Jones's effective singing.

Words to Evangelists.

"NEVER had we greater reason to thank God, considering that we have been privileged to see an increase in the work, and again have lacked nothing." Such was the key-note of the opening address by Mr. John Wood (chairman) at a gathering of members and friends of the Evangelization Society, held at Exeter Hall on Friday evening last. The gathering was large and representative, more than one hundred of the evangelists themselves being present, with friends, helpers, and supporters. A hearty response was made when Mr. Wood gave expression to his gratitude that every man on the list accepts the Word of God in its entirety, having proved the Old and New Testaments alike to be the Sword of the Spirit. The joy had been theirs of seeing the power of the Word in many thousands of souls.

The principal address was given by Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, who recalled with deep satisfaction the fact that he was ordained to the ministry with reference to no particular pastoral charge, and that he had thus been set aside to the work of an evangelist. He believed that every minister should set himself to preach the Gospel plainly, prayerfully, enthusiastically, and successfully. Addressing himself in most lucid and helpful fashion to an examination of the innermost secrets of a truly evangelistic ministry, he directed attention especially to the life of the Apostle Paul, the greatest evangelist of the ages, who testified of the things he had seen, and whose testimony increased with his revelations.

Heart-searching words followed as the fourfold passion, which must mark every evangelist, was depicted with great power and earnestness—(1) a passion for the will of God, (2) a passion for the person of Christ, (3) a passion for the Word of God, (4) a passion for the souls of men.

The Tyndal Bible School.

A VALUABLE opportunity will be afforded to lovers of the Word of God by the special course of Bible study which Pastor Fuller Gooch has kindly consented to conduct during the ensuing term. This course is intended for Christian workers and other Bible students, the subject being, "Varied Aspects of Divine Revelation."

As the work of the School is carried on entirely by postal correspondence, distance is no hindrance to membership, and students for the special course are being enrolled from all parts of the country. Other classes are carried on for less advanced students, including a postcard class for those who have "no time."

The work of the Tyndal Bible School has been greatly blessed since its commencement two years ago, and it is hoped that this new departure will result in widely extended usefulness. All particulars may be obtained by enclosing a stamp to Miss Mason, The Tyndal Bible School, West Norwood, London, S.E.

The Poor Ministers' Clothing Society appeals for garments, new or partly worn, to send to poor and needy pastors in country districts, many of whom have large families and incomes less than £50 a year. The present cold weather has brought many applications asking for help. The president of the Society is Mrs. Thomas Spurgeon, Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, S.E.

Gray's Yard Mission.

A LARGE gathering, fraught with a pathetic interest, celebrated the first Sunday of the New Year at Gray's Yard Mission, Duke Street, W., on Sunday morning last.

A somewhat similar concourse meets every Sunday for a free breakfast, but the first Sunday of the year is always invested with special features, as the meal is of a more substantial order.

Last Sunday morning 400 men were seated in the larger hall of the mission, and 100 more, with 100 women, in the smaller hall. A very broken-down looking company they formed, composed of veritable "out-o'-works," whose exterior suggested many a bitter experience.

Yet the results of this good work, which has been continued for many years, have been most encouraging, and not a few of the world's apparently hopeless ones have been brought to Christ, and have been enabled to make a new start in life. A gentleman was present on Sunday, who had interested himself in three such, and taken them with him to Canada, where each is doing well.

Mr. and Mrs. Alister Fraser are now carrying on the work. On Sunday morning, Lord Kinnaird, who presided, gave the men a hearty New Year welcome; Sir Robert Anderson led in prayer, and an address was given by Mr. G. E. Morgan.

Letters to the Editor.

A HINT FOR SECRETARIES.

I SHOULD regret any check on the flow of charity at this season, but I should like to point out before another year begins, the reckless waste incurred by the innumerable appeals which philanthropic societies post to people long since dead.

No week passes without at least one or two such reaching me, addressed to a lady who died early in 1899; and three charities still solicit help from her husband, who passed away in 1884. These are all "arrows shot at a venture," for I do not include in my complaint those good works which either of these had subscribed to.

Why should money given often at the cost of self-denial, be thrown away thus, when in ordinary business no large shopkeeper would think of posting his circulars by lists that were not kept corrected up to date? In this instance, the use of any ordinary London directory would have been a sufficient corrector. H. M. B.

AN ANALYSIS OF FIGURES.

DEAR SIR,—In your issue, January 1, p. 22, there is a paragraph on Church Attendance in Manhattan Island, New York, which states that the average attendance of the adult population is no less than 31 per cent. "And," it concludes, "one-third of all these churchgoers are men."

If the result of this census was put as your correspondent puts it, it must indeed have surprised New Yorkers; but analyzed, its rosy optimism rapidly fades, and gives place to the depression attending all such counts of church attendances, wherever taken.

First of all, it should be noted that of the adult population of 1,448,910, 522,130 are Roman Catholics, leaving a non-Romanist population of 926,780. It is the church attendance of these people which is the really important point to those interested in the future of Protestant religion in New York. Now, the figures of attendances at Protestant places of worship, as given by your correspondent, amount to 119,209, not quite 12·8 per cent. of the non-Romanist population.

We are not told whether these figures represent the average attendance at one service, or the average of attendances during the whole Sunday; but the natural deduction from the words "the average attendance for these Sundays (the first three in November) was 451,731," is that it means the whole attendance for one Sunday. If so, a very large deduction must be made for the double attendance of the same persons.

What that deduction should be can only be approximately given by those well acquainted with the habits of churchgoers in New York. Supposing, however, that one-third of the attendants at the churches in Manhattan Island go twice a day, it then appears that the average attendance is about 8·6 per cent. of the non-Romanish population, or 79,473 persons out 926,780. If further it is noted that of these 79,473, one-third only were men, we have this result, that in a population of 926,780 only 26,491 men go to a place of worship, that is 1 in 35; or, to put it in another form, only 2·86 per cent, of the non-Romanist population of Manhattan Island are church-goers.

I trust that the above clear and careful analysis will show your readers that the statement, as your correspondent puts it, so far from being surprisingly satisfactory is absolutely the reverse.—Yours faithfully,

Richard Heath.

About Books.

FOR FRENCH READERS.

THE works of the late pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle continue to be circulated in many languages. We welcome the story of his life in French—La Vie et l'Œuvre de C. H. Spurgeon—compiled by Madame E. Saillens, with an introductory letter by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon. There are eight illustrations. (3s. post free. Pasteur J. P. Dardier, Oratoire, Geneva.)

Dr. Saphir's valuable book, "Christ and the Scriptures," is at length available for French people—Christ et les Ecritures. A portrait is given as frontispiece. May the work find as many appreciative readers in this dress as it has in the vigorous English of its talented author! (2s. post free. Pasteur J. P. Dardier, Oratoire, Geneva.)

Cinquante Ans dans l'Eglise Romaine. Par le Père Chiniquy. (Vol. I. 3frs. Geneva: J. H. Jeheber.) Father Chiniquy's "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome" is timely reading in French-speaking countries; so we cordially welcome this translation, to be completed in another volume. We could wish that the original were more read in our own land and America, not only by those who admire Rome from without, but also by those who are within, and weary of being there. Mr. Eug. Reveillaud, of Versailles, writes a striking preface to the volume before us.

One of the latest works of Otto Funke of Bremen—a volume of straight talks on sins and negligences, national, church, and individual—has been translated into French by Pasteur J. Gindraux, under the title, Propos sans Fard (J. H. Jeheber, Geneva). The pages not only point out faults and deficiencies, but indicate the remedy by showing God's provision in Christ. "The Power of Intercession" is a paper of great force. Among other contents we would name, as specially remarkable, "The Unbaptized Right Arm," "Unknown Children of God," "The Pleasure of Giving," "Eternal Youth," "Concerning Funeral Orations." We can forgive the pastor his unqualified denunciations of the British in respect of the recent war, for the strong sense and wisdom of his treatment of subjects on which Christians generally will welcome his strenuous thought and warm-hearted advocacy.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Children's Treasury of Pictures and Stories is a book that will be welcome everywhere. (1s. Nelson.)

The Home Messenger (Horace Marshall & Son), in addition to a running story, has a variety of useful and entertaining articles.

Alongside much intelligence of mission effort in Scotland, Africa, and other fields, there are many good things in The Reaper (64, Bothwell Street, Glasgow). In a series of articles on "The So-called Higher Criticism" the subject is discussed in a way that will be helpful and reassuring to many. Choice "Seed for Sowers," illustrations, and useful hints abound.

The annual volumes issued from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, are excellent. Good News (4d.) is a budget of evangelistic readings. The Gospel Trumpet (1s.) with its large type, will be specially welcome to the aged. The British Messenger (1s. 6d.) provides reading of the best kind for the homes of the people. Rev. W. B. R. Wilson continues his valuable papers, digesting life incidents illustrative of passages of Holy Scripture.

The contents of the Young Man (H. Marshall & Son) touch life at many points. The stories, long and short, are select, and exhibit a wide variety of style. Readable and informing papers on literary, scientific, and ethical topics are interspersed with character sketches of the men whom people want to know about. Through the volume there run threads of earnest religious teaching, and of testimony that true manhood cannot exist unless dominated by spiritual things.

The second volume of Thoughts from the Word of God (2s. 6d. P. W. Heward, 14, Pier Head, Wapping, E.), shows that the monthly issue is increasing in usefulness to Bible students, teachers, and preachers. Fresh and striking helps, outlines, and illustrations are accompanied by more complete papers from varied sources. The editor is wisely guiding his readers into the rich stores of Puritan theology. Through all, there runs the golden thread of the expectation of the Coming of the Lord.

The Missionary Herald of the Baptist Missionary Society appears in an improved form this month. The contents are of peculiar interest, and we trust they will be influential in helping the good cause. (1d. Mission House, 19, Furnival Street, E.C.)

Very deep interest attaches to the point raised in Shall We Know Our Friends in Heaven, by Rev. Dr. Charles Leach (1s. A. H. Stockwell), and Christian hearts will be uplifted by the perusal.

Bible Studies in the Life of Christ: Historical and Constructive. By Rev. Henry T. Sell, D.D. (1s. 6d. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.) A good piece of work, by one who has done much to promote practical Bible study.

A Saved Darling, by Henry Fuller Morriss, has proved its popularity as a service of song in a number of chapels and missions. The story is simple and interesting, the moral clear and telling. (3d. R. J. James, 3 and 4, London House Yard, E.C.)

Twelve Sermons on Precious Promises, by C. H. Spurgeon. (1s. Passmore & Alabaster.) It is sufficient to announce the collection in one book of these grand discourses. Those who have read will be the better for reading again—to "mark, learn, and inwardly digest."

The January issue of Climate contains a valuable discussion on "the extermination of malaria." Sir William Macgregor suggests a "combine," and his views, as well as those of Major Ronald Ross, deserve careful study. (6d. Castle, Lamb, and Storr, 133, Salisbury Square, E.C.)

The "Baptist Pulpit" now includes The Making of Man and other discourses by Rev. Daniel Hughes; and Through Christ to Life, or Sunshine Every Day, by Rev. J. J. Ellis. The latter volume seems to be the outcome of much thought and reading. (2s. 6d. net. A. H. Stockwell.)

Published for the twenty-seventh year, The Minister's Pocket Diary combines all the essential features of a clerical vade mecum. Besides the usual ecclesiastical calendars, there is an abundance of useful information which will be of invaluable service to clergymen and Nonconformists alike. (2s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Thoroughness and minuteness are outstanding features of The Church Dictionary and Almanack. (2s. net. Nisbet.) In compact form the fullest information is supplied regarding clergy and livings, with much that will be highly appreciated by those who are responsible for or interested in church affairs.

Among booklets of the season, Beyond the Marshes, by Ralph Connor (1s. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.), is one that will touch the hearts of the readers. The pictures of Scots in Canada who, in the fear of God, are fighting a hard battle with nature for a living, illustrate the way in which physical deprivation is so often compensated by spiritual gifts.

The Cambridge University Press has issued the first volume of a series to be called "The Cambridge Bible for Schools," in which the Revised Version will form the text, edited with notes such as students require. St. Matthew has been prepared by Arthur Carr, M.A., vicar of Addington, Surrey. The treatment is pointed and clear. (1s. 6d. net.)

There is an almost startling element in the painting by Dr. Gordon Stables, in The Cruise of the Vengeful, of a great war in 1909. But the boy who reads it will see that, surrounded by inventions which only a very fertile mind could have imagined, the men and youths of whom it tells are yet the very persons of whom he wants to hear. The book will be a boy's favourite. (J. F. Shaw.)

The courtship, call, and conflicts of a Methodist minister are powerfully described in The Minder, by John Ackworth. (6s. Horace Marshall & Son.) In addition to the attractions of a well-told story, the pages of which are full of men and women whom we seem to know intimately, the side-lights on the inner working of an active "circuit" are very grateful to a sympathetic reader.

All lovers of children will welcome Rev. J. H. Burn's latest compilation—The Mothers' Book of Song. (3s. net. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.) Here are old and new lullabies and cradle songs; and the whole make a beautiful anthology. The illustrations, by Charles Robinson, are choice and numerous; what is better, they evince a thorough sympathy with the attractive subject of the volume.

"Fourth edition, completing 45,000," now appears on the title page of that remarkable little work, Advice to 20th Century Business Juniors, and others of both sexes, with hints and considerations for seniors. (Leatherette, 1s.; paper, 4d. Horace Marshall & Sons.) We know no more compact statement of facts and principles, at once commercial and physiological, social and ethical; and the anonymous author deserves to be honoured for his exertions for the welfare of the manhood and womanhood of his day and generation.

With Rev. Thomas McWilliam we believe that an intelligent grasp of the Minor Prophets is of the greatest advantage in appreciating the higher truth revealed in our own dispensation. In Speakers for God the messages of these books are thoughtfully yet simply expressed, so that he who runs may read. The intense spirituality of every "burden" is brought home to the heart. It does not appear, however, necessary to concede to critics even so much as has been done, say in the case of Jonah. (5s. H. R. Allenson.)

Indubitable evidence concerning the effect of intoxicating drink on the human system and moral sensibilities is furnished in The Temperance Reader. It is noteworthy that the book is specially adapted for schools, and is the joint work of Rev. W. H. Cologan and Sir Francis R. Cruise, D.L., M.D., whose testimony, with that of other prominent authorities quoted, will be of real service to those who are endeavouring to inform and enlighten the rising generation on this vital question. (1s. Eason, Dublin.)

Mrs. H. Porter's useful volume, A Lamp Unto My Feet, will be welcomed by those who are looking for suggestions on the principles and practice of Bible study. Among many significant considerations emphasized, stress is laid on the fact that the depths or the riches of wisdom, comfort, and hope, hidden in the pages of the Bible cannot be picked out and carried away in some striking text or favourite passage here and there, but must be toiled for in the eager, diligent search of the Scriptures, rendering them daily more and more precious to the searcher and fruitful in his life. (2s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

Day by Day of the Christian Year: Being Daily Readings in the Words of the Revised Version of Holy Scripture, following the Seasons of the Christian Year. (2s. upwards. Henry Frowde.) A choice compilation. There is system in the arrangement. At the head of each page, by way of text, stands an excerpt from the Gospel and Epistle for the Sunday; and this is followed by passages that are kindred in meaning, and calculated to give impressive force to the sacred message. Such a book cannot but be helpful to the spiritual life, and it is calculated to promote a greater familiarity with the best features of the Revised Version.

Sunday Morning Talks is the title of a volume of addresses to the boys and girls of his congregation by the late Frederick Hall Robarts, minister of Hillhead Baptist Church, Glasgow. (3s. 6d. Baptist Tract and Book Society.) Volumes of this description are numerous, but we have rarely come across one so choice in contents. The "talks" are fifty-two in number, and the children who heard them were greatly privileged. Some books of this kind have much in them, but no Gospel; here we find the Gospel in glorious fulness, and set forth with admirable simplicity. The volume has been edited by the sister of the lamented preacher, of whom an excellent portrait is given as a frontispiece. Rev. William Brock, of Hampstead, a life-long friend of Mr. Robarts, supplies a welcome biographical outline. We trust these talks will be read to the little folk in many a Christian home.

The Bible Union Handbook and Christian Workers' Companion for 1903 (Tonbridge: M. Stonestreet, 25, High Street). Here are many beautiful thoughts on Christian life and labour.

Alphabet of Redemption, by A. L. W. (Houlston and Sons). A choice booklet, giving the names, titles, and offices of Christ, with excerpts from Holy Scripture, and other brief gatherings.

The new issue of the Congregational Almanack (2d. R. Banks & Son) is a compact and useful manual for ministers and church officers. Excellent photographs are given of Rev. H. Storer Toms (Enfield) and the late Dr. Joseph Parker.

Two booklets, by E. J. Beaumont, evangelist, will be found most useful for distribution among those who are young in years or in the faith—The Holy Spirit, the Remembrancer (1s. 1d. per doz.); Believe that Ye Receive (6½d. per doz. Of the author, 22, Glengall Road, S.E.).

Major-General Hutchinson has addressed to believers in Praying "In" and "To" the Holy Ghost (8 pp. 2d. per doz. Morgan and Scott), words which call for quiet meditation. We have much yet to learn about our true attitude to the Holy Ghost.

The thought of the personal influence of parent on child is shown to be fraught with encouragement as well as warning, in As is the Mother, so is the Daughter, by Mrs. W. E. Legg (1d. Partridge). Discriminately circulated it would be found to be full of helpful suggestion.

Evangelists at Work.

Allahabad.

A SERIES of evangelistic services in the Allahabad M.E. Church, by Mrs. I. V. CALKINS, of Bombay. It was a time of real heart-searching and refreshing from the presence of the Lord. There were quite a number of conversions, but the most important work of all was the revival in the church.

Mr. W. H. Jude in Liverpool.

On Sunday and Monday, December 28 and 29, Mr. W. H. JUDE paid another visit to Liverpool, giving a series of services in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant, when, in spite of the inclement weather, the building was crowded. At one of the services the missioner gave a graphic realisation of Paul and Silas in their visit on the Sabbath day to the worshippers at the river side at Philippi, portraying by special solos and descriptive hymns the power of the Holy Spirit upon Lydia and the damsel of divination, and, later, the wonderful conversion of the Philippian gaoler. The meetings were remarkable for their brightness, the singing of carols, &c., being appropriate for the season of the year.

The Boy Preacher.

Mr. JACK COOKE, the Boy Preacher, has conducted united Gospel services in the Baptist Tabernacle, Grimsby, extending over the four days, December 28-31. Multitudes have hurried to hear the youthful missioner. The building—into which it is possible to pack some 1,600 or 1,700 people—has been crowded to its utmost capacity at every service, and hundreds who desired to gain admission have had to be turned away. It is long since any series of services made so great an impression upon the town. Folks who have never been attracted even by evangelists of highest reputation have been drawn by curiosity to see the 'Boy," whose fame had preceded his advent here. The general feeling produced is that of surprise that one who, according to years, ought to be without large experience of life, undeveloped in thought, and crude in expression, should manifest such a grasp of things, such an insight into human character, and such ability to appeal, not only to the emotions, but likewise to the intellect. Some sixty persons have professed either conversion or restoration. Many Christians have been stimulated, and thank God for the special endowment which He has given to His young servant.

H. S.

South and West Ireland.

After three months' work in Dublin, Mr. J. J. SIMS opened a ten days' mission in the Munster Hall, Limerick, proclaiming the good news of Salvation, and danger of neglecting it, with much power, aided by two lantern screens—throwing on one passages from the Word of God, or illustrated hymns, and on the other the story of the "Pilgrim's Progress," the Apostle Peter in prison, and other subjects so well suited to rivet the attention of the hearers—the eye, ear, and heart being exercised in the reception of Gospel truth. The hall was well filled, and many who probably never heard the Gospel before were attracted by the lantern views, and the singing of solos by Mrs. Sims. These meetings were followed by similar ones held at Pallaskenry, a village about twelve miles from Limerick, held in a country Methodist chapel, kindly lent for the mission. The little chapel was full; nearly all the Protestants in the surrounding district flocked in to hear the "wonderful words of life." In the porch of the chapel, each evening, a number of the farming class of different religious beliefs crowded in, taking advantage of the dark, and these listened with rapt attention. Some believed, backsliders were restored, and Christians were strengthened. Mr. and Mrs. Sims commence at Tralee early this month, and continue the work in the South and West of Ireland, visiting many of the smaller towns where such missions are seldom or ever held. The prayers of God's children are requested on behalf of the mission.

Mr. F. N. Charrington's Work.

The month of December is always a busy one in the East End. It is a season when more seems to be spent in drink than any other during the year. Consequently for many years Mr. CHARRINGTON has set aside this month for special Gospel temperance work. The mission which has just closed with such happy results was taken by Mr. GEO. NOKES and Mr. WM. NOTMAN, with Miss EMILY ANGEL as soloist, Mr. J. S. HARRISON taking the Sunday and Wednesday services. Much work was accomplished, and as a result 190 pledges were received during the period. Not only was the pledge signed, but some interesting cases of conversion are recorded.

On Watch Night the hall was crowded. At 9.30 Mr. Charrington, with a large number of workers, headed by the Crusaders Brass Band, with a huge transparency on a waggon, marched through the roughest back streets of the East End inviting the people to the watch night service in the great Assembly Hall. A large portion of the audience came straight from the music-halls and public-houses. Although many were drunk, it was marvellous how orderly and solemn the meeting was; in fact, two minutes before midnight, when the whole audience were asked to bow in silent prayer, there was perfect stillness, and, without rising from their seats, the great congregation (led by the choir) joined in singing "I will arise and go to my Father." Mr. J. S. Harrison and Mr. Geo. Nokes both gave brief, earnest addresses, and Mr. T. J. Leafe led in prayer. At the close Mr. Charrington said, "Now in this vast audience there are hundreds of people who would be Christians, and there is only one thing that stands between them and God—that one thing is drink." He then appealed to the audience to come and sign the temperance pledge. He had hardly spoken the words when from all parts of the great hall men and women literally rushed forward and crowded round the tables in the area of the hall eager to sign the pledge. The people from the galleries filled both the upper and lower platforms. Altogether no fewer than 236 signed the pledge, making a grand total of 426 for the month.

Rev. J. Lyall in New Zealand.

Describing the mission held by Rev. JAMES LYALL at South Dunedin, New Zealand, The Outlook, a well-known Christian paper published at Dunedin, says:—"The promise of great things then given has been fully realized. The new Town Hall has been crowded each evening. Additional chairs were hired so that every spare corner might be utilized. These have all been occupied and the standing space as well. The Bible readings in the Presbyterian Hall, Caversham, have been times of heart-searching, encouragement, and consecration. The ministers of the local churches, with their workers, joined the Salvation Army in short open-air meetings each evening just previous to gathering in the Town Hall. These have arrested attention, and induced many to attend the place of meeting.

"One of the most interesting gatherings of the mission was that held at the Hillside Workshops at midday. Punctually on the opening of the gates a large choir, with other enthusiastic workers, poured into the yard and occupied a position pointed out by the manager of the works. A stack of heavy timber was found, by its arrangement in something of gallery form, to be a splendid substitute for more conventional choir seats. An organ was placed upon a truck, and Mr. Lyall, accompanied by Revs. Ward, Mackie, Captain Slattery, and others, mounted alongside.

"Miss Cooper, of Wellington, sang with taste the hymn 'Why not?' and ere she had concluded the adjoining stacks of timber and some waggons were covered with men, who listened with rapt attention to Mr. Lyall's brief and pointed address on "Some reasons why a man should be a Christian." The speaker drove his points home by apt and telling illustrations, which were evidently appreciated by the men. All too soon the warning whistle blew, summoning every man to his post.

"A feature of the mission is the very large number of young men and lads who not only have been attending the meetings, but have also made the great decision. Very large numbers of those who are known to be difficult to reach have, night after night, entered the hall and stayed to the very last, speaking with the personal workers, with the result that quite a large number of conversions have taken place among them. Never before has such general interest in the way of salvation been aroused in South Dunedin. The present interest is the more noteworthy in that it has been aroused in the midst of the distractions necessarily accompanying the political campaign."

On the completion of her mission in connection with the Bible Christians at Providence, Kilkhampton, Miss COWMEADOW held a service for the public reception of converts, when the pastor, Rev. J. Seldon, presented notes of admittance to fifty-five persons.

Miss GLOVER, of Edinburgh, closed a three weeks' mission on December 21, in Alloa, N.B. The meetings were held in the Corn Exchange, both Sabbath and week nights. Miss Glover was a channel of much blessing to Christians, who rallied round her in her special effort. Several of the unconverted profess to have passed from death to life. There are nine breweries and three distilleries in the town and district, and the influence of the drink traffic makes evangelistic effort difficult. Miss Glover's mission has strengthened the hands of those in the town who are seeking the salvation of the lost. D. D.

Mr. JOSIAH NIX has just concluded an encouraging series of evangelistic services at Wallsend-on-Tyne. The oldest members say they have never before seen such a wonderful work of grace in the town. Every night during the mission many were found interceding for mercy, while scores of adults signed the temperance pledge. A brass band, raised at the first meeting from among the members and friends, rendered excellent service, and succeeded in inducing many to attend the house of God, where the earnest and manly appeals of the missioner led them to seek the Saviour. The novelty and enterprise of the midnight service and the "merrie meeting" attracted large audiences, and many habitual drunkards not only signed the pledge, but made their way into the inquiry-rooms In all about 100 persons professed conversion, and 300 temperance pledges were taken.

Under the auspices of the Evangelization Society a twenty-one days' mission has been conducted by Mr. H. F. POUNCEY at the Baptist Chapel, Yorkley, and the sister church at Parkend. The first fortnight was spent at Yorkley, when, with the exception of Saturday evenings, when the service consisted of a prayer meeting and a Bible "chat," Gospel services were held every evening. Each service was well attended, and Mr. Pouncey's addresses were attractive in their simplicity and power. A number of young people decided for Christ, and fresh zeal has been put into the hearts of the members of the church; altogether, it is felt that lasting good has been done. Mr. Pouncey worked for the last week at the Parkend Chapel, where he conducted the services on the same lines as at Yorkley. Here, also, the attendance was encouraging, and it is believed that permanent good results will follow the evangelist's labours.

Requests for Prayer.

For the son of an evangelist, who is in danger of drifting into scepticism.

That the Holy Spirit's power may be abundantly manifested in a mission commenced at the east end of Pembroke.

For blessing upon the addresses of Mr. Thos. Hogben, of the One by One Band, at the Ipswich monthly meetings, January 15.

A lady requests prayer for a dear relative addicted to the use of a drug, which has weakened her brain and warped her moral sense of right.

For Finns passing through this country on the way to America, and that the distribution of the Word of God among them may be blessed.

That God's abundant blessing may rest upon a new church to be opened at Lock's Heath, Hants, on January 15, and that many may be saved.

That all orphans, homeless women, widows, and girls in India may be rescued and placed under the wise management of godly Christian people.

That the Mission to Men to be held at the Y.M.C.A., Weston-super-Mare, January 11 to 18, by Rev. R. Venting, may result in many being won for Jesus Christ.

That the Church in India may become a great evangelizing agency, so that the Gospel may be given to every man, woman, and child in India by the Christians as freely as they have received it.

Personalia.

Miss Harriet Mason, late of Oakwood Lodge, Ide Hill, Kent, has been compelled to close her Home of Rest. Many a weary worker, who has enjoyed the comfort ministered by the Home, will regret this; but lack of funds left no alternative. Communications to Miss Mason may be addressed 244, Shrewsbury Road, East Ham, Essex.

Miss Charlotte Mason, of the Houses of Rest, Finchley Road, N., and Eastbourne, is gradually regaining strength, and is now able to sit up in her bedroom for about an hour daily. For progress thus far, both Miss Mason and her fellow-workers at the Houses of Rest are specially grateful for the many prayers which have gone up from the Lord's people on her behalf, and which are being so graciously answered.

No Christian traveller, stopping at Port Said, if only for a little while, should omit a call on Mr. Alexander Locke, at the Sailors' Rest and Bible Depot. He is now in England, seeking to interest the people of God in his work, and to establish a regular system of support. He will be thankful to friends who will arrange drawing-room or other meetings, or otherwise aid his difficult work in an ungenial soil. He may be communicated with through ourselves or at his address, 3, Hermitage Villas, Childs Hill, London, N.W.

Irish Notes.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL Teachers' Association, under the presidency of the Dean of Derry, has been formed in Limavady for teachers in the town and in the surrounding district. A course of lectures is to be given to members by Rev. J. W. McQuaide, rector of Killea.

Miss Chadwick, daughter of the Bishop of Derry, who has been for some years a missionary in Uganda, is now home on furlough, and has been giving in Londonderry and the neighbourhood most interesting addresses with regard to her work and experiences in mid-Africa.

Anglo-Jewish Scriptures.—Mr. Joseph S. Davidson, of the Christian "Chief Corner Stone" Mission to the Jews, has reduced the Scriptures to an Anglo-Jewish form—the English version printed in Hebrew character, with such adjustments as the peculiarities of the two languages render necessary. The first part of an edition of the New Testament is ready, embracing Matthew i.-ix. (6d. The Editor, 118, Milton Road, Stoke Newington, N.)

Tent Hall, Glasgow.—A special three weeks' mission, by Mr. W. D. Dunn, was commenced on the last Saturday evening of the year. The work at the Tent Hall, since Mr. Robert Logan, formerly of Bethany Hall, was appointed to the leadership of it eighteen months ago, has made great progress. At the regular services many find their way to Christ, and the attendances have largely increased. Mr. Dunn's present mission should help to confirm and strengthen the good work which constantly goes on. J. C.

The Soudan Pioneer Mission.—In our last number an interesting article appeared from the pen of Mrs. Karl Kumm, concerning a forward step shortly to be made in the Soudan. We have been asked to state that the above mission has been formed at Cliff College, Calver, via Sheffield, where it has its headquarters, and where all friends interested are asked to communicate. A few sums have already been promised to support the first missionaries, and some volunteers have offered. The Council meets at Sheffield, and earnest prayer is asked that its decisions, shortly to be made, in the acceptance and sending out of candidates, may be Divinely directed, and that prepared men and needed help may be supplied.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of spiritual progress and effort in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and not trivialities; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Peterborough resumed his diocesan work on New Year's Day for the first time since the accident which he sustained while riding in April last.

Our esteemed contemporary, the English Churchman, celebrated its "Diamond Jubilee" last week. In the course of a descriptive and reminiscent article the editor wrote of his paper: "Its career represents a remarkable conversion from Tractarian Sacerdotalism to Bible Protestantism. At the close of six decades, this publication rejoices, through the good hand of God upon it, to preach the Faith which at its outset it sought to destroy."

Congregational.

Rev. Thomas Grear, pastor of Bishopsgate Chapel, is laid aside with a severe attack of influenza.

Mr. Arthur Platts, B.A., of Mansfield College, has accepted the pastorate at Ewell, Surrey. Mr. Platts, after completing his college course last year, took temporary charge of a Working Men's Institute at Acomb, York.

The Congregational Union of England and Wales has now become incorporated. This enables it to undertake for any Congregational church the responsibilities hitherto borne by local trustees.

Lord Justice Cozens-Hardy, on Saturday, January 10, is to open the new Sunday School Buildings in connection with Providence Congregational Church, Uxbridge, which have been erected at a cost of over £3,500. Rev. C. Silvester Horne, M.A., will give the opening address.

The annual meeting of the New Court Church, Tollington Park, N., was held recently, when the report of the year's work was presented. Notwithstanding the fact that the pastorate is still vacant, all the agencies of the church are in active and successful work, and show no indication whatever of diminished energy or success. No fewer than sixty-five new members have been gained during the past twelve months, and the number on the roll now stands at 887.

The gathering of friends at the Holborn Restaurant on Tuesday week to celebrate the eightieth anniversary of the birth of Dr. Guinness Rogers proved very successful. The Baptist, Presbyterian, and Wesleyan Methodist Churches were fittingly represented, as well as all the leading institutions connected with the Congregational body. Emphasis was rightly laid on the fact that the quality which endears Dr. Rogers to so many is not one of those which are best known to the public, but rather his quick brotherly sympathy and his readiness to act upon the principle, "Who is weak, and I am not weak?"

The directors of the London Missionary Society are likely to receive a satisfactory offer for their premises in Blomfield Street, E.C., now in the market. It will be remembered that some months ago it was decided to obtain a new site, and to endeavour to obtain a purchaser for the remainder of the Blomfield Street lease. A site was secured in New Bridge Street, near Ludgate Circus, but for a time it seemed as if some difficulty might be experienced in disposing of the present premises. As the whole of the leases on the New Bridge Street property have not yet fallen in, the Society will have to seek a temporary home pending the erection of its new headquarters.

Baptist.

The Medical Mission, which has been started as an auxiliary to the Baptist Missionary Society, has accepted very heartily the offer of Dr. Fletcher Moorshead to act as honorary secretary. Dr. Moorshead, who is a member of Dr. Glover's church in Bristol, is paying deputation visits to arouse sympathy with this department of mission work.

Rev. William Cuff, who, it will be remembered, has been on a visit to Australia for the benefit of his health, preached at Collins Street Church, Melbourne, on Sunday, November 16, at the morning service; and in the evening of the same day preached for his old college friend, Rev. William Clark, of North Carlton Baptist Church.

Methodist.

Rev. Vallance C. Cook has taken the Hackney Empire Theatre for a series of four Sunday evening evangelistic services, beginning on January 18. A good choir and an orchestral band will form a feature in the services.

The Bible Christian Connexion's representatives on the Methodist Union Joint Committee are well satisfied with the recent meeting in London. They are convinced that, if the question could be decided by those who attended the meeting, organic union would soon be accomplished.

The Wesleyan North Cornwall Mission covers a district thirty-five miles in extent, and embraces thirty-seven societies. It has six ministers in full work, and two supernumeraries. Its membership at the last census was, including probationers, just over 2,000. As evidence of its new life it is stated that no fewer than twenty schemes of extension are on foot. The most important is the new church and schools, to cost £10,000, at New Quay.

Presbyterian.

At St. George's Church, Darlington, the young people who attend the minister's weekly "Children's Church," consisting chiefly of the waifs and strays inhabiting the poor neighbourhood adjoining the church, to the number of 200, were gathered in for a Christmas festival. After a short religious service, conducted by the pastor, gifts were distributed to the happy recipients.

The moderator, Rev. A. H. Drysdale, has received a letter from Rev. John C. Johnstone, moderator of the Presbyterian Church in Victoria, commending Rev. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, "whose names are now household words in Australia." Mr. Johnstone says: "To show their capability I have only to mention that at a farewell meeting in this city no fewer than 5,000 persons testified to having received great blessing by the visit and work of of these evangelists, who were warmly supported by all the Evangelical Churches of our country. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander are, I understand, about to visit your land, and you can with all confidence receive and commend them to your ministers and congregations. I am writing this at the request of the Hon Jas. Balfour, one of the most prominent of our elders, and one of the best-known and most esteemed of our public men in Victoria."

Salvation Army.

At the Army's free soup depôts 26,000 destitute persons have received midnight relief during the past four weeks.

An estate of 2,150 acres has been acquired by the Army in East Griqualand, South Africa, for the purpose of a training settlement for native officers.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth has held her annual midnight meeting for fallen women in the West End. Over 100 attended, and nineteen entered the Army Homes.

The annual meeting of the Christ Church Gospel Protestant Mission, Sheffield, was held on Jan. 1, Mr. J. E. Morris presiding. Telling speeches were delivered by the chairman, and by Rev. W. A. Wright, commending the work of the church. Mr. E. T. Hodgson (founder and hon. minister), in presenting the year's report, said that the mission continues to make good progress.

In connection with the Baptist Soldiers' and Sailors' Society, Rev. W. E. Wells has carried on work among soldiers for the past fifteen years. A piece of land within the Guards' summer camp at Pirbright having been granted for the erection of an iron room, Mr. Wells is endeavouring to raise the sum of £200 which such an erection is estimated to cost, including furnishing. Address, 49, Cornwall Road, W.

The New Year's gathering of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union was held at Exeter Hall on Saturday last. Professor Sims Woodhead, who presided, said there is every ground for hopefulness; and, in spite of some back eddies, the temperance cause is being carried forward on a flowing tide. Rev. D. G. Cowan, in recalling the events of the past year, said there are now nearly 3,500,000 children enrolled in Bands of Hope, and there has been during the past year a large increase in the number of temperance workers. It is easier to prevent than to remove the drink disease, and, therefore, he insisted on the importance of instilling temperance ideas in the earliest years.

The New Year's meeting of London City Missionaries was held on January 1 at Exeter Hall, Rev. T. S. Hutchinson, presiding. Particulars of the year's work show over 250,000 visits paid by the missionaries to the sick and dying, 750 families induced to commence family prayer, and 5,200 people to attend public worship. Nearly 5,000,000 religious tracts were distributed, 38,000 meetings held in cottages and mission rooms, and 46,200 Testaments distributed. The New Year's address was delivered by Rev. J. S. Flynn, who based his remarks on the words, "Who is he that will harm you if ye be followers of that which is good?" Rev. Robert Dawson, Mr. W. H. Seagram, Mr. H. Varley, and some of the missionaries took part. Sir George Williams sent his customary gift of a volume to each missionary.

The Islington Branch of the Evangelistic Lay Preachers' Association continues to serve the useful purpose for which it was inaugurated. In addition to the local pulpits and village stations which are supplied, numerous evangelistic missions are conducted. As an instance of the growth of the Association's endeavours, it may be mentioned that during the year of its existence forty-eight meetings were supplied, in 1902 no fewer than 380 similar engagements were registered. The necessity of headquarters for the Association as the centre of further evangelistic work in Islington has been engaging the attention of the Committee for some time past. The opportuuity of renting a hall for the purpose now presents itself. It has been decided to acquire the same, the expenses of which (including rent) are expected to total £60 per annum. The hon. secretary and treasurer (Mr. G. A. Angus, 99, Balfour Road, Highbury, N.) will be glad to hear from friends willing to help the committee in meeting these new obligations.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. Abraham Philips, of Old Buckenham, Norfolk, in the ninety-eighth year of his age. On September 25, 1825, he joined the Kenninghall Baptist Church, and remained a member up to his death, thus completing seventy-seven years of unbroken church membership.—Toxteth Baptist Tabernacle, Liverpool, has suffered loss by the sudden death of Mr. John Hayward, a deacon for more than twenty years, and a leader of the men's Bible class. He was killed in a collision with an electric tram when riding his cycle.—Rev. John Freeland, senior minister of Innerwick U.F. Church. Mr. Freeland was the first minister to be licensed by the Free Church Presbytery of Glasgow, and ministered at Innerwick for over half a century.—Rev. John Bogue, M.A., Organising Secretary of the English Presbyterian Church Building Fund. Though prevented by ill-health from undertaking deputation work, he rendered invaluable service, and the quality and devotion of his work in no small degree contributed to the cordiality with which the Church entered on a new departure by establishing a permanent Church Building Fund.—Aged eighty-four, Rev. John H. Lord, one of the oldest of Wesleyan ministers. He was the son of a Wesleyan minister, and himself had been in the ministry for sixty years. He had been superintendent of some of the most important circuits in England, and for twelve years was a governor of Kingswood School.—At Castlereagh, Dunkineely, co. Donegal, Mr. Archibald R. Greenlaw, a devoted Sunday-school teacher, class leader, and Methodist local preacher, aged thirty-two years.—On December 31, aged sixty-nine, Mr. Mark Knowles, barrister, and for many years a lecturer on temperance.

Return of Rev. F. B. Meyer. It is a pleasure to record the return of Rev. F. B. Meyer, who, with Rev. H. B. Macartney, recently paid a missionary visit to Jamaica, as delegates from the Keswick Convention. By the letters which we have published week by week, our readers have been informed of the progress of the mission, alike among white settlers and the coloured population. Now our honoured friend has come home to continue his labours among the churches of the United Kingdom; and many will join us in earnest prayer that God's hand will remain upon him, for service that shall be ever more fruitful of blessing to souls, and glory to the Name of Christ.

The Torrey-Alexander Mission. For the information of our readers, we here state that the Torrey-Alexander meetings in Mildmay Conference Hall, N., are held on Lord's Days at 9.30, 3.30, and 7, and on week days (except Saturdays) at 3 and 8. The Mission is to be continued throughout January.

Welcome to the Evangelists. The large and representative meeting which came together on Friday last was in every way remarkable. (1) That at least 500 well-known ministers, evangelists, and Christian workers met at four o'clock to welcome Messrs. Torrey and Alexander, was in itself an excellent augury as to the success of their mission. (2) That about 1,400 believers came together at a brief notice from all parts of the metropolis, assembling in the large Exeter Hall at 5, is worthy to be made known. (3) That nearly all present maintain faithfully the platform of Evangelical truth and teaching; (4) that, by what may be called Divine preparation, numbers of them had for weeks been praying fervently for a God-given Revival, and work of grace; (5) that believers of every name met, testifying to the fact of the oneness of the members of the Church of Christ—surely nothing could have drawn these Christians together in such hearty union but the proposal for a mission to preach Christ, teach His people, and win men for the Kingdom of God. It was most refreshing to witness the practical fellowship and hearty intercourse which marked those pleasant hours. We seldom remember a more striking illustration of the words, "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Dr. Torrey well expressed in God's own words the confidence of the great company: "My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from Him."

The Function of Prayer in the Spiritual Life. "Out of the depths have I cried unto thee." Prayer rises from the deep places of the soul, which cry to God for light, and succour, and strength. The mind needs illumination; the heart, comfort; the conscience, pardon and cleansing; the will, guidance and power. By prayer these desiderata of the soul are realized, and in no other way. It is the poorest theory of prayer that makes it synonymous with requests for temporal blessings. The truest petitions, while they do not exclude the necessities of the present life, are for communion with the Father of light. Barren lives are the fruit of empty, selfish, or form prayers. We lie open on the side nearest to God, but He cannot give us of Himself without our co-operation; and prayer is just the co-working of our spirits with the Holy Spirit that ever seeks for entrance. Without prayer, no spiritual life; without life, no prayer.

Whose is the Fault? The melancholy Church Census returns published each Thursday in the Daily News are creating no little sensation in religious circles. The revelation of the extent of non-attendance is worse than any of us imagined. But let us beware of panic. The whole question has to be faced calmly and prayerfully. By this exposure of the real state of things, surely God is calling the whole Church to consider her ways and methods. We strongly deprecate the foolish and unjust criticisms levelled now at ministers as a class, now at deacons, now at Church members, and now at certain Church methods. The truth is, the serious falling-off in church attendance is due, not to one cause, but to many. Many things are at fault, and these in turn must be honestly examined. Meanwhile, it is clear that the very first thing to be done is for each individual Christian to ask how far he or she is responsible for this pitiful state of things. Honest heart-searching would result in the removal of many hindrances.

A New Evangelistic Spirit. One of the most sensible contributions to the question is from the pen of Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, whose whole work entitles him to a respectful hearing. He says:—

> If we were once seriously wakened up to the proper view of our function, we should begin the work of reform, and we should begin at the Sunday evening service. To commence, we should make all the seats free . . . The members of the church would make it their business to come to the service, and to bring other people with them.

Here is one secret of failure—too many of our people never think of bringing others with them. The evangelistic spirit is not alive in their hearts. They are not wounded and hurt at the spectacle of a scanty congregation. We need a new evangelistic spirit—surely the field is large enough for its exercise. Thirty years ago exactly, there was a similar deadness in the country, and then God sent to us Moody and Sankey, whose coming inaugurated a new era of religious life. To this new generation Messrs. Torrey and Alexander have come. Is it through them that a new era is to break for us?

Systematic Giving. In a recent interview, Lord Kinnaird, than whom few people are better qualified to speak with authority on the subject, referred very strongly to the need for greater liberality on the part of large numbers of our wealthy people. Recognising the fact that the people of comparatively small incomes have been heavily hit by taxation, and therefore many charities are in difficulties, he said that rich people have not been so hampered, and he added:—

> Practically, nearly all the steady daily giving is done by people of limited income, and I should say that many give more than ten per cent.

That the general public will give sentimentally and not systematically is well known, and Lord Kinnaird, with the experience gained from his presidency and vice-presidency of about seventy institutions, and his treasurership of about thirty, emphasises the fact.

A Worthy Object-Lesson. To the city of Blackburn belongs the honour of having given to the country an object-lesson in the difficult work of dealing with superfluous drink licences. For many months the licensing magistrates of that city have been engaged in the work of visitation and inspection, with the ultimate result that an amicable arrangement has been made between the justices and the brewers by means of which fifty licences will be surrendered. The Chief Constable has selected the houses to be given up, and so a number of drinking places in crowded areas will be closed. We are bound to admire the public spirit which has characterized some of the owners in accepting the choice of the Chief Constable. We understand that Brighton and Darwen intend to follow Blackburn's example.

The Misery of Misunderstanding. The state of affairs at Denaby Main Colliery, which has just resulted in the eviction of men, women, and children from their houses during the most inclement season of the year, is sad in the extreme, for there was no adequate reason why the dispute should have taken such a miserable turn. The original difficulty was a comparative trifle—admittedly so by both masters and men—yet it has been allowed to assume the proportions of a strike, with the bitter sequel of these evictions. We express no opinion at all about the matter in dispute; but it was clearly one which some mutual conciliation could have met. Now, of course, the bitterness is most pronounced and the difficulties of settlement considerably augmented. These industrial disturbances are extremely serious in many ways, and they have become all too common. There is a very serious responsibility resting upon those who so light-heartedly advocate a strike, particularly when the dispute is insignificant. When will men learn the elements of common sense in these matters?

The Betting Inquiry. The report of the Select Committee to inquire into the cause and extent of the gambling evil has just been issued, and its findings and suggestions demand the most careful consideration on the part of our legislators. That betting has spread like a cancer through the body politic is freely acknowledged in this report, and the members of the Committee offer serious and practicable suggestions for dealing with it. Two points for special notice are, the action of the newspapers and the bookmaker as agents for making betting easy. We do hope that the recommendation concerning these two things will be carried out into law, and the advertisements of tipsters be made illegal in England as they are in France. To exclude these from newspapers would be a first great step towards diminishing the evil. As for the bookmakers who ply their business in the street and lay themselves out particularly to ensnare boys and girls, all respectable people will agree with the Committee in the suggestion that such pests should be summarily sent to prison. Betting cannot be entirely suppressed, but legislation can remove the facilities which at present are given to it.

Bible or Priest. That ever-present fear of an open Bible, which characterizes the Romish ecclesiastic, has lately been voiced in a forcible manner by Monsignor Canon Vaughan in some papers which are appearing in the Catholic Times. Their suggestion is obvious: Do not venture to read God's Word without the intervention and interpretation of the priest. "Bible Christians, enterprising cobblers, blacksmiths, common labourers, and itinerant preachers" may do without the sacerdotal commentator, and even "think to instil truth by mere power of lung;" but the faithful must not listen to the voice of God until it has been filtered through the human channel of "the Church." Monsignor Vaughan asserts that the great Protestant principle, that in all things necessary to salvation the Bible is clear as noonday, is "absolutely disproved by history and experience;" but he fails to point to Spain and Italy and France and other Roman Catholic countries to illustrate the "closed Bible" method.

The Opium Traffic. The reply of the Secretary of State for India to the communication recently made to him by the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, emphasises what, unfortunately, is only too well known, that "neither the Government of India nor His Majesty's Government is under any pledge to Parliament, which is operative at the present time, that the area under cultivation and the production of opium in India shall be reduced." Lord George Hamilton states that "famines are caused, not so much by the difficulty of bringing food to the affected districts, as by that of securing that the inhabitants shall have means of purchasing it." And he adds that "the assistance given to the cultivation of opium, by increasing directly and indirectly the resources of great numbers of peasants, has done much to preserve large districts from scarcity and suffering." In other words, a huge evil is to be encouraged that possible good may come.

The Progress in China. The remarkable change which has come over China during the last year or two has not quite seized the imagination of Christian people as it might have done. The news has filtered through slowly, and has been too disconnected to make a deep impression upon us. Dr. Timothy Richard's article in the current Contemporary Review, however, will help many to understand the significance of the new order of things. Humanly speaking, the impossible was accomplished when the Viceroy asked a Christian missionary to undertake the superintendence of a new educational system for the mandarins. The conservatism of centuries was thus broken up in a day. It is only a question of time, and their religion will follow into the abyss. Dr. Richard states that during last year 150,000 students presented themselves for the higher examination, for the M.A. degree, at the various new colleges subsidized by the State, and about ten times that number for the B.A.; and he asks, pertinently enough, what must be the result of the passing of the old order and the flow of the tide of Western science and thought. God has many ways of fulfilling His purposes, and this may be the beginning of His way for China. In any case, the door is opened, and the Church will yet see her opportunity to enter, bearing the full message of the Gospel to a waiting people.

Messrs. Torrey and Alexander

"My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from Him" (Psa. lxii. 5).

IN these terms the Psalmist indicated his attitude towards the God of his life; and to the great joy of those who were gathered in Exeter Hall on Friday last Dr. Torrey quoted the familiar verse as supplying the keynote of the evangelistic work in which he is engaged. Those who knew the speaker required no assurance that, in the meetings that have been arranged for him in Great Britain, he will keep God first, and preach not himself but Christ Jesus as Lord. The record of his singing colleague, Mr. Charles Alexander, is also that of a man with a single eye to the glory of God. Notwithstanding, it was both fitting and gratifying that, after shaking hands with so many hundreds of British Christians, who gave them hearty welcome in the Name of the Lord, the evangelists should declare the source and object of their confidence and hope. Many in the large audience found relief in a fervent "Amen" when the words were uttered—"My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from Him."

The profound sympathy with which the keynote was received is full of promise. Those who had gathered represented all the churches. Many of them, in groups, unions, and circles, some organized, others spontaneous, had long been waiting upon God in prayer for Revival. When Dr. Torrey told how that his visit to Australia was preceded by a volume of prayer, ascending from two thousand household meetings, in which colonial Christians cried aloud to God for Revival, he related a fact which finds its precise counterpart in our own land. In quiet homes and business houses, as well as in churches and mission halls, men and women have been "lifting up holy hands," beseeching God to revive His church and bless His heritage, thus beautifying the place of His sanctuary, and making the place of His feet glorious (see Isa. lx. 13). God be praised for the degree in which His people have been waiting upon Him. One result is a lively expectancy, which, with a desire that is superior to impatience, and will not mistake delay for disappointment, asks with reverence, "And now, Lord, what wait I for? My hope is in Thee."

Prayer in Australia was followed by Revival, in which many thousands found Christ as their Saviour, and joined bodies of believers in order to mutual edification and co-operation in the Gospel. There is no need to develop the argument suggested by this statement, at least as it affects the hopes of those whose trust is in God. When the evangelists, in the words of Peter, disavow the spiritual marvels that are reported from Australasia as being in any sense the outcome "of their own power or holiness," either in word or deed, they affirm that which is established in the mouth of many witnesses. And all profess and declare that the things which have caused so much amazement and wonder among the people were done in the Name of Jesus of Nazareth, whom God raised from the dead, "whose Name, through faith in His Name," made the weak strong, and "gave them perfect soundness" (comp. Acts. iii. 6, 16). Ascribing all glory to God, who "raised up His Servant Jesus, and sent Him to bless men, in turning away every one from their iniquities," the evangelists have come to Great Britain with the prayerful benedictions of thousands in the Antipodes and elsewhere—many of them men and women who, until quite recently, "had no hope, and were without God in the world," but now "being made nigh by the blood of Christ, have access by one Spirit unto the Father" (Eph. ii. 12-18).

Thus far the men and their motives. Now as to their message. This was outlined in no uncertain terms. Mr. Alexander sang of "The Old, Old Story," and was content to specify it as descriptive of his evangelistic endeavours. Dr. Torrey said more about God's work in Australia than about his own views and methods; yet these latter could easily be discerned "between the lines." Among other things demonstrated in the eyes of people in the colonies—to the joy of Christians and the astonishment of them that are without—he mentioned these:—(1) The power of prayer; (2) the power of the Word of God; (3) the power of the blood of Christ; and (4) the power of the Holy Spirit. All these points are noticed in the report given elsewhere in this issue; and they yield abundant proof that Dr. Torrey's Gospel is also "The Old, Old Story." He speaks of the God who hears and answers prayer; of the Holy Scriptures, inspired of God, and designed to make men wise unto salvation; of the blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, which cleanseth us from all sin; and of the Holy Spirit, by whose power dead sinners are quickened into newness of life, and the regenerate are sanctified and enabled to bring forth fruit unto God. This is God's message in deed and truth, and we are sure that a blessing will attend its enunciation.

We rejoice with our readers at the coming among us of workers whom God has so highly honoured during recent years. We bespeak for them the earnest prayers of all who are "waiting for the consolation of Israel." May the God who blessed Wesley, Whitefield, and Finney, who stood by the many who witnessed for Him in the great Revival of forty years ago, and who did signs and wonders by His servants, D. L. Moody and Ira D. Sankey, hear the prayers of His people, and abundantly honour His Word and glorify His Son through the ministry of His servants, R. A. Torrey and C. M. Alexander.

Practical Papers.

On "THE LION And His PREY."—II.

1 Peter v. 8.

NATURALISTS tell us that, among other characteristics, the lion is brave only in proportion to his successes in conflict with other animals. If this can be asserted of his Satanic antitype, both terror and comfort are inspired by the thought. What does it mean? This—that the more frequently he masters us, the more boldly will he attack us again, and our strength diminishes after each encounter. Have we not found it so? The muscles of our moral character relax, its fibres deteriorate, its resistive powers become enervated, until he does with us as he will. Take, as typical of many other forms of sin, the drinking habit; is there one who has felt its grip but can testify to the utter degeneration of the moral sense produced thereby? So also the greed for gold, the love of worldly pleasure, the careless tongue, or the desire for luxury and ease. But per contra, what comfort in the assurance that

Each victory will help you
Some other to win!

"Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." Hence the force of the Apostle's dictum: "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you" (Jas. iv. 7).

Another trait of the lion is that, like a cat, he can see in the dark. How insistently the New Testament associates Satan and sin with darkness! Note such passages as these: "This is your hour and the power of darkness" (Luke xxii. 53), "Men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil" (John iii. 19); "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness" (Eph. v. 11); "We wrestle not against flesh and blood but . . . against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world" (vi. 12); "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness" (Col. i. 13). And conversely, "God is Light, and in Him is no darkness at all" (1 John i. v.). Submit to Satan, and he will lead you in dark and slippery places; he discerns the way, but your feet will be wounded and lacerated as he drags you on through gloom in which you cannot see. Ah, this fatal lack of sight, as we traverse the ways of sin! Hear the despairing cry of ruined lives: "If I had only known! If I had only seen!" Ninety per cent. of the prisoners in our gaols would be walking free to-day, had they only foreseen the end of their misdeeds; and who is there among us who has not, in greater or less degree, been led on blindly to sorrow or remorse, following the indulgence of some pleasant or (at first) apparently trivial sin? Little streams lead to wide rivers.

During the siege of Khartoum in 1884, the British sent two relief boats up the Nile with natives at the helm. A grinding sound was heard, followed by a rush of water. One of the steersmen, sympathizing with the enemy, had deliberately guided his vessel across a sunken rock. He knew the treacherous waters well, and played his knowledge against the ignorance of those that sent him. Thus, too, does Satan handle our frail craft of life, until the breach is made. Then pour in the recollections of "what might have been!" and the memories of innocent days of long ago. "Hear me now, therefore, lest strangers be filled with thy strength (marg.); and thou mourn at the last, when thy flesh and thy body are consumed; and say, How have I hated instruction, and my heart despised reproof; and have not obeyed the voice of my teachers, nor inclined mine ear to them that instructed me!" (Prov. v. 7-13).

Yet, again, notice that the lion prefers tame food. Although for the most part he feeds upon various animals that he attacks in their wild and native state, this is a matter of necessity rather than of choice. Give him a chance to enter the shepherd's fold, and he will select the best of the flock, and seize it for his prey. The lamb that has been the object of the shepherd's tender care will prove more dainty meat than the beast of the forest. The latter he may capture at any time, but the former are too well guarded to afford many opportunities for his ravages in the fold. Hence his preference and daring.

Alas, the devil has plenty of victims in the world, all too ready to his hand. Therefore he assails the flock of God, knowing well that the downfall of one of these counts for more in the advancement of his kingdom than the ruin of ten ungodly men. It was to Christians that Peter addressed his warning, and none knew better than he the need of "vigilance" against the great adversary, remembering well how he himself had suffered at his hands. Here then is your lesson, if you are a child of God. In your unconverted days you yourself expected much from those who professed to follow Christ; perhaps you were stumbled by their sad inconsistencies. See now that you satisfy the expectations that others have of you, and that you do not stumble them. Once wounded, you may bear physically, socially, and morally the marks of your backsliding to the day of your death.

One more point. The lion being perhaps the strongest of the animal world, he can only be conquered by a creature of a higher creation, that is, Man, and then only with the use of weapons. Instances are recorded of fierce conflicts of the lion with larger antagonists, but although he sometimes perishes with his foe, he is seldom survived by him.

To whom can we look to save us from our dire adversary? Not to man, but only to One of a higher and Divine order—Jesus Christ, Saviour and Lord. To Him it is given through death to overcome "him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil," and to destroy his works (Heb. ii. 14; 1 John iii. 8). Voluntarily He laid down His life to redeem the world, and to "save His people from their sins" (Titus ii. 14; Matt. i. 21). In His strength alone we may conquer. We have realized the futility of our own endeavours. Habits born of hell have asserted their over-mastering power, and enslaved us in their relentless bondage. Helpless, wounded, undone, to whom shall we turn for help? "All power is given unto Me." O blessed assurance—in Him, pardon; in Him, peace; in Him, power. God help us to lay hold of Him, for life and service, to be not overcome of evil, but to overcome evil with good. "Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour; whom resist, stedfast in the faith."

Spurgeon Memorial Sermon Society.—The trustees of this Society have made arrangements for further developments in connection with their work, so as to be able to supply sermons free of cost in unlimited quantities, for giving away from door to door in districts where the loan distribution is found to be impossible. By special arrangement with local advertisers the whole expenses of this new department are met, while any churches or missions undertaking the distribution of sermons may have the local services printed on the covers free of cost. The secretary, who may be addressed at the International Headquarters of the Society, Greenhithe, S.O., near London, will be pleased to furnish information concerning the ways and means of the organization.

Romanism at Home.

THOSE who are disposed to give a patronizing countenance to Romanism in our favoured land, should read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest the contents of Dr. Robertson's new work.* The Roman Catholic Church in Italy is the title, and the work is from beginning to end true to its purpose and plan. All the same, in many features the description holds equally true of Romanism in many lands where its sway is still undisputed, or as yet unchallenged by a vigorous Protestantism. And what Romanism is in Italy to-day, she was, in principle and substance, throughout Central Europe and also in Great Britain in days anterior to the glorious Reformation of the sixteenth century.

Many years of residence in Italy have afforded Dr. Robertson abundant opportunity to study Romanism; and his well-known "Bible of St. Mark," dealing with the art treasures of the celebrated Venetian Church, and his life of Fra Paolo Sarpi, "the Greatest of the Venetians," have borne testimony to his power of expressing his mind in a precise and vigorous English. In the preface of this handsome volume, he tells us that he had a two-fold object in writing it:—

In the first place, I wish to help to extend amongst English-speaking people a knowledge of how the Roman Catholic Church is regarded by the Italian people and Government, as affecting their individual and national life. . . My second object is to persuade people to view the Roman Catholic Church as the Italians view it. I am convinced that it is the true and right way, the wise and prudent way, of looking at it.

After a historic retrospect, in which the blighting influences of Romanism are realistically described, Dr. Robertson gives us chapters on the Pope, the Priest, the Church, Confession, Monasticism, &c. From first to last, these institutions have wrought evil in Italy, and as a result, measures have been taken to save the people from their influence. The Church is not worthy the name; it is "the Pope's shop," and a political conspiracy. The Pope is no spiritual father, and the Priest no safe counsellor or guide of the faithful. As for Confession and Monasticism, these have operated as curses throughout the land. The legislative and other means adopted to deal with these evils are, in general, applauded by our author, who boldly says:—

If I had been in the House of Deputies when the Church laws now in force were under discussion, there is not one that would not have received my strenuous support, for none of them touch the question of religious liberty, but only the Church's influence upon life.

This most informing book delineates Romanism as described by devotees, and as denounced by men whose eyes have been opened to see the Satanic character of the wicked system. Dr. Robertson has command of the most fruitful sources of facts and arguments on the entire subject, and he quotes authorities out of number, at the same time not hesitating to give his own mature judgment, formed under conditions most favourable for the ascertainment of truth. Among the quotations on one page we find these, with reference to the Papacy:—

There are forms of superstition which can walk hand in hand with any depth of crime, when that superstition is provided with a talisman which will wash away the stains of guilt. (Mr. Froude.)

There has never been any more cunning blade devised against the freedom, the virtue, and the happiness of a people than Romanism. (Mr Gladstone.)

This is emphatically a book for the time. It exhibits to view the religious idolatry and gross superstition of Romanism, as well as its political treachery and social mischief-making, and ever with outspoken fidelity and force. It should excite in many hearts a disposition to work and pray for the enlightenment of the benighted millions who are still sitting in Papal darkness and error; all the same, it should inspire a veritable hatred of the corrupt and corrupting system, which has, with abundant reason, been denounced as "the Antithesis of Christianity."

The Week of Prayer.

THE meetings in connection with the Week of Prayer, arranged by the Evangelical Alliance, were continued at Exeter Hall on Wednesday of last week. The special topic for the day was Home Missions; and the chairman (Mr. David Beath), after reading passages from Isaiah xli. and lv., suggested that the petitions should gather round (1) the spread of the Gospel in Great Britain and her dependencies; (2) America and other English-speaking communities; (3) Christian workers, that they may be guided into and kept in ways agreeable to the will of God; (4) the need for more labourers; (5) orphanages, city and village missionaries, evangelists, &c. Great importance was attached to the necessity of Christian living as an influence on the world. A season of prayer was then led by Mr. Clarence Hooper, Mr. W. H. Seagram, Colonel Douglas-Jones, and others.

On Thursday, attention was devoted to "Special Work Among the Young, Families, and School." The chair was taken by Mr. R. C. Morgan. Speaking on Gen. xviii. 18, 19, Prebendary Webb-Peploe showed how the prospects of the spiritual life are made to depend generally upon conditions. The Lord makes the future of Abraham and his family to depend upon this condition, that "he will command his children and his household after him." In all organization there is a necessity for sub-division, but only that all may be united to a common end. An earnest appeal was made to parents (1) to see the highest interests of their families by putting a stop to the custom of spending week-ends away from home, (2) to advocate among their friends the practice of family prayer, and (3) to be the teachers of their own children.

Attention was directed on Friday to "Nations and their Rulers," the chairman (Mr. W. H. Seagram) speaking with deep feeling of the threatening outlook at present in different parts of the world. Helpful lessons on the attitude of Christ to the heathen were drawn by Rev. Dr. Hanson from the story of the Syro-Phœnician Woman. He showed that the Lord was (1) teaching the disciples that, though this woman was according to their view no better than a dog, she was a true child of Abraham because she had Abraham's faith. (2) To the woman herself the message was that she had no claim whatever on the Lord, but the testing was not more than she could bear. (3) For us the word that comes is to pray on, and on, and on. This woman's experience is only a leaf out of the book of God's dealings with the children of men in all generations. The answer may be withheld till prayer seems utterly futile; but again and again we are surprised by His goodness. Prayer must bring its answer; and the longer the seed remains underground, the stronger will be the after-growth.

At Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., Mr. A. Garstin presided on Wednesday, January 7, when Rev. J. Sprunt gave an address on the Epistle to the Romans. The speaker, after urging a closer study of this wonderful Epistle, by preachers and teachers, briefly remarked on three divisions, each beginning (in the A.V.) with "Therefore." First, is Justification, commencing at v. 1, which verse links on so beautifully to iv. 25, because the Lord Jesus Christ was "delivered for our offences and raised again," therefore "being justified by faith we have peace with God." The eighth chapter commences the second division, the subject of which is Sanctification, that we may "walk, not after the flesh, but after the spirit." In chapter xii. we are led to Consecration, that we may serve our Lord well by intelligently yielding ourselves to be altogether His.

On Thursday, when Mr. J. E. Hillbrook presided, a pointed address was given by Mr. Henry Varley on Rom. xv. 29 (R.V.). The Apostle is not thinking of himself, either of his infirmities or abilities, nor of his past experiences, but of Christ only. He knew that in his going to Rome nothing could help his hearers but Christ. He is to present the Risen Lord. What was the great intent of the death of Christ? The putting away of sin. He destroyed death, the penalty of sin. He went into the fastnesses of human woe and triumphed over all, and the resurrection is the proof of this.

In writing, then, of the "fulness of the blessing," Paul realized that death had been destroyed, and so he could use those magnificent words, "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Christ is our life; this glorious truth is God's axe laid at the root of all confidence in the flesh. When our Lord used the phrase, "If ye, then, being evil," He stated the condition of the human heart. If we should carry that condition into the next world, we should carry misery therewith; but on resurrection ground we share the Divine nature; God, "according to His abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." On "the fulness of blessing in Christ" there will be self-abnegation, for our fellows are not to see us but God in us.

Mr. Basil Hewer presided on Friday, when Mr. A. Robertson gave a telling address, which formed a fitting conclusion to the week's meetings. He drew spiritual lessons for present-day problems from the life and experience of Moses, and his concluding words were full of appeal to labour, in the strength of God, for the extension of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

Meetings were held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., where numbers of friends gathered daily throughout the week to join in praise and prayer, with much spiritual profit.

At Stratford, also, meetings, bringing much encouragement to the Lord's people, were held in the Conference Hall, West Ham Lane. They were organized by Mr. C. Boardman, J.P., and Rev. Alex. Jeffrey, and several clergymen and ministers gave stimulating addresses.

SPECIAL GATHERINGS IN IRELAND.

The Week of Prayer was widely observed throughout Ireland. In Dublin special services were held in the Christian Union Buildings. The Sunday services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Clarke (incumbent of Zion Church, Rathgar) and Rev. Thomas Connellan.

On the 5th inst. an all-day meeting for prayer for world-wide revival was held, which commenced at 10 a.m. and continued without intermission till 9 p.m. Although the weather was throughout most unfavourable, considerable numbers of Christian friends were present, and many took part in prayer and praise and exhortation. A quiet peaceful time of waiting upon the Lord was enjoyed throughout.

Two meetings were held each succeeding day until Saturday, when one meeting was held at noon.

The week was well observed in Belfast, and brethren of all Evangelical Churches took part in the meetings. The venerable Dean of Connor, when presiding at the closing meeting, gave some deeply interesting reminiscences of his early associations with the Evangelical Alliance in that city, and the pleasant fellowship into which it brought him with well-known brethren of other churches.

A Song of Hope.

Lord, every little sparrow finds its crumb to eat from [Thee,
And chirps its little chirp of praise
To Thee, the Giver of its days,
And bids to-morrow "go its ways;"
And so will I.

Lord, every little daisy lifts its face up to the sun,
And drinks in of its warmth and light,
And revels in its day so bright,
Without a fear of coming night;
And so will I.

Lord, every little nightingale warbles its love-song [sweet,
Choosing the night to sing to Thee
A tender, heaven-born melody
Sung in the darkness hopefully;
And so will I.

"Songs in the night He giveth," and listens to hear [them sung—
Songs of a tender Father's love,
Songs of a fairer home above,
Songs whispered by that Holy Dove
Who broods o'er all. M. T. H.

The Free Churches and Drink.

UNDER the presidency of Rev. F. B. Meyer an influential and numerously-attended meeting was held on Thursday evening last in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, in connection with the Twentieth Century Free Churches' Temperance Crusade.

The chairman was supported by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Smith (who had kindly provided hospitality for the guests), Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, Revs. J. Thornley (Sheffield), W. Mottram, G. Armstrong Bennett, B.A., and W. Stephens; Mr. J. T. Sears, J.P.; Mr. Robert Scott, and other well-known supporters of the Temperance cause.

The general secretary, Rev. J. Thornley, presented the report of the work of the Crusade for the period in which an effort was made to secure a million pledges, showing that many denominations had co-operated in the movement, and that quite apart from the numerous indirect results and benefits, the magnificent outcome had been attained in about twelve months of 507,602 recorded pledges, a fact which should evoke the deepest gratitude and also form a basis for extended active effort.

The Chairman rejoiced that the winds and waves had wafted him back to this country in time to be present at the gathering, and acknowledged the deep debt of gratitude which the Crusade owed to Rev. Dr. Henry, to whom, under God, they owed the initiation under such favourable auspices of this great Crusade, whose work was used of God to arouse such enthusiasm and interest as otherwise it could not have done. Mr. Meyer referred to the new Licensing Act, and emphasised the need of every Christian using his vote as a sacred trust to promote purity, temperance, and righteousness on the earth.

Among subsequent speakers were Mr. Thomas Smith (who took the chair on Mr. Meyer having to leave for another meeting) and Rev. Armstrong Bennett. The last-mentioned pleaded for immediate action to be taken to memorialize magistrates prior to the approaching brewster sessions, and also to make efforts for the abolition of the barmaid system. After a few cheery words from Mr. J. T. Sears, Dr. Henry stated that within the past sixteen months he had visited eighty centres in the United Kingdom, addressed 700,000 persons, and secured no fewer than 60,000 temperance pledges. He urged the importance of the Christian Church ridding itself of all complicity with the traffic, and making Temperance work a part of its regular operations, and part and parcel of its work for the good of mankind. The time is past for Temperance forces to be divided; there must be federation and united enterprise in the face of so formidable a foe. Practical and effective organisation and leadership are needed, and this is a campaign which is essentially Christian, seeking the glory of God, whose object, aim, motives, and methods are Christian, and will bring the Christian conscience and Christian influence to bear upon the solution of this great problem.

The singing by Mr. T. Armon Jones of two sacred songs, rendered with power and pathos, most effectively added to the enjoyment and interest of a stimulating gathering.

Dublin Deaf and Dumb Association.—That the work of this organization is indispensable for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the deaf and dumb in the city of Dublin has again been shown in the course of the past year. It is after these afflicted ones leave school that the benefits of the Association are conferred upon them. Pre-eminently it provides for their religious instruction. They cannot possibly benefit by the ordinary oral services of the Church, and require a special provision addressed to the eye, which in their case is the only available avenue to the mind. Besides this, the Association continues to use its efforts and influence to place the deaf and dumb of all religious denominations in suitable employment. In numbers of instances of every kind, sickness, distress through lack of work, or where timely aid will put a deaf and dumb person into the way of becoming self-supporting, the assistance of the Association is judiciously rendered. Rev. Maurice F. G. Hewson, Lower Abbey Street, Dublin, is the missionary and secretary.

SUNDAY, January 18. 1 Chron. xx.

THE writer of this book throws the veil of silence over the story of David's great sin. It was necessary that it should be recorded once in the Scriptures; but that was enough. The glories and victories of David and Solomon were deemed worthy of repetition; but not that fatal act, which cast a shadow on the fair name of Israel's greatest king. We may find comfort for ourselves in this, that God hastens to forget our sins, and blot them from His book. "Their sins and iniquities will I remember no more."

This expedition against Ammon was to punish king and people for their outrage on the national honour, and it ended in the placing of the crown on David's head and the reduction of the people to hard labour. (The Hebrew word "cut them" is, with the difference of the final letter, the same as that rendered, "put them," in the parallel passage in Samuel, and we are to infer that David condemned the inhabitants of Rabbah to hard and penal servitude.) The crown of a subject kingdom placed on the conqueror's head (or, as must have been the case here, suspended over his chair of state) is very significant. The question is suggested, whether our thoughts, and the empire of our will, have been made subject to the Lord Jesus. It seems as though the one question one would wish to ask of every believer, is, "Have you put the crown of your life on the brow of Emmanuel?"

The giants of Philistia were a large and mighty family, but one by one they fell before David and his followers. We, also, remember that it is written, "He must reign till He hath put all enemies beneath His feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

MONDAY, January 19. 1 Chron. xxi.

In 2 Sam. xxiv. 1 we learn that this census of the people was prompted by the Lord: here it is attributed to Satan. The temptation emanated from Satan, but it was permitted by the Lord. May we not explain the whole sad incident by saying that the pride of David's heart lay at the root of his determination; therefore God gave him up to it, and Satan obtained permission to sift him as wheat. When Moses took the census of Israel, it was at the express command of God, in order to assess the atonement money, but there was no such arrangement here (Ex. xxx. 12, 16). Joab seems to have had a clearer perception of the fatal mistake that David was committing than the king himself, and shrank from his unwelcome duty. But God interposed, and stopped the completion of the work.

Let us beware of pride. Some are proud of their lace, others of their race, others of place, others of their face, others of grace. I have met people who were proud of their humility; and I rather think I was proud once of a sermon on the "Grace of Lowliness." Nothing shows more truly when a nature is out of union with Christ, than the obtrusion of the self-life and the boast of vainglory. For such a state of mind, chastisement is inevitable, and who would not rather trust himself to God than man! David knew that God's mercies were many and tender, and cast himself into His hands. Why do we dread God so much as not to trust Him with our lives, that He may do according to His good pleasure?

How beautiful it was that Ornan contributed the site for the temple. It was a kingly act, and shows us how many devout souls there were outside the limits of the chosen people (Mal. i. 11, R.V.).

TUESDAY, January 20. 1 Chron. xxii.

The building of the Temple is a type of the building of the Church, which is the work of the present dispensation between the First and Second Advents. The Lord, referring to His death and resurrection, said, "I will build My Church." It was evidently then future to His thought. Its site was the spot where the angel of destruction was arrested by His own bloodshedding, for at the foundation of the Church is Calvary. But the materials for its erection had been prepared long before (5), in the saintly souls who had been won in the previous dispensations, and were woven into its fabric. Thus we are told that the Church is built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets; and that the olden saints, without us, cannot be made perfect.

It is in times of peace that the churches of God make most headway—I do not say of peace with the world, for times of persecution and anxiety are often most fruitful in conversions—but of internal peace (Acts ix. 31). It is when we are at rest in God, when all the inward war and strife of our earlier struggles have subsided, when the subjugation of our will to God's will is complete, that the building up of our soul in Divine things proceeds apace.

In David's address to Solomon, there are several striking words: "Then shalt thou prosper, if thou observe to do"; "Be strong, and of good courage"; "In my affliction I have prepared" (often we prepare more in our low estate than in our prosperity); "Arise, and be doing"; "Set your heart and your soul to seek after the Lord." Let us, too, be eager to add some stones to that Temple which is rising through the ages.

WEDNESDAY, January 21. 1 Chron. xxiii.

The tribe of Levi had increased immensely (Num. iv.); and as they were no longer needed for the transport of the Tabernacle, they were set apart for other service, such as officers and judges, or singers, as well as for the service of the Temple (28-32).

But the priests occupied an altogether different position; they were separated to burn incense, to minister unto the Lord, and to bless in His name (13). We also are priests. Our work is intercessory prayer, service in any direction to which God may summon us, and the blessing which we can scatter among the children of men. (See also Mark iii. 14.) For all these functions, however, we must be separated (13). The one call which is ever sounding to us is, "Come out, and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing." There must be—1st, the judgment of sinful and doubtful things; 2nd, their renunciation; 3rd, surrender to the will of God; and 4th, faith that He accepts what we give, and will carry on His blessed work into ever deeper depths within us (2 Cor. vii. 1).

What significant words are those of verse 25: "The Lord, the God of Israel, hath given rest unto His people!" Yes, in very deed God has given us rest. He calls us to cease from our own works, and to enter into His rest. There is no need to carry the tabernacle any more. All is done. "It is finished," the dying Saviour cried. Our office now is to enter into, and carry on, the results of His work. Let us stand every morning and evening to thank and praise the Lord, and to offer up ourselves, our souls and bodies, as living sacrifices unto God, which is our reasonable service (30, 31).

THURSDAY, January 22. 1 Chron. xxiv.

Eleazar succeeded Aaron in the high-priesthood, and that high office continued in his family until the days of Eli, when it was transferred to the line of Ithamar. In order to prevent jealousy in the arrangement of the various offices apportioned to the priests, the right of precedence was determined by lot; and it was cast in a deliberate and solemn manner, in the presence of the king, the princes, the two high priests, and the chiefs of the Levitical families.

The lot was resorted to by the apostles (Acts i. 26) before Pentecost, but it is inadmissible now, since the Holy Spirit is in the Church as its Guide and Director. In almost the last conversation I had with Dr. Parker, he told of a meeting of a number of ministers to deal with a knotty and complicated question. He told me that one of the leading ministers expressed his earnest longing for a guide-post to point the way, as over a cloud-covered moorland, and that another answered, "We do not need a guide-post, since the Holy Spirit is with us." Similarly, we may say, It is not necessary now for us to use the lot, since the Holy Spirit is with us as the Executor of the Godhead, and will guide both the individual and the Church into the will of God. Happy are they who know His voice and obey!

It is the habit of some Christians to leave the decision of their course to the first verse that meets their eye in the Bible or Text-book. This is of the nature of "the lot," and as we cease to be babes in Christ, we shall abandon this mechanical method for the attentive heeding of the voice of the Comforter, corroborated by the Word of God and circumstances. When we become mature, we put away the methods of childhood.

FRIDAY, January 23. 1 Chron. xxv.

It is remarkable that the singers were deputed to prophesy with harps, psalteries, &c. (1). The word "prophesy" means, not so much to fore-tell as to forth-tell, i.e., to speak out what is in the soul. In the same way, the early Christians spoke one to another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs. The hymn-writer, the composer of sacred tunes, and the chorister, have sacred work to do in speaking forth the thoughts and emotions with which their hearts are filled by the Holy Spirit.

There is a distinction between giving thanks and praise (3). In the one we bless God for what He has done for the Church and for ourselves, and recite the mercies of our homes and of our individual lives; in the other we bless Him for what He is in Himself.

It is good to read that God gave to Heman his sons and daughters (5). Oh that parents would always count their children as the Divine gift! And it is good to see the daughters so expressly mentioned. We might include Frances Havergal, and Felicia Hemans.

In those days, apparently, singers were inclined to envy one another, and jealousy was a besetting sin; hence the need of the lot (8). But how beautiful it is when the Holy Spirit produces such a blessed unity, that we look no longer on our own things, but on the things of others; and only desire that the Lord should be pleased, honoured, and glorified, whether by song or speech! Lord, take jealousy away from us; as the incoming tide blots out all the little hollows of the rocks, and merges all the pools in one ocean fulness.

SATURDAY, January 24. 1 Chron. xxvi.

Strong men were needed as doorkeepers for the Lord's house. Able men were needed with strength for the service (4), not only to withstand the crush of crowds, but to push to and fro the heavy doors. They were appointed by lot, and for the East, which was the more frequented gate, there were more than for the others.

The charge of the treasures was a matter requiring great trustworthiness, as they must have been of immense value. It is interesting, in this connection, to notice that Samuel and Saul, Abner and Joab, had contributed something to this great wealth, from the spoils which they had taken in battle. How deeply rooted it was, in the minds of these ancient worthies, that God should have a share in all their gains! It would be well if Christian men never made money gains without contributing some proportion of them to the service of God. If the wealthy would remember that they are but stewards, and if the Christians of Great Britain and the United States would only give a certain percentage in every £100 to God, there would be no longer the awful poverty which I have sorrowfully witnessed in the homes of some missionaries, and in the coffers of many societies.

But, oh, let us be pure and sweet in our inner life, that God may be able to use us, whether as doorkeepers, or as stewards of His treasures, or in affairs which pertain to His business in the world (32). (These latter may represent committees in our own time!) Whatever He wants to be done, may we be ever ready to do it; as vessels cleansed from evil, sanctified, meet for the Master's use, and prepared for every good work!

F. B. M.

Other Lands.

From Rev. F. B. Meyer.

THE concluding missions of our tour have been equally blessed and successful with the former ones, and for this I would render most devout thanks to God.

At Port Antonio there is a strong American settlement, a first-class American hotel, and many citizens of the United States, who in winter come there with their families, as English people go to the Riviera or to Cannes. Mr. Macartney and I were very kindly welcomed and supported by resident Christian Americans during our stay there. We had very noble meetings in the parish church, occupying the pulpit by the courtesy of Canon Harty; and the meetings for men and women, which I conducted in the Wesleyan Church, were very fruitful.

The state of morals in Port Antonio in the past has been atrociously bad, fostered by the immorality of the officials, which passes words. This gave my remonstrances and appeals additional point. The hatred aroused on the one hand only awakened more enthusiasm and loyalty on the other. Finally, after an earnest meeting with the women, I was led to found The League of the White Rose, which I think I shall try to propagate everywhere. In this there are the following five resolves made in the Name of Christ :—

1. If a Christian, I will marry "only in the Lord."
2. As maid and wife I will be modest and virtuous.
3. I will marry only for love's sake.
4. I will avoid needless extravagance on my wedding-day.
5. I will always maintain a high ideal of the Home.

There are special reasons which make 3 and 4 necessary for Jamaica, but I think that they are capable of universal application.

The unity of the ministers at Port Antonio was very delightful, and they are working together for the formation of a strong branch of The White Cross League, which I have constantly advocated.

Spanish Town is the old capital city. In the public square there are buildings dating back to the days of the Spaniards, though they were remodelled for the English occupancy. The population is now greatly reduced, but representatives of the old families are still residents in the grand but decayed houses.

The influence of the Church of England is in great preponderance, but the canon and rector was most friendly, placing Trinity Church at our disposal. It was very interesting to visit and address the prisoners in the large gaol; and the lepers, of whom there are upwards of a hundred. Again, the meetings for men and women were a great feature; the response by the men being more than usually sympathetic, though the ideal in times past has been deplorably low. But there was an unmistakable heartiness among all classes.

So we got back for our last meetings at Kingston. At the parish church, the Wesleyan and Baptist chapels, and especially at Edmundson Hall, we had memorable meetings. I shall never forget the after-meeting held in Wesley Chapel on the eve of our sailing, when scores rose in all parts of the vast building, and afterwards came together to seek the cleansing and anointing of the Holy Spirit.

Best of all, our hearts were cheered by the gathering together of clergymen, ministers, and others from all the places we had visited, telling of the blessed results which had appeared since we had left them. In many cases purity societies had been formed. In all there were quickened lives, conversions, separation from sin, and a greater unity on the part of God's people.

We heard of a storekeeper to whom three different persons confessed that they had, at various times, robbed him; of people who had sought to be reconciled to those from whom they had been estranged; of a young man travelling fifty miles to pay a debt; of an official getting married to the woman with whom he had been living for some years. Cases like these were very encouraging. I was told also of a clergyman promising a Free Church minister that he would not in future take his members, but would send them back; and of a Nonconformist minister asking the clergyman to marry a couple for him during a temporary absence from his charge.

At Kingston I was interviewed by the two leading papers, and was able to urge several items, such as a better system of apprenticeship, the institution of light railways for the conveyance of fruit from the interior to the coast, and evening continuation classes for technical education. I was specially able to urge that officials should not be appointed except they are men of moral life, and am glad to say that my words received attention in the highest quarters. I believe, from the sympathetic leading articles that appeared the next day, and the assurances that were given me in other ways, that very considerable good will accrue in this direction. The state of things makes one blush for the good name of Britain.

The Archbishop most kindly presided at our closing meeting on December 24, and cordially thanked us. Loving words were also spoken by several clergymen and ministers; and the hands of all shades which were reached out to be shaken occupied a long while. Mr. Macartney remained for a little longer—much better in health—to visit a few places we have not touched. I must have spoken about 110 times in thirty-three days.

I hope by the time that these words appear I shall have begun the work in Lancashire, and can only ask that the prayers which have been offered on my behalf may be continued.

Commissioner Cadman, of the Salvation Army, returned with me, after a tour of nine months in the West Indies. He seems to have had a useful time in consolidating the work of the Army, and gathering in large numbers of souls.

The Situation in Armenia.

ALTHOUGH the Christian public is no longer shocked by hearing of cruel massacres in Armenia, and the hand of the assassin is stayed, there is still much to cause grave anxiety. Neither life nor honour are safe in the region round Moush, and the Kurd when he needs money takes it with impunity from his Armenian neighbours. The present situation is thus set forth in the annual report of the Friends of Armenia Society :—

The numbers of widows and orphans dependent on the Society for maintenance or employment are fewer than hitherto; but our duty to those who remain is none the less binding. When we began we thought the work could be finished in five years. By that time the elder orphans would have been placed out, and the nation so far recovered from the impoverishing and demoralizing effect of the massacres that the survivors would be able to support the younger orphans themselves; but we misjudged the extent of the misery and the extreme youth of some of the the children taken; above all we never dreamed of the number who would crave admittance after their widowed mothers, who had struggled on for a time, had fallen victims to hardship and privation.

The Society has refrained from inaugurating separate mission work, and has sent only mission helpers to aid the American missionaries in carrying the extra burdens with which the massacres overwhelm them. It is felt, however, that the work of the Society will not be completed until every child on the books has been provided for, and until there has been done for Marash what has been done for Urfa.

While the industrial work is considered satisfactory, the maintenance of the orphans becomes increasingly difficult. Many have become independent by practising the trades they have been taught. Some have been married and others adopted, but there are yet hundreds who need assistance. Some 420 orphans are still on the Society's lists, and it is to be regretted that there are indications of a falling off in subscriptions to continue the work until the Society feels that its mission has been accomplished. The treasurer is Mr. Hector Munro Ferguson, 47, Victoria Street, S.W.

Chamberi Mission, Madrid.

IN presenting to his numerous friends in England and elsewhere a review of the Chamberi Evangelical Mission, Mr. Charles E. Faithfull says :—"Deeply thankful we are to God for manifest blessing resting on our efforts to lead souls to Christ and encourage believers in the path of obedience and faith. The growth in grace of several in the church calls for praise. One case is that of Manuel S., who diligently seeks to bring his companions to the meetings, and one professes to have received Christ. This brother was sent by his master to some monks in the neighbourhood of Burgos, reputed to be one of the most fanatical cities of Spain. While there he went about with tracts and sought to evangelize his companions and others."

THE SCHOOLS.

The report of the schools in the Chamberi and Pozas districts affords much satisfaction. Encouragement is found both as regards the children's conduct and progress, and through them a good influence exercised over some of their parents, resulting in their being led to attend the meetings. The average monthly attendance at the schools has been 376, and with larger premises and an increased staff of teachers it would he easy to receive many more. With the introduction of the new law on education, it was anticipated that some trouble would arise, but so far the only alteration required has been the removal of a partition in order to enlarge the infants' class-room at Pozas. The kindness of a friend enabled Mr. Faithfull to do something in the direction of supplying new furniture; but some £40 is still required, as suitable desks, maps, &c., are among the requisites upon which the new law lays particular stress.

On the reopening of the schools in September the children handed to their beloved superintendent their yearly offerings collected by them in the Sunday-schools. "On inquiring how they wished them to be applied," says Mr. Faithfull, "they asked that the money might be sent to our dear third son labouring for the Master at Lulwe, British Central Africa. His visit here before going forth, and his constant letters since, translated and read at the weekly prayer meeting, have maintained a lively interest in him and his mission. How remarkable that from Roman Catholic Spain prayer should ascend and help be sent to evangelize Pagan Africa." Mr. Faithfull will be glad to hear from any friends wishing to know more details of the work. He may be addressed: Paseo de Areneros, 6, Provl., Madrid, Spain.

Drunkenness in France.

IT used to be the custom upon temperance platforms to point to France in favourable comparison with drunken England. Unhappily of late years the condition of things across the Channel has greatly changed for the worse. In Normandy, which has taken an unenviable pre-eminence in regard to intemperance, drunkenness has become a prevalent vice, and has assumed an epileptic character. In one town, Caen, there is a drink-shop to every seventy persons, the number having quadrupled since the trade was thrown open. A recent writer has said :—

"The publicans can only gain paying profits by enticing moderate drinkers to become drunkards. The revenue from spirits has at Caen risen 66 per cent. The result this year is that deaths exceeded births by 1,224, the police-court sentences have yearly increased 15 per cent., the asylums are overcrowded with lunatics and epileptics, and the children's ward in the hospital with ricketty infants and sufferers from nervous complaints."

Happily the French Government, unlike our own, has awakened to see the evils of a revenue from drink, and is taking drastic measures to cope with the national curse. Yet in England we have a party illogically advocating free trade in drink as a remedy for drunkenness.

Old Christmas Cards.—Many friends having old Christmas cards may be glad to know of a means by which the same can be wisely used. Packets addressed to "J. P.," care of Mr. Walter Wild, Secretary, Y.M.C.A., 172, Queen's Road, Bayswater, W., will be gratefully received, and placed in the hands of tract distributors and district visitors.

GEMS FROM HIS MEETINGS.

THE BIBLE—AN INEXHAUSTIBLE MINE.

I KNOW the Bible is the Word of God because of its inexhaustible depth. All that is finite is fathomable. The Bible is unfathomable. Whatever man has produced, man can exhaust; but no man, no generation of men, not all the tens of thousands of men together that have devoted their best abilities and the best years of their lives to the study of this Book, have been able to exhaust it.

Men of the best minds that the world has ever known, men of widest culture, men of rarest intellectual grasp, men of keenest insight and profoundest ability have dug into the Book for years and years, and the more they have dug, the deeper they saw the depths still below them to be, and the richer the golden ore. Vast libraries have been devoted to the exposition of this Book, and still it is unexhausted. Why cannot men exhaust this book in eighteen centuries of digging? There can be but one fair answer. What man has produced man can exhaust, and the only reason why the whole race is unable to exhaust this book is because it is not man's book, but God's, and in it are hidden the infinite and inexhaustible treasures of the wisdom and knowledge of God.

CAUSES OF INFIDELITY.

One cause of infidelity is misrepresentation of Christianity by its professed disciples. I believe more infidelity results from this cause than any other, save one. There are two kinds of misrepresentation—in our teaching, and, still more, in our living. Take the first. Much that passes for Christian teaching has in it nothing of the Christianity of the Bible, but is only a gross caricature upon it. The God of much preaching is not the God of the Bible; the Christ of much preaching is not the Christ of the Bible; and much of the Christian life of Christ's professed followers is not the Christian life taught by the Word of God.

But it is still more the representations of Christianity in our living that produces infidels. Take, for instance, a man who makes great profession of Christianity, and then oppresses his employés, and grinds the utmost fraction out of them. Is it not very natural that those employés should be driven to infidelity? Here, again, is a man who professes very loudly that he is a Christian, and yet is dishonest in business. Is it any wonder that his customers are driven to infidelity? Here is a loudly professing Christian rolling in wealth and living in luxury, squandering the money God has entrusted to him, while poor starving men are turned from his door. Is it not the most natural thing in the world that his conduct should drive people to infidelity?

Mind you this, that while I say these are causes of infidelity, I do not say they are excuses. It is very foolish for a man to refuse good sovereigns because at some time or other he has been cheated with counterfeit coin; and, in the same way, it is extremely foolish of a man to refuse to believe in God and the Bible simply because of certain spurious Christians he may happen to come across.

IGNORANCE OF THE BIBLE.

One cause of infidelity is ignorance—ignorance of the Bible, of history, and of science. Almost every infidel I have come across was in the densest ignorance of the contents of the Book of books. I have never known all my life a single infidel that had a profound knowledge of the Bible, and the average infidel knows nothing about it. All he knows are a few little difficulties he has heard some infidel lecturer talk about, or has read in some infidel paper.

One night, after a meeting in Chicago, I was called to speak to a man who said he was an infidel. "Why are you an infidel?" I asked. "Because the Bible is so full of contradictions," he replied. "Please to show me one," I said. "Why," he said, "it is full of them." "Then you ought to be able to show me at least one." I replied. "Well," he said, "there are some in the Psalms." I handed him my Bible, and he looked for the Psalms over at the back part of it. I found the Psalms for him, but he could not point out the contradictions. "If I only had my own Bible here," he said, "I could soon show you." I asked him to meet me there at nine o'clock with his Bible, and he promised to do so. Nine o'clock came. I came; he did not come. He had given me his address, but on looking it up I found that he had given me the address of a liquor saloon, and that no man of his name lived there.

THE AGONIES OF REMORSE.

Hell is a place of ceaseless remorse. In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, which was our lesson to-night, our Lord told of a certain man who fared sumptuously and despised the poor man at his door. And you might have noticed that very special emphasis is laid on the fact that the rich man remembered. You rich men in Melbourne, living in luxury, and leaving the poor to the mercies of the dogs, like Dives of old, will wake up in hell some day and remember. You cannot take your money with you, nor the comforts with which your wealth enables you to surround yourselves; but there is one thing you will take with you, and that is your memory.

O men and women out of Christ, you will take your memory with you, and one of the most fearful torments of hell will be an accusing memory. You men that have lived for the almighty dollar, giving nothing to the poor, you will remember it through all eternity, that you would not help your fellow-men. You women that have wasted your lives in pleasure and in folly, you will take your memory into hell with you. All of you that have rejected the Son of God, and have trampled under foot the wondrous love that gave Him to die on the cross for you, you will take your memories of lost opportunities and wasted lives into hell with you.

O the tortures of memory! I have seen mighty, strong men in my office in Chicago, weeping like children. I have seen one of the brainiest men I ever knew throw himself on my floor and sob and groan and cry. What was the matter? Memory! I have had people come rushing to me in Chicago at the close of an evening service, with haunted eyes and drawn lips and pallid faces, and ask for a private conversation. What was the matter? Memory! Yes, hell will be a place of memory—unceasing memory. Remorse without surcease or rest, the worm that dieth not for ever and ever!

THE ONE FOUNDATION.

There are two kinds of converts: First, those who constantly grow in joy, in likeness to Christ, and in powerful service, so that every year of their life finds them further on than the year before. Second, those who profess to be converted, and who remain loyal for a year, or for a few months, a few weeks, or even for a few days only, and then drift back into the old life. In other words, the two classes are, those who make a complete success of the Christian life, and those who make a partial or complete failure of it.

Now, I am going to tell you of a very plain path that any man, woman, or child can take, and which will, I guarantee, lead you on, so that every year of your Christian life will be better than the year before, every month will be better than the month which preceded it, every week will be better than the week which went before it, and every day better than the preceding day. You have heard the hymn sung, which runs, "Where is the blessedness I knew when first I saw the Lord?" Friends, I know where the joy is that once I knew, when first I sought the Lord. It is twenty-seven years behind me, and to-day I have a joy I never dreamed of the year I was converted. Be sure that you build all your life and service on Jesus Christ, and that Christ alone is the foundation. The text for this step is 1 Cor. iii. 11: "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Christ Jesus." The hope that is built on Christ will stand. The life that is built on Christ will stand and grow. The hope that is built on anyone, or anything but Christ, will soon fall; and the life that is built upon anything or anyone but Christ, will soon go down.

THE LETTERS OF FIRE.

When Mr. Moody had his first tabernacle built in Chicago he wanted everybody that came into that building to know that God is love, and, for fear the preachers would not talk about it often enough, he had it put up in gas jets right at the back of the platform, and there it shone in letters of fire—"God is Love"—so that every night in the year, when people came into that building, they would get that great truth burned into their eyes and into their hearts. One night a poor outcast drunkard came up the street. It was too early for church, though the gas had been lit, and, thinking that he might find rest and shelter there, he walked up the steps, pushed the door open, and, looking down the building, saw those fiery letters above the platform, telling him "GOD IS LOVE." He pulled the door to, walked down the steps, and went away, saying, "God is love? No, God is not love. If He were love, He would love me; but God does not love such a miserable wretch as I am." But that sentence had been burned into his heart, and, after a little while, he turned round and came back, walked up the steps of the building, and sat down right at the back, behind the stove.

After a while, Mr. Moody came in and preached one of his characteristic sermons. When the service was over he went down, and found this man behind the stove, crying like a child. "What is the trouble?" said Mr. Moody. "What was in my sermon that touched you?" "Oh," said the man, "I didn't hear a word of it." "Was it the text?" "No." "Or the singing?" "No." "Well, what is the matter; what broke your heart?" "It was that text up there in the gas," said the man, "GOD IS LOVE!" Mr. Moody sat down beside him, took out his Bible, showed him how ready God was to pardon sin, and the man went out of that building rejoicing in the love of God.

GOD'S LOVE THAT CHASTENS.

O men and women! it is God's love that chastens us! Do you know, when I see a man fighting against God; when I see a man resisting the Holy Spirit; when I see a man on the verge of a decision, and yet will not decide for Christ; when I see a Christian backsliding from God and Christ—I tremble for that man! Why? Because God is love; because I know God; and I know that He loves us so much that He will use chastisement to bring a sinner to heaven if He cannot bring you in any other way.

A friend of mine, named Colonel Clarke, had a mission house, in which he used to hold services every night in the year. One night a notoriously hard man, named George Buck, was in the meeting, and the Spirit strove with him. When the meeting ended, Colonel Clarke held out his hand, and said, "George, I believe if you don't quit your sin and turn to Christ, God will take away your wife and daughter, and lock you up." George was very angry. He said, "Colonel Clarke, you mind your business, and I'll mind mine."

One month from that night George Buck's wife lay in the cemetery; his daughter had been taken away and placed in better hands than his, and George woke up on the hard, cold floor of Rochester Gaol. But then and there he accepted Christ, and is now a preacher of the Gospel. God's love is a chastening love; but God punishes the sinner, not merely for his own good, but for the good of others. Take a good government. If a man commits a crime, the Government punishes the guilty one for the sake of the community. And so, if people persist in sinning and rejecting God, for the sake of the good people God will separate the bad ones and shut them up in hell. Do you suppose God is going to let this condition of affairs go on for ever? Not a bit of it. Because God is a God of love, for the sake of the people who accept His love there is coming a day of separation, when the righteous shall be set on His right side and the wicked on His left side.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

WELCOME MEETING AND OPENING GATHERINGS.

THE assemblage that met Rev. Dr. R. A. Torrey and Mr. Charles Alexander at Exeter Hall, on Friday last, was one which, in point of numbers and enthusiasm, exceeded the most sanguine anticipations. When the meeting opened in the large hall, there must have been at least fourteen hundred people present, including ministers representing various denominations, church officers, and Christian workers, from all parts of London. That such a gathering should have been convened on a busy afternoon may be regarded as proving profound interest.

For an hour before, a Reception was held in smaller rooms, and many who laboured in years gone by with Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey had the pleasure of shaking hands with Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander. Faces familiar at Mildmay, Keswick, and other places of holy convocation, were numerous. One veteran worker was heard to say that he did not recollect having, in one day, seen so many friendly faces.

It was evident that the Chairman (Mr. T. A. Denny) spoke under a deep sense of the importance of the occasion, as he recalled the old gatherings with Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, of which it reminded him. He had been reading much of what God had wrought through his servants in Australia; and spoke for others, as well as himself, when he testified to great gratitude at seeing the two friends there that day. Turning to the evangelists he told them that the gathering then before them meant very much indeed, and assured them of the truest sympathy of the Christian world.

The note of praise and glory to God, which had been the burden of the Scripture reading (Psa. lxxii.) by Dr. Monro Gibson, and the opening prayer led by Mr. Henry Varley, was taken up by Prebendary Webb-Peploe. We have heard of what the Lord has been pleased to do through the agency of His servants in other lands, and we rejoice over what has been accomplished. Though we may not give praise, we may give honour, to the vessels God has been pleased to make use of; and he offered a most heartfelt British welcome to Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander.

THE PLACE OF THE HOLINESS MOVEMENT.

There has been advance in spiritual life through conventions for holiness; but it seems too much centred in the individual who himself is present in the convention. Evangelistic preaching seems to have gone rather out of date. We need to bring the two into union. We need to bring the influence of the teaching of holiness into its due place, not only in the foreign field, but in our own great cities. We need to see the spirituality that men claim in their own experience carried out in connection with evangelistic effort.

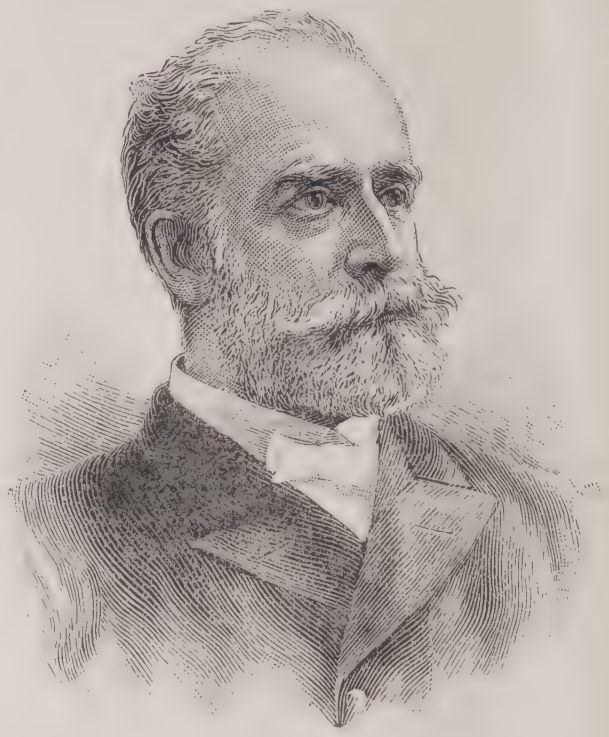
Speaking as a representative layman, Lord Kinnaird said that we are expecting great things from our Heavenly Father. We have long prayed that God would send some one who would be able to gather us together, one with a commission from the Almighty to show that it is not a question of the man. God is not limited to Mr. Moody, or Mr. Sankey, or Mr. Spurgeon, but the Father is himself directing the way for those whom He has called out for the work.

THE KEY-NOTE OF THE MISSION.

When Dr. Torrey rose to speak, the earnest feelings of the audience found outlet, and it became evident that the support of the Christian workers of the Metropolis could be relied on in the campaign on which he and Mr. Alexander are entering. He showed from the outset that he fully appreciated the spirit of the reception, and carried all hearts with him as he sounded out the key-note of his mission.

I have come, he said, to England in an expectant frame of mind, and my expectancy has increased since I reached this city this morning. I trust the key-note of this campaign can be summed up in the words of Psalm lxii. 5, "My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from Him." If your expectation is from Mr. Alexander, at the closing day of this month you will be a very disappointed people. If your expectation is from the one who will occupy the more prominent place in the preaching of the Word, you will be still more grievously disappointed. But if your expectation is from God, on the thirty-first day of January there will arise from thousands of hearts a great shout of praise to the Lord.

I have been since the 28th day of December, 1901, in a number of lands; and in every land upon which I have placed my foot, about the very first thing said to me has been, "You have come to a very hard place." The same thing has already been said to me about London: "London is a very hard place." So you are pretty much like all the rest of the world. I do not doubt that they were telling the truth, and that you are telling the truth. But there is nothing too hard for the Lord, and London is not too hard for the Lord. There is a body of people whom God has raised up, often quite independently of one another, who have been praying for, and longing for, and expecting, a mighty outpouring of God's Spirit. While I have been met everywhere with this statement of the difficulties of the field, in every place men and women have come and said, "We have been praying and expecting a revival"; and I think more people have said it in London than in any other place.



REV. DR. R. A. TORREY.

GOD ANSWERS PRAYER.

We have been crying to God. Friends, God answers prayer. There are a great many who do not believe that; but it is the truth, nevertheless. God answers prayer, and we shall have a demonstration of it in this city of London that will rejoice the heart of every true child of God. The work in Australia has been simply an illustration of four great truths.

I. It has been an Illustration of the Power of Prayer. Four years ago this week, at the close of the meetings in connection with the Week of Prayer in Chicago, a lady came to me and said, "Do you not think we ought to continue these meetings throughout the year, and meet one night a week to pray for a general revival?" I felt that it was the voice of God speaking through that lady, and I laid the matter before the faculty of the Institute of which I am Principal. They said, "We think it is God's voice." Tuesday night was appointed for a meeting, afterwards changed to Saturday night; and we met from nine to ten o'clock for three years.

People came and said, "Where's your revival?" We answered, "It is coming." "When?" "We do not know, but we know it is coming." "How long do you expect to keep this up?" "Till the revival comes." By and by a smaller prayer-meeting was started, following the other. That consisted at first of two persons — Professor Newell and myself. God was with us. The number enlarged to about twelve. We waited upon God till He sent us home, which was usually some time early on Sunday morning.

THE CALL TO AUSTRALIA.

One night in that gathering there came to me about one o'clock a prayer that was not my own, and I asked God about it. I hardly knew what I was going to say next, but before I got through it had formed itself into this, "Send me round the world, preaching the Gospel, and to see thousands of souls converted to the Gospel of the Son of God." How to leave Chicago I could not see, but not long after there appeared in our lecture-room two men who were strangers to me. One was the father of one of our students from Australia; the other, Dr. Warren, then of Australia, now of London. They said, "We want you to come to Australia to preach the Gospel." I said, "Impossible." Mr. Barbour replied, "You are coming." I thought I could go to England for a few weeks, but not to Australia. Mr. Barbour said, "I want to make arrangements now." The way opened. The hand of God was in it. When we reached Australia we found there had been 2,000 household prayer-meetings every week.

God had brought together about a dozen men who for eleven years had been crying for an outpouring of His Spirit. The power of God came down. People said, "Nothing can be done in Melbourne." When at the end of that month it was my privilege to stand up and face some eight thousand people; when I asked all to stand who had been converted during the meetings, and saw six thousand stand up—we knew better than ever that God was a God who answers prayer.

FROM APPLAUSE TO TEARS.

You have heard a great deal about the preaching and the singing, but let me testify that it was not the preaching, it was not the singing that did this; it was the praying, and God hears prayer. At the Reception meeting in Melbourne I gave as the key-note of the mission the same verse as to-night, and God led me to say something like this: We meet to-night with applause and enthusiasm; I believe that a month from to-night we will meet not with applause, but with tears and words of thanksgiving and rejoicing to God. I said we would meet "here," with room for 2,500; in point of fact we met in the Exhibition Hall with 8,000 people present, and that room was overshadowed by the presence of the Lord God Almighty Himself. Hearts were filled with joy that expressed itself in tears and psalms. I believe it will be the same in London. Thank God there is a great company here that believe the old-fashioned doctrine that God answers prayer. Scattered over the face of the earth there are five thousand people who have covenanted to pray for God's blessing upon the work while we are here. Do not we know God will listen when His people are crying to Him like that.

(2) An Illustration of the Power of the Word of God. We come with no new philosophy. I used to try to be an expert in philosophy. I had lots of fun out of it and leanness of soul. I found there was nothing in philosophy to save the drunkard, to save the slave of passion, to save the man who was in the grip of the greed of gold, to save the worldling from his or her folly; but I found there was a truth in the Word of God that could transform human life, that could reach down, down, down to the lowest depths of sin, and lift men and women up, and up, and up until they were worthy of a place beside the Son of God on the Throne.

NO NEW DOCTRINE.

You will hear no new doctrine. You will hear the Bible again and again. I stand here to say that I believe that Book from the first chapter of Genesis to the last chapter of Revelation. Once I did not. There was a time when I was so wise that I believed so much of the Bible as agreed with me. I pulled the Bible all to pieces. I was a higher critic of the higher critics. But I got to studying the Bible itself, instead of studying about it. I got to reading the old Book, and comparing Scripture with Scripture. I found that the crazy quilt theory of the construction of the Word of God would not hold water. I found out that there was one Master Mind behind the whole Book, that the voice that spoke in the first verse of the first chapter of Genesis—"In the beginning GOD"—was the same voice that spoke in the last chapter of Revelation.

The power of the Word of God: we had nothing else to teach, we did not know anything else, and God set His seal to the preaching of the Word of God. We have men in America who teach a new Evangelism, and tell us how it ought to be done, but they get no conversions. Study the story of the Church of Jesus Christ from the beginning, and you will find that every great religious awakening has sprung from a renewed study of the Word of God.

3. An Illustration of the Power of the Blood of Jesus Christ.—I know no Gospel that does not centre in the doctrine that Jesus Christ bore our sins in His own body on the Cross; and any hope that is not built on the substitutionary sacrifice of Jesus Christ on the cross is a false hope. We preached that doctrine, and preached it over and over again. Men who had been drunkards, men who had been professed infidels, had their eyes opened to the truth.

"COMING HOME TO-NIGHT."

I remember one of the business men's meetings in Melbourne, when we had been singing, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" A man sprang up in the audience, and cried out, "I am here, and I am coming home to-night." He was one of the infidel lecturers in Melbourne.

I remember in Christchurch how they asked me to answer questions. Christchurch was a seat of agnosticism, and higher criticism, and infidelity. The questions that were brought were good ones, intelligent ones, and we answered them as best we could. But God answered them better. One man—the secretary of the atheist club—came to see the fun, and to hear the preacher put in a corner. His wife, who was associated with him in his infidel work, was at the meetings also. As he sat there he was convinced. Then he opened his Bible for the first time in thirteen years; and in the providence of God he opened it at Luke xv.—"When he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him." And God met him right there. He went home and said, "Wife, I have thrown my infidelity overboard, and taken Jesus Christ." She said, "Husband, I was at the afternoon meeting, and did the same thing."

(4) An Illustration of the Power of the Holy Spirit. I believe in the Holy Ghost; I believe the Holy Ghost is in the world to-day; and I believe that the Holy Ghost is willing to work to-day just as He did in the days of George Whitefield, or John Wesley, or Finney, or Moody, or in the North of Ireland in 1859. God has demonstrated it anew in Australia, and in New Zealand, and in Tasmania, and in China, and in Japan, and in India.

NO HOPELESS CASES.

You know men concerning whose salvation you have no hope. You say they are utterly unimpressionable, and that they have no sense of sin. That is true from a human standpoint; but there is One—a Divine Person, not a helpful influence—who, when you and I meet the conditions of His work, moves through the audience, moves down the streets, in the shops and stores and offices, coming to the men and women of whom you are most hopeless, humbling them in the dust, converting them, regenerating them. God proved anew in Australia the power of the Holy Ghost.

MR. CHARLES ALEXANDER.

We expect to see in England the same four great truths illustrated again—(1) the power of prayer, (2) the power of the Word of God, (3) the power of the blood of Jesus Christ, (4) the power of the Holy Spirit. It will not be long before men who do not know there is a meeting in Exeter Hall to-night, and who if they did would be laughing at the whole matter, will feel in their hearts a strange sensation, a sense that they are sinners, and will begin to reach out and grasp after something that will meet the awful agitation in their hearts. Then that same Holy Spirit who has convinced of sin will reveal to them Jesus Christ as their Saviour. Then men and women who to-night are as far away as they can be will be born again by the Holy Ghost, and they will be the most active workers in the mission.

THE BEST DAYS NOT PAST.

There was a time when I wished that I had lived in the days of Whitefield, or of Wesley, or of Finney. I thought, oh how grand it must have been to live in days like these. I am glad now that I am living in the year 1903. I believe you and I have crossed the threshhold of one of the greatest epochs in the history of the Church of Jesus Christ on earth. I believe we are going to see one of the greatest revivals in all the world's history. Revivals in these old days meant something more circumscribed; but a revival to-day, with railways and steamships and telegraphs, means a revival round the globe. The dawn has broken in Japan. The daylight is coming. The dawn has broken in India. At the Decennial Missionary Conference in Madras, which delayed me three weeks in coming to this country, the one great thought was prayer to God for a revival throughout India; and while we were gathered telegrams kept arriving from all parts, saying, "The revival has come."

The dawn has brought delight in Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania; and soon the light will burst upon this favoured land. How bright the light will shine, how far the work will extend, how many souls will be gathered in, depends upon you and me. We all of us have our part by prayer. Will you each do your part? Will you spend all the time in prayer you ought to spend? Will you do all you ought in personal work? God help each of us to do our best!

The meeting had opened with the singing of the hymn, "Tell me the old, old story," and as Mr. Alexander stepped forward to take the lead in the singing the same cordial greeting was extended to him as to Dr. Torrey. "We have come," he said, "to tell the Old, Old Story, so let us sing about it." At a later point in the proceedings a deep interest was manifested as he sang a solo with the refrain:—

Come in, come in, Holy Spirit,
Thy work of great blessing begin.
By faith I lay hold of Thy promise,
And claim complete vict'ry o'er sin,

It was with difficulty that the audience was prevented from breaking out into a round of applause as he finished.

THE TRUE NOTES OF A REVIVAL.

When extending an affectionate personal greeting, Rev. F. B. MEYER gave the following reasons:—(1) That Dr. Torrey has been holding for many years a foremost place in Chicago, one of the most go-ahead of the American cities; (2) that he does not come because he has nothing to do at home; (3) that there were few men in whom Mr. Moody had the same absolute confidence; (4) that he knows what he believes, has reason for his belief, and is not afraid to state it in unmistakable terms; (5) that he does not preach a half-and-half Gospel, but that salvation which makes a man righteous as well as holy.

A right loyal and loving welcome was voiced by Rev. THOMAS SPURGEON, who called not only for daily but hourly prayer. Recalling much fellowship in the Gospel with Dr. Torrey, Rev. Dr. A. T. PIERSON declared the true notes of a revival to be that it should be based upon absolute faith in the Bible, in the miraculous birth and resurrection of the Son of God, in the cleansing power of the blood shed on Calvary, in the personality of the devil and of the Holy Ghost, in the fact of Pentecost and of a personal Pentecost for every believer, in a future state of rewards and punishments as taught in the Bible, in conversion as a supernatural work, and in the coming of the Son of God to set up His Kingdom in this world.

Lord's Day at Mildmay.

Fragrant memories of the Lord's Day morning meetings of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were revived at the opening service of the Torrey-Alexander mission at Mildmay Conference Hall. There was an earnest spirit of anticipation on the part of the many Christian workers who had come together, while the directness, the vivid anecdotal style, and happy touches of practical wisdom on the part of Dr. Torrey, could not fail to recall the man of God whose body lies yonder beneath the green sward of Round Top.

THE VALUE OF SOULS.

The meeting was brimful of life and interest. Both Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander evidently believe in "a bustle." They held the attention of the audience from first to last. Mr. Alexander prefers to be known as choir leader rather than soloist, nevertheless he sang very sweetly a message already familiar in this country:—

Have faith in God, the sun will shine,
Though dark the clouds may be to-day.

Dr. Torrey's address, founded on James v. 20, was full of burning truth. "I shall be content if I can fix in your memories three words only of the text—Save, Soul, and Death." Taking the second word first, the speaker said: "I wish I had the power to make you realize the value of a soul as God sees it. What can we put in comparison with it? Gold, silver, precious stones—what are these compared with a soul. At the World's Fair at Chicago there was one place where a large crowd was always to be seen while the exhibition was open. They were gazing at a purple velvet crown near the apex of which was a brilliant diamond. Oh, there are other diamonds far more worthy of attention! The souls of the men and women you pass in the street, the souls of those ragged boys and girls—these are jewels infinitely more valuable in God's sight than ten thousand diamonds. Oh, the value of souls!

THE TRUE RICHES.

Dr. Torrey told a striking story of two men whom he had known in New York. One by business sagacity and industry amassed a million dollars, then a second million, a third, and a fourth. One day he was knocked down by a train, and he died and had to leave it all. The papers had editorials on his rare business ability. The other man amassed half a million dollars. Then death came into his home and took his little girl. One night as he sat in the train, he was thinking of her, and the tears ran down his face, until he held up his newspaper to hide his emotion from the other passengers. The question was borne in upon him—what am I doing for other people's daughters? and he resolved to devote ten thousand dollars that year to the rescue of perishing girls. The next year he gave fourteen thousand, and at last he gave up business altogether to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. He is now seventy years of age, but is the youngest man I know of the age. Now, in the light of the Judgment Throne, which of those two men did best: the one who made four million dollars, to leave behind; or the other, who won thousands of souls to meet him in eternity?

Dr. Torrey next spoke forcibly on the third word—"Death." Death is an enemy—to the Christian, a conquered enemy; but it is in itself a hideous thing. Life is not merely existence, it is God-like existence, and this death of the soul is debasement and despair, the ruin of existence; and surely it is worth the labour of a lifetime to save one soul from death.

HOW IS IT TO BE DONE.

The evangelist's final word was "Saved." If death is sad, salvation from it is glorious; and man is to be saved not only from misery but to happiness—likeness to God and fellowship with Him. And how is it to be done? Through four means—(1) by prayer; (2) by bringing people where the Word of God is preached; (3) by testimony; (4) by personal work. "And when your streets, and trams, and 'buses and hotels are filled with men seeking to bring people to Christ, what a revival will have begun!"

With a wealth of illustration and much force Dr. Torrey drove his points home. The congregation was deeply moved by appeal and pathetic story, and as the benediction was pronounced and the people separated there were heard on every hand words of thankfulness for so glowing a message of invitation and encouragement. The mission had commenced auspiciously, and the holy flame of revival had been re-kindled in many a heart.

Afternoon Gathering.

No less encouraging was the afternoon gathering, for not only was the area of the Great Hall full, but the congregation overflowed into the galleries. While there was undoubtedly a sprinkling of outsiders present, it was easily seen that by far the majority of those who composed the audience were members of Christian churches. For some fifteen or twenty minutes previous to the commencement of the meeting, the hall resounded with well-known Gospel songs, led by the choir.

In due course Dr. Torrey and his colleague appeared on the platform, and many of the congregation looked for the first time upon the two evangelists who have been so widely used to bring home to the hearts of men in distant lands a saving knowledge of the love of God in Jesus Christ. Mr. Alexander announced the hymn, "Tell me the old, old Story," but the singing of the first verse was hardly to his mind. In a happy and characteristic way he told his hearers that if they had been to church within the last fifty years they knew both words and music. He would therefore take notice during the singing of the remaining verses who had been attending the House of God. This, of course, had its desired effect, and the singing afterwards was not lacking in heartiness. At a later stage in the meeting Mr. Alexander himself made a deep impression on the congregation by his sweet and expressive rendering of the touching words—

When my final farewell to this world I have said,
And gladly lie down to my rest;
. . . . . .
Will anyone there at the Beautiful Gate
Be watching and waiting for me.

Rev. F. Paynter led in prayer, beseeching the Almighty to remove from the hearts of any who were not trusting Him the hindrances which kept them from so doing. God was praised for bringing the evangelists to this country, and His blessing sought on all their labours. Reading John xv. 1-16, Dr. Torrey emphasized the conditions of fruit-bearing, and mentioned in passing that Mr. Alexander considered verse 7 to be the most solemn word in the Bible—"If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

ASKING AND RECEIVING.

Dr. Torrey's address was an earnest exhortation to Christians, based on the seven words: "Ye have not, because ye ask not" (James iv. 2). The message, he said, was one given to him at a Bible conference at which he presided. Some months afterwards a minister present wrote: "Those seven words have been clearly ringing in my heart, and have transformed my methods of work and preaching." I trust (said Dr. Torrey) that the message may have the same effect to-day, for these words explain the poverty and powerlessness of the average Christian and Church. How is it that so many are asking, Why do I make such slow progress in the Christian life? God answers—Neglect of prayer. "Ye have not because ye ask not." Why is it, ministers are asking, that I see so few converted under my ministry, and God answers again—Neglect of prayer. "Ye have not because ye ask not." The Sunday-school teacher asks, Why do I see so few scholars brought to the Saviour's feet? God answers in the words of the text; and gives the same reply to the question—"Why is the Church making such slow progress against error, unbelief, and worldliness?"

Over against these conditions the speaker placed the note of victory running through the Acts of the Apostles. From Jerusalem to Rome it was one forward march without a single defeat. In chapter ii. 42 we read, "They continued stedfastly . . . in prayer." Again in chapter vi. 4, "We will give ourselves continually to prayer and the ministry of the Word." Here is a praying ministry and a praying membership. If the Holy Spirit were writing the history of the Church to-day, would He write, "All these continued stedfast in prayer." No, because the Holy Spirit only writes the truth. There is nothing in which we have departed more from the Apostolic methods than in the neglect of prayer.

THE OMNIPOTENCE OF PRAYER.

Passing on to speak of the great lack of power in the Christian Church to-day, Dr. Torrey urged as the only sure remedy the cultivation of a spirit of earnest, persistent, believing prayer.

Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees.

Prayer can do anything God can do, and as God can do anything, prayer is omnipotent. Addressing himself in terms of deep and fervent conviction, the speaker brought proof that prayer possesses this power from (1) specific Bible statements; (2) Bible incidents; (3) history outside the Bible; (4) and our own personal experience. Some people offer philosophical and scientific arguments that God does not answer prayer, but these are not worth a moment's consideration because they contradict fact, knowledge, and experience. It is a scientific and historic fact that God answers prayer. On the subject of worldliness in the Church, the speaker had some heart-searching words; but expressed the belief that England is on the eve of a great awakening.

Throughout the address Dr. Torrey demonstrated his power to command and retain the close attention of his audience, while he endeavoured to arouse Christians from their day-dreams of indifference to seek "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

Evangelistic Meeting.

In the evening an excellent beginning was made with the general evangelistic work, a large audience being gathered from all directions. For some time before the service opened, hymns were sung by the choir, and when Mr. Alexander took over the charge of the praise, he said that at three previous meetings that day the audiences had wanted to have "The Glory Song," but each time he had felt that they were not ready for it. Now, however, he thought the time was ripe for it, and the audience took up the strain with great enthusiasm and feeling.

When asking the people to take the hymn sheets away with them, and if they had surplus copies to give or send them to friends, Mr. Alexander told about a lady who was at one of the meetings in Sydney. Having one of the hymn-sheets to spare, and being about to send a pair of boots to the cobbler when she went home, she enclosed it in the parcel. When she next called at the shop she found the man with tears in his eyes. He explained that when he took the hymn-sheet out of the parcel he and his children had got to singing "The Glory Song." Then he observed an invitation to a meeting at the Town Hall. He had gone and had been converted, and was arranging to take his family that evening. Prayer was answered in their case also, and on the third evening the whole family came out in a row to make a public confession. Before the audience sat down after the closing verse, Mr. Alexander glided into a verse of "Oh, think of the Home over there," which awakened many memories of former days. It was noticeable that throughout the service, with the exception of "The Glory Song," the praise was confined to old favourites. Mr. Alexander sang as a solo Fanny Crosby's "Some day the silver cord will break."

BELIEF IN GOD.

Dr. Torrey's subject was "God," and his four points—(1) there is a God, (2) God is Great, (3) God is Holy, (4) you and I must meet Him—constituted a thorough clearing of the ground for a forcible presentation of the Lord Jesus Christ as the atoning, the risen, and the exalted Saviour.

At the outset he dealt with questions about the existence of God, showing that the time has gone by for anything like a denial of that great fact. Nature proves the existence of God. All through nature there are marks of creative intelligence. Everywhere we find order, symmetry, and law, whether it be studied in the minute or the vast. Taking a highly-finished watch and the human eye as illustrations, he showed how false is the reasoning that can demand an intelligent maker for hands, figures, case, works, winding apparatus, in the one; and can accept the explanation that in the other the atoms danced together as the result of a fortuitous concurrence of circumstances.

With regard to the doctrine of evolution, he himself had given it up long ago, not for theological but for scientific reasons, because there was not a single proof of the hypothesis to be found. He had been told about a missing link, but he found that all the links were missing. Yet it would not militate against the argument for design if the universe as we see it to-day had developed from primordial protoplasm. It would take a more wonderful man to make a watch-hand that would develop into a perfect watch than to make the watch. It would be a more marvellous demonstration of the power of God if He had created some primordial protoplasm which developed into the universe as we see it, than if He had created the universe as it stands.

History proves that there is a God. A review of a few years may look like a tangle of efforts and conflicts of men; but taking the history of centuries we see behind their passions and struggles an all-governing superintending Providence. But there is one special history which proves that there is a God; the history of Jesus of Nazareth, as recorded in the Gospels by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. Strauss, Baur, Schenkel, Renan, and many more have laboured to pull that life to pieces; but the efforts have failed utterly and absolutely.

THE INFINITE AND INFINITESIMAL.

The difference between Bible and popular teaching about God is that the former reveals an infinite God and an infinitesimal man except as God's gentleness makes him great; while the latter believes in an infinite man with an infinitesimal God.

If there should burst upon this audience a real vision of God in His holiness, every man and woman would fall on their faces, crying out, "Woe is me, for I am undone."

You and I must meet this God some day. "Prepare to meet thy God" (Amos iv. 12)—the rich man, the beggar, the scholar, the literary man, the commoner, the nobleman, the king, the emperor. The supreme question of life is this, "Are you ready to meet God?" If you ask in what readiness consists, there is only one ground on which man can meet God with joy, not with despair, and that ground is the atoning blood of Jesus Christ. On this ground the drunkard, the vilest sinner, the thief, the outcast, can come without fear; but the best man and woman can never on any other ground come without overwhelming dismay.

No pressure was used to induce people to enter the inquiry room; but when an opportunity was afforded the response showed that hearts had been stirred by the Holy Spirit, and that at least a few were ready to accept the Saviour.

Monday's Gatherings.

HOPEFUL PROSPECTS.

The services of the Sabbath had done much to prepare the way for the mission, as well as affording ample opportunity for those who gathered at Mildmay to become conversant with the methods of the evangelists. Certain it was, therefore, that of the hundreds who assembled on Monday afternoon, few, if any, were drawn thither by mere curiosity, but rather with a fervent desire to hear more of the mind and purpose of the Infinite One, as revealed in His Word and expounded by His servant.

Mr. Alexander's efforts to secure hearty and effective singing were again rewarded with success, and several popular hymns preceded the address, interspersed with prayer, offered by Mr. G. E. Morgan and Rev. D. B. Hankin.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

In accordance with his promise, Dr. TORREY followed up the previous afternoon's study of the passage, "Ye have not because ye ask not," speaking on this occasion on what prayer can do along specific lines.

(1) Prayer, together with the study of God's Word, will promote our spiritual growth.—Our growth into the likeness of Jesus Christ, all things being equal, will be in proportion to the time and strength we put into earnest, believing prayer to God. In 2 Cor. iii. 18 there is a significant thought: "We all, with open face, beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory." The thought is this—Jesus Christ is the Sun, you and I are the mirrors. And just as the boy holds up a mirror before the sun, catching its rays and reflecting them, so those of us who are in union with God the Father and Christ the Son, can look up into His face, catch the rays of its glory, shedding them around us in the world. Every spiritual blessing is obtained by prayer, and little prayer means little likeness to Christ, while much prayer means much likeness to Him.

(2) Prayer will bring power into our work.—Are you a Sunday-school teacher, and desire the salvation of your scholars? Ask God for the power to win them, and you will not fail.

A MEMORABLE EXPERIENCE.

To illustrate this point Dr. Torrey recalled an occasion when a converted society lady, with no experience of public address, moved an audience which filled Tremont Temple, Boston, until stern features softened, heads were bowed, and tears flowed from eyes unaccustomed to weeping. On being asked the secret of her powerful appeal, the lady replied that, knowing her own incompetency, she had spent the whole of the previous night on her face before God.

(3) Prayer will bring salvation to others.—A deep impression was made as Dr. Torrey related how for fifteen years he prayed for the conversion of a brother, until God granted his request.

(4) Prayer will bring blessing to the Church.—If there is any difficulty in the Church, prayer will lay it low, and will bring the power of God from on high. What is needed to-day is a revival: not one got up, but one that comes down through prayer.

(5) Prayer will do much for the minister.—There is a danger of looking toward the evangelist entirely forgetting the minister. Pray for your minister; pray that the Spirit of God may be manifest in overwhelming power.

WORDS TO THE UNSAVED.

It was hardly expected that Monday evening would see the hall full, as in many homes and churches other engagements would intervene. There was, however, a good attendance, and the occasion will be sacred to many who crossed the threshold of the Kingdom. Taking as text of a deeply-earnest and thoroughly evangelistic address the three words, "God is Love," Dr. Torrey spoke with all the solemn concern of one who yearns to win the souls of lost men and women. He showed how, by his sin, man has dishonoured God and injured His government; how the penalty was fully paid, disclosing the feeling of God toward sin, at the same time revealing His exhaustless love toward the sinner.

As the speaker proceeded it was evident that many were being moved to penitence, with the result that, when the invitation was given, in every part of the hall there were those desirous of prayer being offered on their behalf. These afterwards passed into the inquiry rooms, and were pointed to Him who alone can save. Truly God has already done great things, whereof His people are glad.

The mission is being continued at Mildmay until January 30. On Sundays, 18 and 25, three services are to be held, 9.30, 3.30, and 7 (not 7.30 as announced on hymn-sheets). Each Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday the meetings are at 3 and 8 p.m.

The Beak that Bit.

LITTLE Dolly Williams went out with her mother one day to pay some afternoon calls. She felt very big (although she was only three years old) when, at the first house, she heard the servant announce them to the hostess as "Mrs. and Miss Williams"; but after awhile she began to find it rather tedious, as she could not understand much of the conversation in which the two ladies were engaged. But she understood the "afternoon tea" when it was brought in, and enjoyed the nice cakes that were given her, of which she ate her full share, and perhaps one or two more than were good for a little girl of her age.

Then, as the talking continued, she began to grow restless, and looked about the room, until she spied in a corner a big wire cage in which a parrot was amusing itself climbing about its swing and bars. Then she heard it speak a word or two, and thought it would be more fun to go and talk to it than to listen to the elder people's conversation. So she toddled off to the end of the room, and after watching Polly for a few moments, being a friendly little soul she put in her finger to stroke it. Then her mother heard a scream which made her jump, and her little daughter came running towards her, crying out, "Oh, dear! oh, dear! I fort it was a nose, and it's a toof!" The bird misunderstood her kind intentions, and bit her!

Very unkind, wasn't it! But Polly, perhaps, had never seen such a tiny finger before, and either thought it looked nice enough to eat, or else that it was a strange something coming to hurt her, and defended herself against an imaginary foe. Anyway, Dolly's finger was bleeding, and had to be wrapped up in her mother's handkerchief, and it was some time before her tears were dried, and it will be longer still, I expect, before she puts her little hand in a parrot's cage again!

But I want you to think about what she said, as well as what she did. What was it? "I fort it was a nose, and it's a toof!" Of course she was not quite correct in her description, but she knew it hurt her finger, which was quite enough for her! The beak she thought was smooth and round turned out to have a very sharp and painful point, which had another, equally sharp and painful, beneath it. The one point could only scratch; the two together bit. Now there are many things that seem pleasant to do when we are boys and girls—things I mean that are wrong—but because they please our fancy, or gratify our self-will, we indulge in them without sufficient thought of the consequences they will bring. Perhaps we see something in the cupboard or on the table that is not ours, and to which we know we have no right, and we are tempted to steal it. Or we do not like going to school, so we play truant. Or when we are in a room by ourselves to prepare our lessons, we read a story-book instead. Or it may be that we tell a falsehood about something, because it seems more easy or pleasant than to tell the truth.

The Under-beak.

Now, in all these and similar cases, we see only what I may call the upper beak, which seems smooth and attractive, and we forget there is an under beak as well, which will nip and cause us pain. You have found out often enough that punishment generally follows wrong-doing, but after all, that is only like the sharp point of the upper beak. If Dolly had only felt that, and had received a scratch, it would, I daresay, have been enough to prevent her repeating her mistake. That is the object of punishment—to prevent our doing wrong again.

But, punishment, although it makes us feel bad at the time, is very soon over, and I am afraid it does not always restrain our naughtiness as much as it should. So I want you to remember the under-beak that is generally out of sight. Satan, from whom all temptation comes, takes care to conceal from us the more serious results of sin. He shows us the smooth, shiny side, and even if we know we may be punished, yet that is only like a scratch that is soon healed.

But sin inflicts more serious hurt than any punishment that we may receive. Sin bites. It will make a deep wound in your character which may take years to heal. When people know you are lazy, or dishonest, or untruthful, they cease to trust you. And another thing is, that sin once committed is easier to repeat; and one sin sometimes requires another to cover up the first. A boy steals, and then tells a lie to hide it; and one lie often leads to several more. Have you not found it so? Thus your character gets worse and worse; you grow lazier, or more dishonest, or more untruthful, every day, until wrongdoing becomes like a cancer eating into your life. This is the under-beak which you do not see at the time, but by degrees you find out how sharp it is. At first you think sin is a round, shiny, pleasant thing, like a nose; after a while you find it is like a tooth that bites. A single tooth will not hurt you, but when you place your finger between two, you cry out with pain. My dear young readers, I could horrify you with instances of how older people have at last realised the truth of what I have written, who in their early days were only thoughtless and perhaps ignorant, like Dolly and you. They played with sin and stroked it, and thought to fondle it, but at last they have found "it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." It was an easy thing to wrap up a little girl's finger and stop the flow of blood; but a scar remained for many days. I have had two scars on my face for years which resulted from wounds I received years ago, and they will never disappear. Even if your sin is not found out by others, and you thus escape punishment for it, the wound is in your character just the same.

The Stag and the Leopard.

One day a stag was running through a forest. Above it in a tree was a leopard, which sprang upon it and fastened its teeth and claws in the flesh of its victim. The stag struggled on with the leopard on its back, until it came to a fallen tree a few yards away, the trunk of which was raised two or three feet from the ground by the torn-up roots at one end, and the branches at the other. A few minutes ago the stag would have bounded lightly over it: but now it could only scramble underneath. As it did so, the leopard's head struck the body of the tree, and he released his hold. Then the stag escaped, bleeding and torn, but it always showed the marks of its narrow escape.

Both the stag and the little girl got into trouble when they had nothing much to do. It is a true saying that

Satan finds some mischief still
For idle hands to do.

Keep busy. Use your time well, whether in work or in play. Fill up your leisure hours. This has proved one of the secrets of the successful lives of the greatest men and women. Learn all you can from other people, and read useful books. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life," (Prov. iv. 23).

You may form bad habits in your youth which you may overcome by-and-by, and perhaps you may come to Jesus for cleansing and pardon; but your sin may make you distrusted, or even weak and ill for the rest of your life. That is the bite, the scar, which the under-beak, together with the upper one, will leave upon you. Dear boys and girls, do not be deceived by Satan; remember there are hidden points in all temptation that you cannot see. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man—or boy, or girl—soweth, that shall he—or she—also reap" (Gal. vi. 7).

ENDEAVOURERS AND CHURCH WORK (Ezra iii. 8-13; 1 Tim. iii. 14, 15).

LET us take the last texts first. The Church, as used by the Apostle Paul, denotes, not any one of the various Christian congregations or sects, but the Universal Church—the Holy Catholic Church. This is described as "the House of God." God, who dwells in the universe, as a mighty tabernacle, of which the clouds are curtains, and the heavenly bodies are lamps, and the sea the outspread laver or basin, dwells also in the Church, which is being prepared for His indwelling. "Each several building, fitly framed together, groweth into a holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God in the Spirit." Notice how the whole Trinity is mentioned in these wonderful verses (Eph. ii. 21, 22).

In this Temple we are called to serve, as of old the Levites served in the Temple which was made with hands. Happy are we if we realize the mystery of the Church, in which every believer has a distinct place.

In the olden Temple there were priests for the sacrifices, Levites as doorkeepers, singers, custodians of treasure, and assistants of various grades. For the most part these were appointed by lot, that there might be no rivalry or jealousy. We have no need of this more mechanical method in these days of Holy Spirit illumination, when God is prepared to guide each humble soul to the work which He created it to perform. Our one aim should be to build our lives on the Divine Pattern (Heb. viii. 5). Anything less than this will not be satisfactory. Sometimes the Divine plan is made known to us at a single glance; sometimes only a piece is shown us at a time; and, when we have finished this, then another and another; and at last, when the whole stands complete, we know what we have been employed upon through long years of faith and patience. But the secret of a useful and happy life is to discover what God made us for, and to do it with quiet, persistent toil until God shall reward us by saying, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

It was a matter of great joy and congratulation when the foundations of the new Temple were laid. Preceded by burnt-offerings, which indicated entire surrender to God, and accompanied by holy song, it must have been a very solemn and blessed time. Tears mingled with gladness, as many remembered the past—vanished beyond recall.

Young friends, do not be discouraged by the tears and bewailings of the older people. They will always belittle the present. When we were at school we always said that the school was going down because there were no elder boys, forgetting that we had become the elder boys. But the present is your time, the time of hope, of a fresh beginning, of foundation-laying. It is the opportunity for you to find your work and do it. There have been other temples before you, other builders, other singers, but they have gone. This is your chance, rise to it, do your very best, find your niche of service, and set yourself to fill it, with all your heart, and mind, and strength.

Be sure to sing as you work. When the foundations are laid in your young energy, let your heart rise up to God in music. He is always good; His mercy endures for ever; He does not deal with us after our sins, nor reward us according to our iniquities. Whatever the failures of the past generation may have been, and the sins which compelled Him to put it away, He meets the builders of the new time with the same tender love. The dew is always on the morning grass. The spring of the year is always fresh.

Let each "behave himself" as he should in his life task, and remember that in this way He is helping to make the Church the pillar and ground of Truth; for nothing so substantiates the truth of the Gospel as the holy living of its disciples. F. B. M.

PAUL'S COUNSEL TO THE THESSALONIANS (1 Thess. v. 14-28.)

GOLDEN TEXT (1 Thess v. 21).

The first epistle to Thessalonica, written from Corinth, was the earliest of Paul's writings (A.D. 52). The Apostle had unwillingly left the newly-founded Church of Thessalonica suffering fierce persecution. Anxious for the young converts, and not able to return himself, he sent Timothy from Athens, and received him on his return at Corinth (1 Thess. iii. 10; Acts xviii. 1-5).

THE REPORT BY SILAS AND TIMOTHY.

1. Glad tidings of their faith and love.
2. Affectionate remembrance of the Apostles.
3. News of persecutions, and distress of mind concerning their beloved dead (1 Thess. iii. 6; i 6; iii. 3, 5; iv. 9, 13). Slanderous tongues had worked evil against the Apostle during Paul's absence, and seeds of false teaching and disorderly conduct been sown among the young believers in Thessalonica.

PAUL'S REPLY.

1. Thanks to God for their joyful acceptance of the Gospel, their faithful obedience, and courage in proclaiming it abroad (1 Thess. 1. 2-10; ii. 13).
2. Vindication of his own and fellow-workers' conduct (1 Thess. ii. 1-12).
3. Warning against the sin for which their town and times were notorious. Advice for guidance in the new life (1 Thess. iv. 1-12; ii. 14; iii. 13; v. 11-24).
4. Inspired teaching concerning the resurrection of believers at "the coming of the Lord (1 Thess. iv. 15).

Paul taught in both Epistles the certainty and unexpectedness rather than the nearness of the Lord's second coming (1 Thess. iii. 13; v. 2, 3; 2 Thess. ii. 1-12). Visionary teaching had arisen among the Thessalonians (2 Thess. ii. 2, 15; iii. 6-15), and led to neglect of honest labour for the needs of earth. Reproof by example and word (iii. 8).

Disobedience to the decrees delivered by Paul for Church government (Acts xvi. 4), and charges for a holy walk (1 Thess. iv. 2-12, ii. 11; 2 Thess. ii. 15, iii. 6-11). Busy-bodies, busy about other people's work, neglecting their own (1 Thess. iv. 11). Doing as they liked (Rom. xv. 1-3).

Faint-hearted. Because of failure, temptation, persecution, bereavement (1 Thess, iii. 5). Tell them of Jesus who saves "to the uttermost," "an Advocate with the Father," "the Resurrection and the Life" (Heb. vii. 25; 1 John ii. 1; John xi. 25).

Weak in faith, in conscience, in body (Rom. xv. 1; Acts xx. 35).

All. Look patiently for the good in them (1 Thess. v. 14, 15).

Wilfully, unruly. "Withdraw" (1 Cor. xv. 33; Rom. xvi. 17, 18).

1. REJOICE. 2. PRAY. 3. PRAISE.

When? (1) Evermore. (2) Without ceasing. (3) Always.

What for? (1) Jesus Christ my Saviour (Phil. iii. 3). The gift of his Holy Spirit. The glory to come (Rom. v. 2). (2) Strength to resist temptation, and bear persecution. For the Apostles (teachers) wisdom and guidance to do what pleases God. (1 Tim. ii. 1-5; James i. 5). (3) For the Gift of God (2 Cor ix. 15); His Holy Word (Ps. cxix. 162); Revelation.

Why "in everything"? Because "we know that all things work together for good to them that love God" (Rom. viii. 28). (4) To listen and obey the teaching of the Holy Spirit (not quench, not grieve, Eph. iv. 30), and His ministers and teachers (v. 12). (5) Trusting in the faithfulness of God give "spirit and soul and body" to His keeping.

Three more standing orders for our conduct to others. DISORDERLY. Admonish is to "put them in mind" of the rules. Many a boy or girl is "kept in rank" by the kind word of a companion. FAINT-HEARTED. Give them a cheer for what they can do, and they will do better for it. WEAK. Stretch out a helping hand. A word, a look, a kiss will do wonders if it comes from a heart of love, one to the other, companion. ALL. Patiently look out for all the good and draw it out. Some find it more easy to do wrong than right (Rom. xvi.). Pay back evil with the coals of the fire of love (Rom. xii. 17-21). Remember the rule Jesus laid down for His followers (Matt. v. 38-48). "But I say."

PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

Stonewall Jackson exerted a wonderful influence over the men of the Confederate army, and was accustomed to put into daily practice the injunction, "pray without ceasing." He once said that he had so used himself to pray that he would never raise a glass of water to his lips without asking God's blessing on the act. He always closed a letter with a prayer under the seal, and in the military classes was in the habit of offering a petition on behalf of the cadets coming into and going out of his presence. The custom, said Stonewall Jackson, was almost as fixed with him as breathing. Prayer should be with us the linking of our lives to God Himself. As the child ventures anywhere, with his hand in the hand of his father, so day by day we may, safe in the presence of our Heavenly Father, "pray without ceasing" (v. 17).

GOD'S PERVADING PRESENCE.

Much has been said in a recent biography of Queen Victoria with regard to her wonderful personality. When in the company of her Ministers our late Queen not only filled the royal chair, but, it is said, her presence filled the whole room. Her Majesty's influence was magnetic, and if her councillors were in any doubt as to the course to pursue, the Queen rarely hesitated to point out the way she preferred. In short she governed, as well as reigned, and was not by any means a mere figure-head. If the presence of an earthly monarch could inspire all around her, how much more should God's Holy Spirit influence our daily lives. Let us beware lest we quench the Spirit (v. 19).

PROVE AND HOLD FAST.

Londoners will have noticed that recently the dials of "Big Ben" over the Houses of Parliament have been thoroughly cleansed and regilded. To accomplish such an undertaking, it has been necessary to use a swinging cradle, attached to the framework of the clock. Before the workmen ventured upon the structure, it had to be thoroughly tested, and on the safety of the cradle having been proved, the workmen proceeded to carry out the alterations to the clock dials. Having tested the strength of the cradle, the men trusted themselves upon it—and the Apostle, in writing to the Thessalonians, counselled them to "prove all things and hold fast that which is good" (v. 21).

A LIFE WHOLLY SANCTIFIED.

When Henry Martyn became a missionary, he abandoned the attractions of a brilliant career in England. At Cambridge University he had gained high honours, and was naturally very fond of the refinements of social and literary life. Yet he decided to leave all these advantages because of the urgent need of missionaries in India. The noble example of Dr. Carey was ever before Henry Martyn, and though he suffered great anguish ere he definitely undertook mission work, he eventually chose the thorny path of self-denial instead of the easier one of self-indulgence. The subsequent career of Henry Martyn is well known, and his life of entire consecration to the work of converting India was an expression of the spirit of the lesson. The God of peace had sanctified him wholly; he was called of God and preserved by Him in all that he undertook in the service of the Lord (vv. 23 and 24).

A Book for Teachers.—In preparing the lessons dealing with the life and labours of the Apostle Paul, teachers will find Rev. F. B. Meyer's volume, PAUL: A Servant of Jesus Christ, a helpful and informing work to study. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.).

"Dreams and Realities," by G. E. Morgan, M.A.—After reading this book Dr. J. D. McClure, headmaster of Mill Hill School, wrote:—"I can see that it will be very helpful to me personally in my endeavours to speak to the boys on the greatest subjects in morning chapel. The short, bright, simple address is exactly what one most needs to bring home the truth to them."

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

MOTHERWELL.

THE mission at Motherwell of Rev. Dr. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones opened auspiciously on January 9, when, despite a very severe snowstorm, 500 people attended the welcome meeting. Addresses were given by Rev. Thos. Whillas, B.D., and Provost Findlay. It was said that no more representative gathering of Temperance and Christian workers had been held in Motherwell. Dr. Henry briefly responded to the words of welcome.

At the public meeting fully a thousand people braved the storm, and gave the heartiest of greetings to the missioners. The chairman was Bailie Knox (who has done so much for the temperance cause in his own town of Airdrie). Dr. Henry spoke on "Passion for the Kingdom of God," concluding with a persuasive appeal to fight the drink traffic as the chief obstacle to the promotion of that kingdom of justice, peace, and joy. Seventy-nine new pledges were taken. Mr. Jones sang with power.

On Saturday afternoon Mrs. Colville presided with much sweetness over a large juvenile meeting, at which more than 180 new recruits for Band of Hope work were secured.

On Sabbath morning Dr. Henry preached in the Clason Memorial U.F. church to a crowded congregation, and Mr. Jones sang, "Saved by Grace," with deep spiritual power. In the afternoon 1,600 men were crowded into the Town Hall, filling every foot of standing room, while many more were turned away. It was a service never to be forgotten. Dr. Henry discoursed from Psa. xciv. 16. His appeal to the vast audience to "rise up" against the drink, to "stand up against" its soul-destroying power, moved many to tears. No fewer than 280 persons signed the pledge.

At night, in the parish church, there was another immense crowd. All the available space was filled, including the aisles; the doors were then closed, and hundreds failed to gain admission. Dr. Henry's message was most effective, and the impression made by the address was deepened by Mr. Jones' pathetic rendering of "I shall know Him by the print of the nails in His hands." Those, too, who heard Mr. Jones sing "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" at the men's meeting, could not fail to concur in the chairman's description of him as a "prince of singers." Up to Sabbath evening 550 new pledges had been secured.

Liverpool Sheltering Homes.

THE thirtieth annual meeting was held recently in the Town Hall, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor of Liverpool. Interesting speeches were given by Sir Edward Russell, Dr. John Watson, and Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., upon the emigration work carried on by the Homes.

Sir Edward Russell spoke of the increasing prosperity of Canada, her one need being increased population, and that this institution is assisting to supply. Mr. Samuel Smith was glad to see that Boards of Guardians were awakening to the openings offered by emigration under wise supervision. He hoped they would take advantage of them, and instead of keeping the children in this country have them placed in the Dominion.

The hon. treasurer, Mr. E. C. Thin (24, Chapel Street, Liverpool), reported a debt of £357 on the year's expenses; 168 children had been taken to Canada; 241 admitted during the year ending October 31. There are over seventy children now in the Home, for whom help is needed.

Temperance in Canada.

CANADA for many years has been steadily moving toward the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and one of the latest phases in the movement was a referendum in the province of Ontario, on December 4. The result of the vote was a favourable majority of 80,000, but the measure will not become law, since one-half of the votes polled at a former provincial election was required. Prohibitionists, however, are greatly encouraged by their large majority, and the fact that Toronto and other large cities, which gave adverse majorities in the two plebiscites some years ago, have in a very emphatic way reversed their verdict. There is now no question about the prohibitive sentiment of the province, and had the roads and weather been favourable, the rural vote, which was unexpectedly small, would undoubtedly have been large enough to call the measure into force.

Many after benefits, it is believed, will accrue from the campaign, which was earnest and effective, and devoid of gush and hysterics. It is impossible to calculate the number of young people who will be influenced by the addresses and literature to total abstinence and continued opposition to the liquor traffic. Then there was a splendid union of temperance forces representing those who specially favoured high licenses, local option, the Gothenburg system, Government control, and prohibition, Here was one of the weaknesses of temperance reform in the past, and here will be its strength in the future. There was a great union, too, of the Church forces, and on the same platform were found ministers of all denominations, including Episcopalians, some of whom were most active in the campaign.

Concerning the future, it may not be wise to predict; but prohibition for the province seems now to be reasonably sure. In fact, a leading daily paper which championed the opposition against the referendum admitted editorially the morning after the vote that the closing of the bar-room is inevitable. The Legislature will also be asked to take more advanced ground in the matter, and candidates definitely pledged to prohibition will be more generally sought. It is likely, too, that as a result of the voting the churches will seek more earnestly to have their young people committed to the Christian life as the only sure protection against the drink evil.

Proposed Bedouin Mission.

AN effort is being made to establish a mission with the object of reaching the neglected seed of Ishmael. It has only very recently been found possible to carry the Gospel and Scriptures to them. Mr. Archibald Forder, who went forth leaning in simple trust upon the arm of God, penetrated 750 miles into Arabia, and went from tent to tent, and from town to town in those unknown and mysterious lands, unfolding the story of Jesus and His love, speaking and reading to the people in their own tongue. Though frequently in danger, with no apparent way of escape open to him, Mr. Forder's faith never wavered. God helped him, and used him in wonderful ways.

The mission now being formed, with Jerusalem as its base and headquarters, will reach the neglected poor of the Holy City and the Bedouin of Northern Arabia, Eastern Palestine, and the Sinai Peninsula, and will also keep in constant touch with the ever-flowing stream of Arabs who visit Jerusalem. The Arabs come immense distances to sell and buy in Jerusalem, and they are obliged to stay there a few days, during which, very often, they get robbed and pillaged. A safe shelter would be an inestimable boon to them, and right gladly would they listen to the Gospel story told them by their benefactors.

For the purchase of land, house for missionaries, and the building of a caravansary and meeting room, £3,000 is needed, besides the sum required for upkeep and itinerating; and an urgent appeal is being made for contributions towards this amount.

Obituary.

MRS. CHRISTOPHER (OXFORD).

A WIDE circle of friends will learn with regret of the death of Mrs. Christopher, wife of Canon Christopher, the beloved rector of St. Aldate's, Oxford. Mrs. Christopher had laboured with her husband in the Lord's work for over fifty-eight years, winning the esteem of both Church people and Nonconformists.

REV. PRINCIPAL MACVICAR (MONTREAL).

The death of Principal Macvicar, of the Presbyterian College, Montreal, removes one of the most notable figures in the religious life of Canada. He received his theological training in Knox College, and, his fine presence being matched by more than average thinking and preaching ability, his services as a pastor were in great request. In 1860 he succeeded Dr. Donald Fraser, well known in London, at Coté Street Church, Montreal. In 1868 the General Assembly appointed him, at the early age of 37, to be Principal of the Montreal Presbyterian College, which adjoins and is affiliated with McGill University. Here for the rest of his life he took the chief share in educating men for the ministry of his Church. He manifested much energy in combating Romish error, and organised important evangelistic work among French-speaking Romanists of the Dominion.

For Crippled and Afflicted Children.

IT is gratifying to note that a little more than £2,000 has been promised towards the £5,000 required for the new branch of the Children's Home, Bonner Road, N.E., which will be devoted to the care of crippled and afflicted children.

An earnest appeal has been issued to secure the balance as a New Year's offering, that this most important and urgent need may be supplied. Of the amount already promised, nearly all the larger sums are dependent upon the speedy raising of the total sum required, £5,000, and it is to be hoped that none of these gifts will be lost through lack of adequate response.

The lack of provision for crippled and afflicted little ones is well known. The few special institutions are more than full, and there is a great army of sorely-tried children, many of whom could, with care and proper training, regain to a very large extent health and vigour, and be able to take a place in the active work of the world. The principal, Rev. A. E. Gregory, will be glad to hear from friends interested in this much-needed extension.

A Recruit for Zanzibar.

IT will interest the many friends of the Strangers' Rest at Zanzibar to know that another missionary has gone forth to strengthen the hands of Mr. and Mrs. Knapman, who have laboured so faithfully in that far-off sphere. Zanzibar is the gate of Africa, and has a future before it in relation to all work among the natives of the interior. The constant presence of British and foreign war vessels and trading ships in the roadstead give plenty of work for the friends at the Strangers' Rest, and God has opened the door by which Mr. and Mrs. Knapman have preached the Gospel to the Swahili and the Arabs Mr John Heddle, who is on his way to help them, is a hardy Scot from the far Orkneys, who, for many years, has had a distinct call to the mission field. He will be a devout and capable coadjutor in the development of the work. Friends are asked to pray for him, that he may be mightily used of God. Any information about the Mission will be given by the hon sec, Mr. Theo. Isaac, 44, Coolhurst Road, Crouch End, N.

Betting in the Channel Islands.—The States of Guernsey have not only recognised the grave and growing evils of the betting mania, but have promptly and drastically dealt with them in a Bill which has just been sent for the sanction of the King. The measure is a most comprehensive one, and forbids the keeping of betting places, betting advertisements, sending of circulars to minors, declares null and void all betting transactions, and empowers the police to enter any suspected establishment. This is as it should be; but then the Guernsey States are not hampered by Royal Commissions, and they take a keen, practical interest in matters affecting the well-being of the people.

An Evangelist's Inquiry.

What is the New Testament equivalent or explanation of the Psalmist's prayer, "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow"? (Psa. li. 7.) How do these words enforce upon our hearers the faith which justifies and saves? What did Ananias mean when he said to Saul of Tarsus, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord"? (Acts xxii. 16). EVANGELIST.

DEAR SIR, Replying to "Evangelist," I believe, in the mind of the Spirit of God (who is really the writer of the Psalms—see Mark xii. 36), the hyssop looks back to Exodus xii. 22, 23 in its association with the blood of the paschal lamb, and forward to John xix. 28-30, when the great Antitype was offered, and His blood shed for that perfect purging away of sins which He there, "through the eternal Spirit," accomplished, when He "offered Himself without spot to God."—Yours faithfully, E. H. WYNNE.

Wanlip Road, Syston.

Sir,—In reply to the question of "Evangelist" in your issue of December 18, p. 13, I would suggest that the New Testament equivalent of David's prayer, "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow," is found in Heb. x. 1-24; especially 22—"Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." With a bunch of hyssop dipped in the blood of the paschal lamb, that typically atoning blood was sprinkled, and all other such sprinklings were applied in the same way (Heb. ix. 19; xii. 24). The shed blood in Scripture is always atoning blood. God manifested in flesh poured out His soul unto death, and put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself.

The sprinkling of the blood by the Israelites (Exodus xii) was the application of that typically atoning blood to those within the house, and was the expression of the obedience of faith in each member of the congregation of Israel who sprinkled it, and of those who took shelter within the sprinkled house.

"Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." "Your bodies washed with pure water." This is the inward cleansing of the thoughts and intents of the heart. "Sanctify them through Thy truth; Thy Word is truth." "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to Thy Word."

In 1 John i. 7 we have the cleansing from all sin, by the continuous sprinkling of the atoning blood, from the iniquity of our holy things, while walking in the light. In 1 John i. 9 the cleansing is from all unrighteousness of the willing and obedient soul who proves that every confession of sin becomes, by the grace of God, a means of victory over sin, and deliverance from its power.

When Ananias said to Saul, "Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins," his words must be explained by Rom. vi. Baptism in water is the outward and visible sign of the inward and spiritual grace wrought by the Holy Spirit, when He baptizes us into the death of Christ and raises us up into newness of life. "We were all baptized by one Spirit into one body, and were all made to drink of one Spirit." It is first the washing of regeneration, and then the continual renewing of the Holy Ghost.

The evangelist must be most careful not to lead a sinner to suppose that he can be washed into a saint. A sinner can only become a saint by union with Christ in death and resurrection. We are witnesses of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. The preaching of the evangelist must always be of "Jesus and the Resurrection"—"Jesus the Christ and Him crucified"; that is, Jesus the risen and glorified Christ, who was crucified. We are reconciled to God by the death of His Son, and being reconciled we are saved in His risen life. To expound this Gospel of the glory of the blessed God in all its bearings and details is the function of the PASTOR AND TEACHER.

[We have to thank several friends who have kindly contributed answers to "Evangelist," some at greater length. We think the sense of all of them is contained in the above, except where they go beyond the immediate questions proposed by "Evangelist."—ED.]

The Open-Air Mission Jubilee.—Half a century of eventful service throughout the land has led the committee of the Open-Air Mission to address a circular to its supporters, seeking their co-operation in using the approaching jubilee as the occasion of a wide extension of the Society's work. It is felt that ministers can do much to make the Mission and its operations more widely known, and it is suggested that a Sunday service, preferably, but not necessarily, in June next should be set apart for this purpose, and a jubilee sermon preached on behalf of the Society Where desirable, a suitable preacher for the occasion will be provided by the Mission in the case of non-episcopal churches. The secretary is Mr. Frank Cockrem, 11, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

Letter to the Editor.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT AND OF UNITED PRAYER.

DEAR SIR,—A few words of explanation will, I believe, make us of one mind on this great and solemn subject. The difference in view, I can see, has arisen because we have not been looking at the same question, but at two different questions.

The Epistles of the New Testament were written to Christians, upon whom had been poured out the Holy Spirit. The object of the united prayer is that the Spirit may be poured out upon that world, which, as yet, is not convinced of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. The object is to seek the salvation of the perishing millions after the example left us by the Apostles, who gave themselves to prayer (Greek, the prayer—doubtless indicating that prayer which preceded and issued in the salvation of so many souls at Pentecost), and the ministry of the word (Acts vi. 4).

It should also be understood that the Epistles were not written subsequent to the Acts so as to mark a period succeeding to the Acts. With the exception of John's Epistle and that of Jude, the period of the Epistles was nearly identical with the period of the Acts.

The great difference is not in time, but in the fact that the Acts mainly records the evangelization measures of the Apostles, which we desire to follow; while the Epistles were to their converts, and yet have indications of the continuity of Holy Spirit's work from Jesus on the throne. See Phil. i. 19, 2 Cor. iv. 16, and the admonition, "Be filled with the Spirit," is literally "Be getting filled," that is continually.—Yours faithfully, WM. WOODS SMYTH.

North London Poor.

FOUNDED as long ago as 1825, the Holloway Ragged Schools and Mission stand in the centre of one of the many dark spots of North London. Devout men and women have been exercised to do what they can for the thousands living in Hornsey Road and neighbourhood untouched by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. With untiring energy the workers have thrown themselves into their often difficult tasks, and some reward for their labours has appeared in the reformed lives of young and old, for whom there seemed but little hope.

Through the Sunday afternoon school and evening service every effort is made to secure the young for God, before they join the great army of Sabbath-breakers. At these gatherings hundreds of children and young people congregate, many of them of the roughest type. The week-night gatherings are of a varied character, and include girls' sewing classes and clubs, boys' rally and gymnasium. A feature of the effort encouraged by many of the teachers is letter writing, and is proving helpful to the children. Many of them, in times of difficulty or trouble, greatly value a letter from teacher, and don't easily forget a birthday message sent through the post. The annual report gives some figures of an encouraging nature. Copies may be had from the hon. secretary, Mr. J. R. Edwards, 163, Offord Road, N.

Love's Banner.

"His banner over me was love."

WHEN our life's sky is blue above,
Life's flowers freshly pearled with dew,
Oh, then we think the words are true—
Christ's banner over us is love!

When deeper joys our pulses move,
The sweets of life are rich and new;
Far vistas opening to our view—
His banner over us is love!

When doubts and fears are interwove,
Our heart grieves o'er a shattered dream,
Then faith will find it hard to deem
His floating banner still is love?

In wise design, our faith to prove,
Through howling wind, and raging storm
Appears our great Deliverer's form—
The banner in His hand is love.

When on His breast, like wearied dove,
Our spirits find eternal rest,
We own His discipline was best—
His banner over us was love. M. GRAY.

Mr. Charles Cook is leaving in a week or two for a journey through Continental prisons, and others in North Africa, with the object of carrying the Scriptures to those who have never seen them, and of feeding those who are in need where the Governments make no provision for their starving prisoners. He will be thankful for help to supply Bibles and bread. His address is 11, Walpole Gardens, Chiswick, W.

Oxford Notes.

THE East Oxford Pleasant Sunday Afternoon commences its New Year's work with a membership of 300.

The St. Aldate's Sunday Afternoon Men's Service celebrated its fourth anniversary by a tea and public meeting. The special speaker was Rev. F. S. Webster, of All Souls, Langham Place, W. The income for the year exceeded £70, leaving a balance and reserve fund of nearly £50. The fifth year opens with much promise of blessing.

Rev. Christopher Potter, pastor of the Commercial Road Baptist Chapel, has celebrated his first anniversary The membership of this historic chapel has increased during the year, also the Sunday School and other organizations.

Irish Notes.

IN the Cooke Centenary Church, Belfast, Dr. Samuel R. McCausland has been ordained by the Presbytery of Belfast as a medical missionary in the New Hebrides in connection with the Victorian Presbyterian Church.

The first general meeting of the Irish Society for the due observance of the Lord's Day has been held in Nenagh, under the presidency of the Bishop of Killaloe, who, in his opening address, pointed out how much could be done by the female portion of the community towards forwarding the object the Society has in view. In Londonderry a monster petition is being got up for presentation to the Postmaster-General, against the Sunday delivery of letters in that city.

At a recent meeting of the Sacred Heart Home, Drumcondra, Dublin, Archbishop Walsh made a fierce attack on some Protestant ladies, and declared he could only describe as "the devil's work, the infamous and debasing traffic in souls carried on by certain gentlemen and ladies." He added also, that Roman Catholic parents who gave their children to be brought up in Protestant Homes were guilty of a sin deserving the everlasting punishment of hell. This was pretty strong language, but it begged the whole question, and assumed that his Church was infallibly right. He did not seem to suspect that Protestants could believe that the Roman Catholic Church held erroneous doctrines; but according to his view, it is a sin for Protestants to attempt mission work, but not for Roman Catholics.

Scottish Notes.

AN excellent New Year's address was given on January 5 to the British Women's Temperance Association, Elgin, N.B., by Rev. Walter Hankinson. He depicted powerfully the desolated homes, the crowded prisons and lunatic asylums, and the long categories of crime caused by drink, showing that on account of this evil Britain cannot sufficiently rise to her responsibility of empire. He also emphasized the evil done by grocers' licences, which are the fruitful cause of increased drunkenness among women.

The National Bible Society of Scotland reports a record circulation in 1902, no fewer than 1,118,730 Scriptures having been issued by its agents at home and abroad, or 426,127 more than in the previous year. In China alone upwards of half a million copies were circulated.

At Dunoon College there are twenty-five students and four tutors, besides the principal. Nearly all the students are Baptists, although the college is not sectarian. Three men have just gone as missionaries to Canada (west), Zanzibar, and Shetland; and others to the Highlands of Scotland. Very fine buildings and grounds are now used for the College, and most of the students are residents. Emphasis is laid in knowledge of God's Word through Greek and Hebrew. The other subjects taught are Church history, philosophy, and English literature. There is no entrance examination; character, consecration, and real ability being the points aimed at. The number of former students who are now members and missionaries, and the work they are doing, is the evidence of the worth of the training. The Principal is: Rev. Duncan Macgregor, Kirn, Argyleshire.

A Timely Ministry.—In previous years many friends have found pleasure in sending to Miss Alice Puckle, The Hollands, Langton, Tunbridge Wells, old calendars or large Christmas cards to be utilized for making writing cases for soldiers in our hospitals. Miss Puckle is again hoping to continue this simple ministry. She writes: "We sent off some thousands of these cases last year, each one filled with writing paper, envelopes, an indelible pencil, and a tract or booklet. The soldiers in hospital greatly appreciate these little gifts."

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Mr. Henry Thorne at Openshaw.

A TEN-DAYS' mission has been held by Mr. Henry Thorne, under the auspices of the P.S.A. which meets in the Lees Street Congregational Church, Openshaw. The audiences were not as large as they would have been had a less busy season been chosen, but in other respects the mission was most satisfactory and successful. Mr. Thorne s clear Scriptural teaching, illustrated by a great fund of personal experience and incident, was much appreciated. C.

Mr. W. H. Jude at Belfast.

The evening spent in Grosvenor Hall, Belfast, on Saturday, January 3, when the service was conducted by Mr. W. H. Jude, the well-known organist, composer, and preacher musician, was most interesting and attractive. The Belfast News Letter said:—"Every available part of the spacious building was densely packed with an attentive and appreciative audience, who were most favourably impressed with the delightful discourse and the beautiful hymns which he sang to his own accompaniment. Mr. W. H. Jude's reputation as an organist, composer, and preacher-musician has extended far and wide. His services are truly inspirational services of Gospel song, and all those who have been privileged to hear him have had their hearts cheered and their aspirations stirred for a better and nobler life.

"A magnificent congregation gathered on Sunday afternoon, when Mr. Jude took entire charge. The service was a service of gladness and song, the audience soon catching the choruses which Mr. Jude rendered, and singing them out of pure gladness of heart. Towards the close of the service a short helpful address was given on the subject of David serving his generation, the organist pleading for consecration to humanity as the result of consecration to God. At the evening service the hall and annexe were taxed to their utmost capacity, while many expectant were reluctantly turned away through lack of room. On Monday evening, January 5, Mr. Jude's subject was 'My Life-Story,' which was given before a huge audience."

Mrs. Baeyertz at Wrexham.

We have just concluded a most encouraging sixteen-days' mission, held by Mrs. Baeyertz. For some time previous prayerful expectation had stirred us up to hope and believe for great things, and we were not disappointed.

Mrs. Baeyertz came full of faith and prayer, and from the start to the finish of the mission God gave blessing in abundance. The large hall, seating some 1,200, was well filled with eager souls anxious to hear the Gospel. During the mission 230 inquirers were led to Christ, and we have every reason to believe—having since visited them—that they really found peace in believing. Scores of Christians were also blessed, and day after day God spoke to His people through His Word, convicting, encouraging, and leading on step by step, and we feel sure very many will live the life of victory, prayer, and fellowship, set so plainly before them. Floods of light have been poured upon the Bible, and to many it has become a new book.

Such a blessing, such a revival, has not been known in this town for very many years, and the result has been to stir us all up to greater zeal and love for precious souls.

My own personal testimony to the mission is, that though for twenty years I have been engaged in the Master's vineyard, I have never yet seen a mission like this. Surely God does speak through His servant. I shall ever be grateful for my own soul's sake to Mrs. Baeyertz, and hundreds of others will praise God also for sending her into our midst. The secret of this successful work for the Master is prayer. That God may richly bless Mrs. Baeyertz in all her work is the united prayer of hundreds of souls here in Wrexham. J. C. Ray, Pastor,
Presbyterian Forward Movement.

New South Wales Tent Missions.

Rev. D. O'Donnell thus describes his missions in New South Wales:—"Our tent was pitched in Gladstone Park, Balmain, the chief industrial suburb of Sydney. We had a good start, with crowds of people, and the manifest presence of God, and the work of soul-saving started right away. Matters went on splendidly for the first week, and we were anticipating a day of glorious blessing on the second Sunday. Early in the morning a tremendous gale arose, and the tent was so saturated and flooded out that no meeting could be held on that day. Next day busy hands helped to clear up and put things shipshape. At night we had our usual crowd, and many souls were won for the Lord. Then came the end. After a splendid service on the Tuesday night, the wind rose to a gale, and our tabernacle, in which we had seen the glory of the Lord manifested for eight months, was, as the day dawned, reduced to a wreck. For the next two days we held our meetings in the Balmain Mission Hall and the Congregational and Presbyterian churches. In spite of all these drawbacks, God mightily blessed His Word to saint and sinner. In all, about 325 professed conversion. Our next sphere of action was St. Mary's. Unfavourable weather greeted us at the start, but God was with us throughout. The people came in from all the regions round about, and at every service sinners surrendered to God, the total number being 257. Returning to the city, we commenced operations at Waterloo. God was with us. The congregation ranged from 500 to 1,000, and every night the inquiry room was filled with seekers."

Mr. William Forbes has been holding tea-meetings for pantomime women in various cities and towns in Yorkshire. In Scarborough the whole of the travelling company, male and female, came to the meeting.

There has been a gracious work of God at Over Alderley (Macclesfield Circuit, New Connexion), where Mr. William Bilton has conducted a three weeks' mission with encouraging results. Many have found the Saviour, and Christians in the district have been strengthened. The work of Mr. Bilton, who has worked very earnestly in visiting homes and distributing Gospel literature, has been a blessing to many, and the singing and addresses were greatly appreciated by large congregations. A. H.

An eight days' evangelistic mission, concluding last Sunday, has been conducted by Mr. Frank Holmes (Evangelization Society) at Pirbright Chapel, near Woking. Notwithstanding the rough weather, there was a very fair attendance each evening. The Gospel messages delivered were full of power, and of earnest warning to the undecided. Many were convicted of sin, and God's people were encouraged. The interest shown by the young people was very marked, and several of them professed conversion. All were sorry when the last meeting was over. It was indeed a time of heart-searching. R. Fifield.

Poplar Rescue Work.

I FEEL the last years of my long life have been singularly happy ones, for many a bright, happy young wife and mother, many a valued servant, many a child restored to her parents, bless the little home which sheltered them in their dire distress. Do you remember I told you about a girl, two years ago, who was brought to us through a copy of The Christian with a notice of our work in it? She has done well. She came to see us a Sunday or two ago, looking so bright, and the happy smile which she gave when she said she had "chosen to live for Jesus," was one I cannot forget.

On a recent Monday, after I had told our good nurse that although there would be a vacancy, I would not take any more in while we were so poor, there came a knock to the door, and a hard-working woman came with a sweet-looking girl in most distressful circumstances. The story of the girl's cruel betrayal was indeed sad, I may say terrible. She is the second daughter of a large family who live on £1 a-week earned by the father, who is broken-hearted at his child's downfall. Could I say I would not help her whom God had thus sent to me? "Feed my lambs" was our Lord's command, and I could not deny admission to this poor, bruised lamb. I took her in, feeling that the same Heavenly Father who sent her would send the help we need to carry on this labour of mercy, for it is His.

My time on earth must be short; others will carry on the work I begun. My daughter has promised me to, as she has ever done, and I shall go to rest contentedly, feeling all will be well. Anna Wilkes.

Helping India's Blind.—From time to time reference has been made to the efforts to teach the blind in the East to read. The British and Foreign Bible Society have had the Braille system, devised by Rev. J. Knowles (London Missionary Society) and Mr. L. Garthwaite, B.A. (Madras Civil Service), embodied in a pamphlet entitled "Oriental Braille." This has been sent out to workers for the blind, and to Oriental scholars, to elicit suggestions. The council of the British and Foreign Blind Association (206, Great Portland Street, W.) have carefully considered the scheme, and approve it so far as it concerns the Indian languages, while the Christian Literature Society for India have sanctioned the publication of religious books for the blind upon the same system. It is hoped that, in addition to the Scriptures and religious publications, other works may be prepared for the use of the blind in the East by voluntary helpers writing out books.

Vice-Patrons—
REAR-ADMIRAL H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G., the FOUR ARCHBISHOPS and the BISHOPS, &c.

INCREASED FUNDS are urgently NEEDED to meet the expenditure involved by the recent extensions of the operations of the Missions to Seamen to several ports abroad, where formerly the crews of British ships were destitute of religious ministrations.

In consequence of these valuable extensions in ports abroad it has become unhappily necessary to reduce the staff working afloat in home ports. Further funds are required to fill up the vacancies thus caused.

The Society maintains 194 Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in 74 seaports in every part of the world.

Sixty-nine Mission Steamers, Sailing Vessels and Boats, and 105 Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in daily use, winter and summer.

Expenditure in 1901, £40,770 10s. 6d.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Offertories, Drawing-Room Meeting Collections, &c., should be sent to Commander W. DAWSON, R.N.

COUNTRY TOWNS MISSION.

(Working in our Towns and Villages.)

This old-established Society is helping to supply the need for faithful Gospel teaching and effort which exists in many of our towns and villages, particularly the latter.

The work is undenominational in character, and consists of daily visitation in the homes. The Scriptures are read with prayer; and the way of Salvation put individually and simply before those visited. There are forty-eight Missionaries labouring in connection with the Society. Contributions to maintain and extend this much-needed effort will be most thankfully received by the Secretary, Mr. G. H. MAWER, 12, Serjeants' Inn, Fleet Street, E.C., or they may be sent to the Treasurer, HARRY C. NISBET, Esq., 35, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C., or Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

1,620 of the Lord's aged poor, of both sexes, and members of the various branches of the Church of Christ, are now on the books, and upwards of £12,000 per annum are distributed amongst them in pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas. To meet this amount the ordinary income is inadequate. The pensioners live in all parts of the country, and most of them are upwards of seventy years of age.

In the four homes 180 of the pensioners have peaceful and happy abodes. A visit to these buildings is invited.

FRESH CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE SOCIETY AND ASYLUMS ARE EARNESTLY SOLICITED.

BLIND AND DESTITUTE

Strictly describes the condition of the great majority of the applicants who seek the aid of the

NATIONAL BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY.

Sorrowful Cases of deep distress are constantly coming before our notice, and without the generous aid of the Lord's stewards it would be impossible to help them.

A special feature of this Society is that we have NO VOTING, NO OFFICE EXPENSES, and, when funds permit, no tedious waiting.

Contributions will be very thankfully received and acknowledged by the Rev. J. PULLEIN-THOMPSON, Hon. Sec., The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or may be forwarded to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE BALAGHAT MISSION, INDIA.

The blessing of God is with this work among the aboriginal Gonds, and important developments are being inaugurated. Two new Missionaries are going out, a fourth Mission Station is to be opened in the midst of a large, unevangelized heathen population, and several grown-up famine Orphans are being started in life as Christian farmers and artizans.

£500 IS NEEDED

for these purposes.

Contributions should be sent to Miss FIELD, 10, Lancaster Road, West Norwood, or to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

WANTED.

NEW YEAR'S GIFTS

NEW YEAR'S WORK

OF THE

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

It is the strongest testimony to the enormous value of this Mission that it possesses the hearty and entire support of our judges, magistrates, and other official gentlemen brought into touch with the problems of poverty and crime.

About Books.

There are many former readers of the popular little magazine who will welcome a Chatterbox Library of stories. The first—Fred Malcolm and His Friends—maintains the old traditions, by its bright and varied pictures of youthful life. (1s. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.).

For those who are not able to obtain the larger missionary biographies, a number of interesting peeps behind the scenes are given in Missionary Nuggets, by Dora M. Pike (1s. 6d. Church of England Zenana Missionary Society). The extracts are well chosen, and likely to create a thirst for more of the same.

The Art of Being Happy is worth learning; and in a neat little book, so entitled, Rev. Charles A. Hall gives us some pertinent and valuable counsels. (Paisley: Alex. Gardner.) Homely truths are suggested along various lines of being, doing, and suffering; and the Golden Rule is the subject of timely reflections.

"The Christian Irishman." The annual volume has many good things, including quite a number of papers on the "Los von Rom" movement in various Continental lands. For twenty years this excellent monthly has testified for Christ to Irish Roman Catholics. (1s. 1d. post free. Office: 16, Upper Sackville Street, Dublin.)

Under the title of Faith, Fellowship, and Fealty, C. B. McAfee has written a series of helpful chapters on becoming a Christian, a Church member, and a Church helper. His pages should prove of real service to many, as they set forth in plain and telling language the fundamental principles of the Christian life. (9d. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.)

We extend a cordial welcome to a volume by Mrs. M. Baxter, dealing with Ezekiel, Son of Man; His Life and Ministry. In treatment the book is fresh, unconventional, and spiritual; and it deserves careful reading by students of prophecy, of whatever school. It is a most instructive handbook, published at an exceptionally low price. (1s. Christian Herald Office.)

The eighth edition of Mr. Henry Miller's Guide to Ecclesiastical Law (1s. net. Church Assocn., 13, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.) brings up to date a useful and reliable manual for those who are striving to prevent the introduction of mischievous practices and teaching into the Church of England. This company includes many besides the churchwardens to whom it is primarily addressed.

Though but a small work, The Education of Christ, by Professor W. M. Ramsay, of Aberdeen, is one that will abundantly repay careful reading. It is hardly a treatise; rather it is the contribution of a keen observer and vigorous thinker on a subject of sublime interest. Some great words and scenes of Gospel story stand forth in a new light when considered by the help of Professor Ramsay's pages. (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The first issue of The South African Year Book (10s. 6d. net. 64, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.) will be warmly welcomed by those who are specially interested in affairs at the Cape. Besides touching current life at many points, and entering into details in a surprisingly full manner, much historical and scientific information is given; and the value of the volume is further enhanced by the inclusion of numerous maps and illustrations.

Hebrew Ideals, from the Story of the Patriarchs, is a study of Old Testament faith and hope, by Rev. James Strachan, M.A., St. Fergus. It is one of the very useful series of Handbooks for Bible Classes and Private Students. (2s. T. & T. Clark.) The volume will introduce many to a new field of thought regarding the Old Testament; for the author gives the point of stories, and gathers the merest indications of belief and action in a way that is helpful in a high degree.

Readers of Ralph Connor's former books will be glad to renew their acquaintance with a number of old friends in Glengarry Days. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton). The author observes his neighbours with penetrating yet kindly eyes, for while he lays bare the secrets, he is better pleased to find good than evil. There are deep shadows in the story, but the light predominates, and conquers. Life in Western Canada is a hard, stern struggle with the forces of nature, but, as Ralph Connor shows, heroes are often developed in this way. Above all he lifts the veil to show how one young life was extricated from the net of the fowler. Those who read this book will watch for more from the same pen, for they will be conscious that it has done them good.

Two readable booklets in a form of New Year addresses to the young are THE GREAT CORONATION and THE LAMP IN THE ATTIC, both of them well illustrated. (1½d. each.) Two Gospel addresses, by the late Bishop J. C. Ryle, are—BEWARE! and HOW DO YOU DO? (1d. each). They are pointed and direct in appeal. (Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling.)

The Churches.

Church of England.

Sir W. Mackworth Young, K.C.S.I., late Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, has been appointed chairman of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society.

The Vicar of Yarmouth (Rev. the Earl of Chichester) has made an energetic protest against the playing of golf on Sunday on the links of Yarmouth. He asks whether it is right that the men who serve the players should be encouraged to stay away from church and chapel or Bible-class on Sunday.

The Church Army receives male inebriates on a farm situated near Holmwood, Surrey. In a report recently issued as a Blue Book, the Home Office inspector writes:—"The general arrangements are very satisfactory. The reformatory is conducted strictly on farm lines; the superintendent is a practical farmer who works; his helpers work also in different capacities; the inmates are farm labourers. The farm of about 160 acres, with its varied crops, has been worked entirely by the labour of inebriates. It is an ideal scheme, but at the same time is eminently practical in its utilization of waste material."

The Church Association has elected Mr. J. Denman as the evangelist for the mission at Dorchester, Oxon., and he will commence to hold Church services in the new mission room on Sunday next. Mr. Denman holds a good record. For fifteen years he was one of the preachers of the Evangelization Society, which is, in itself, a strong recommendation for ability, and he has also been ten years a Scripture Reader at Woking. The week-day class for religious instruction and the Sunday-school have been re-opened after the Christmas holidays by Miss Crockett. The Association Council look forward to much blessing from this evangelistic mission.

Congregational.

At Queen's Park Church, N.W., on a recent Sunday evening fifty-six new members were received into fellowship by Dr. Forster. The membership roll is now larger than it has ever been in the history of the church, numbering 900.

Rev. W. Greig, of Thames Ditton, owing to failing health, will retire from the pastorate in June, when he will have completed nine years' service. During his ministry a new church has been built, the old one renovated and adapted to Sunday-school purposes.

After a pastorate extending over eleven years at the Countess of Huntingdon's chapel, Bath, Mr. Hamilton announced last Sunday to the congregation his decision to resign. He felt God was calling him to a wider sphere of work in connection with Conferences for the deepening of the spiritual life both at home and on the Continent, and his health did not permit him engaging in this work while at the same time having the responsibilities of a church. It is now twenty-three years since Mr. Hamilton went to Bath. He commenced his ministry at Hay Hill Chapel, and after some years of effective service, resigned, and went as a missionary to Tangier in connection with the North Africa Mission; but after two years, owing to the ill-health of his children, he had to return home, after which he undertook the charge at Bath which he has now resigned.

Baptist.

The total of efforts made during 1902 to reduce the debt on New Barnet Church (Rev. Dr. Newton Marshall) resulted in £920 being raised.

The report on the allocation of the Twentieth Century Fund will be presented at the Union Assembly on Thursday, April 30. At the same session Rev. J. G. Greenhough will open a discussion on "The Condition of Our Ministry."

Among those who are to take part in the opening ceremony of the new Church House on April 28, are Dr. McLaren, Rev. J. R. Wood, Dr. John Brown (late of Bedford), Rev. C. H. Kelly, and Dr. Monro Gibson.

Mr. Peter Sutherland, of Peterhead, is probably the oldest member of a Baptist Church. He recently celebrated his hundredth birthday. He has been a member of the church since its formation in 1859. Except that he is a little deaf, he is hale and hearty, and continues his work in the saw mills, where he has been employed for sixty-nine years.

Methodist.

Tickets for the Aquarium mass meeting, on February 2, will be issued free to applicants by post, from the Twentieth Century Fund office (31, City Road, E.C.) until January 26.

The Bristol Methodist Council has under consideration a scheme to raise a capital sum of £10,000 to aid by means of grants and loans the erection of new churches in localities where they are needed.

A new Primitive Methodist Church has been opened in Chandos Street, Hereford. For many years the friends in this growing neighbourhood have laboured under the disadvantage of a small and stuffy chapel, and now the hopes of many years have been realised. The new building, seating over 300 people, is a handsome structure, on a splendid site. The members and friends gathered in large numbers at the opening service.

Mr. Roger Haydock, of Blackburn, who recently celebrated his ninety-third birthday, is said to be the oldest colporteur in England, having for nearly half a century sustained that position in connection with the Bible Society. He is the senior local preacher on the plan of the Blackburn First Circuit of the Primitive Methodist Connexion. For forty-five years, in broad Lancashire dialect, he has spoken at the annual meeting of the Bible Society in Blackburn. His highest takings in any one year reached £350, and more than 100,000 copies of the Scriptures have been sold by him.

For some months past the trustees of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference office property in City road have been in negotiation with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who are the ground landlords, for an extension of lease. The one in City Road has forty years to run, that in Castle Street sixty years. Both leases are now surrendered, and a new lease for a term of 999 years has been granted on the following terms—the payment of a sum of £4,000 as premium and an annual ground rent of £830. It is hoped that at some time arrangements may be come to by which this property will become absolutely the property of the Conference.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Meharry, of Crouch Hill, in a recent interview, said the longer he lives the more he is convinced of the need of house-to-house visitation. "It is, in my judgment," he added, "impossible to make full proof of one's ministry in the pulpit only. The way to the heart of the people lies open through the home, and I lament the decay, from any cause, of pastoral visitation."

At Bath, services have been for sometime past conducted in the Assembly Rooms, and the congregation is now facing the question of securing a permanent place of worship. At a recent service Mr. Philip, chairman of the local Building Committee, said the motto of the congregation must be "forward." Brock Street Hall had been secured at a cost of £750, and the committee proposed to spend about £1,800, so that the total expenditure would come to between £2,500 and £3,000. The plans have been approved by the Synod's Home Mission Committee.

Society of Friends.

The statistical returns of the Society of Friends of the past year show that the home and colonial membership is 21,629, a net gain of 163. There are 285 foreign mission stations in charge of 165 Friend missionaries, and a native membership of 4,647. There are 110 mission schools with 10,733 natives in attendance.

The "unloading of the Christmas Boat," at Miss Child's Welcome Home for Sailors, Canning Town, E. (in other words, the distribution of gifts to sailors), was a pleasing and encouraging occasion. Miss Child writes:—"The men were delighted with their gifts, and begged me to thank most heartily the various ladies and gentlemen who had contributed towards the cargo. We had very good meetings. Mrs. Watts spoke tenderly and appropriately. Colonel Macgregor gave an interesting and timely address, followed by Mr. Wm. Luff, Captain Wrake, Mr. Pilifant, and many others. Overflow meetings were held in several rooms, and towards the close of the evening testimonies were given by members of the 'Christian Lifeboat Crew.' Some of the many sailors who were present decided for Christ. The following Tuesday was the muster of the "Crew," and the text given for the month was, 'Jesus Himself drew near and went with them' (Luke xxiv. 15)."

Fallen Asleep.

At Wood Green, London, Rev. HENRY R. BURTON, Wesleyan Methodist, in the seventy-second year of his age and the forty-eighth of his ministry. He excelled in pastoral visitation, and in faithful and successful oversight of the young. The last two years were spent at Wood Green, and, although too feeble to preach, he was indefatigable in pastoral work, and won esteem and affection by his gentleness, loving words, and unaffected piety.—At Newmarket, Ontario, on December 14, in her seventieth year, HANNAH JANE R. CODY, wife of Benjamin Cody. At her hospitable home English Friends whose duty took them to Canada were welcomed under her roof. She was Clerk of Canada Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, and Assistant-Clerk of the Yearly Meeting itself.—At Belford, on the 6th inst., Mrs. THOMAS DUNN, dearly-loved mother of Mr. W. D. Dunn, evangelist.

Personalia.

The latest news of Mr. Philip HURDITCH is of a reassuring character. He makes gradual progress towards recovery, although still very weak.

Mr. H. STAFFORD SMITH hopes to sail for New York by the Saxonia on the 24th inst. on his second Gospel tour in the United States. He expects to return in May to resume Gospel Tent work.

Rev. Dr. COLIN VALENTINE, who is at present at San Remo, has been suffering much from influenza and pneumonia, but by the blessing of God is now over the acute stage of the attack. He asks to be remembered by friends in prayer.

Christmas at the Strangers' Rest.—The festivities on Christmas Day and Boxing Day brought a large number of men under the sound of the Gospel at 163, Ratcliffe Highway. Two full meetings were held during the afternoon, and for two hours the men listened with unusual interest to short addresses, Gospel solos, themselves taking up the choruses with great heartiness. At 5.30 a general move was made into the tea rooms, and it was a sight to be remembered to see 200 men of many tongues quickly clearing the well-laden tables. On Boxing Day the annual beef and plum pudding supper was given. The Gospel was preached afternoon and evening, and several professed conversion. Miss Cleaver, the resident deaconess, or Dr. A. M. Neatby, the secretary, will be glad to send copies of the report to any friends.

The Secret of Great Preachers. The passing of several notable preachers and leaders from our midst, has awakened much thought and comment amongst American ministers. Several articles have been devoted to the question of the succession to the mighty men of the past. They, as we, do not yet see upon the horizon the true successors of Spurgeon, Liddon, Parker, and others. At the same time, there is an optimistic tone as to the future that we admire and would seek to spread. Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, in a letter to a contemporary touching this topic, says :—

The only misgiving I have is not as to the decline of genius and native ability in the pulpits of England and America, but as to the possibility of great preachers developing from what seems to be the trend of recent theological thought. . . . A minister of Christ who adopts a sceptical tone in his preaching, and who constantly reminds his people that this and that must be rejected from the Bible, who minimises the supernatural until it is lost for ever in the natural . . . . may become a fine essayist, but I doubt whether it is possible for him to become a great preacher. A great preacher must have a great theme.

Them That Are Without. One of the great tests of the reality of our Christianity is the strength of our desire for the highest weal of "them that are without." Persons who believe there is no line of demarcation between the Church and the world, can never, in the nature of the case, be very anxious for the conversion of people who remain "outside." The reason why many professors of religion decry all efforts to evangelize the world, or, at least, abstain from active interest in such efforts, is, most probably, that they themselves have never been truly converted. It is noticeable, however, in Holy Scripture, that much stress is laid upon the manner in which true Christians should act towards "them that are without"—not so much in the way of direct preaching as in the way of ordinary conduct in life. Circumspect conduct—"walking in wisdom"—these are the things emphasized. These exhortations coincide with the aspirations of the Psalter, where the psalmist prays for wisdom because of "those that observe" him. "Them that are without" are influenced greatly by the daily conduct of professing Christians, and we all have need to pray for wisdom so that our daily lives may become positive forces in winning men for God.

An Optimistic View. In his New Year Letter to his Diocese, the Bishop of London gives as a cause of anxiety "the appearance in a very few churches of what I am afraid I must call Roman doctrine and practice." In illustration, he refers to the use by "a certain parish priest" of the Rosary in the pulpit, the use of the service of Benediction with the Reserved Sacrament, the cult of the Sacred Heart, the Invocation of Saints, and devotion to the Blessed Virgin Mary, as part of the public service.

The secretary of the Church Association, who takes a much more serious view, has recently stated that Reservation of the Sacrament has been sanctioned in a number of London churches, and that the practice is followed in forty-two; 350 clergy in the diocese adopt the Ritualistic position, 231 mix water with the communion wine, forty-five use incense, 142 wear Romish vestments, and 267 burn candles at daylight services.

Hurry and Worry. Rev. Dr. W. L. Watkinson dealing with the subject of Resting in the Lord, and pointing out how life withers under abnormal stimulation, expresses a thought that may be especially useful at the outset of another year of work. He says :—

The leisure hours in which we merely look, and watch, and muse, and pray, are not the least profitable of the day. The seventh day consecrated to holy rest fits us the more fully for strenuous life. And the habit of trust, patience, and hope, will indirectly bring more health, wealth, and happiness than the nervousness which forbids sleep, and poisons success.

In this matter of hurry and worry, as in all and everything else, it is well to follow the Master's divine example. (Mark vi. 31.)

Divine Truth and Human Theory. In a recent paper on "The Bible and Science," Rev. J. Urquhart states that the further Kepler, Newton, Sir John Herschel, Humphry Davy, Faraday, Dana, Agassiz, Sir J. W. Dawson, and others advanced in their knowledge of the works of Him whom they felt to be the Bible's only possible Author, their reverence and gratitude for Holy Writ grew deeper. It is certainly true, as Sir Humphry Davy once said, that "it is the pert, superficial thinker who is generally strongest in every kind of unbelief." "Science is dogged by mistake as a man by his shadow," says Mr. Urquhart.

The Motive in Missions. A most illuminating paper upon the dominant motive in foreign missions has recently been contributed by that grand old veteran, Dr. Griffith John. The great value of subsidiary motives is fully recognized—such, for example, as the utility of missions for the advancement of secular knowledge, commerce, and civilization. But these are not the true motive, although so often urged. Dr. John deals delicately yet thoroughly with the motive founded upon pity for the moral condition of the heathen, and shows how this in itself cannot bear the stress of the whole problem :—

It is not strong enough to carry us on to the end and to victory. The moral condition of the heathen often creates strong aversion and deep loathing. In itself, and alone, it tends to repel rather than attract. In my own experience I have often found it necessary to try and think of the Chinese as being better than they are, in order to work for them as I would and as I ought.

Misplaced Faith— A great preacher has a celebrated sermon on "Man's greatness seen in the ruins he makes," in which he draws the conclusion that even the vices of human nature show the grand lines of his original nature. A story in The Spectator recently illustrated this. A "prophet" suddenly arose in North Borneo recently among a degraded savage tribe, and promised that on those who made an absolute surrender of themselves to his power ability to fly would be conferred. When all conditions had been fulfilled, and the candidates had given up all they possessed to the prophet, they climbed the highest tree they could find, and threw themselves into the air in the confident belief that they would be able to fly to heaven. When they fell to the ground and broke their necks, it was enlarged upon as a proof of lack of devoutness, and others were still induced to make the fatal experiment. Only when the North Borneo Company imprisoned this savage Mahdi was the mischief stopped.

—And its Antidote. We deplore such capacity for credulity, even on the part of a savage race. But what a wonderful proof does the melancholy story afford of the possibilities of the highest form of faith on the part of the lowest tribes of the earth! It is just this faculty of unquestioning obedience that, when enlisted in the service of the Highest, opens out on Heaven itself, and it is just the feature which is most conspicuously absent in many who profess to follow Christ Himself. The remedy for misplaced faith is not to pour contempt on a faculty that can thus lead men to destruction; but to find its true object, and then follow unquestionably its call. When men are drawn away from false religions to the true religion, the misused and degraded spiritual elements in their nature manifest their Divine origin and end. Let but their hearts be drawn within the influence of the Cross, and to savage as well as civilized men "all things are possible."

The Musket in the Schoolroom. If it were necessary (and unhappily it is not) to go beyond the boundaries of our own Empire for evidence of the excess of militarism, Germany to-day furnishes a striking illustration. With a partially paralysed trade, a huge army, and a rapidly growing fleet, that country opens the year with a deficit of over eleven millions, which sum has to be borrowed and added to the immense national debt, the cause being the maintenance of a military and naval force upon almost a war footing in times of peace. So, too, in this country the expenditure upon the army and navy increases daily, with the consequent taxation; yet, in deference to the unhealthy war spirit, Lord Charles Beresford and others have threatened a campaign in favour of compulsory military training in the schools. Surely the war spirit has cost us too much during the recent miserable years for attempts to develop it in the infant mind to be encouraged. Every Christian man and woman ought to protest against such flagrant abuse of the educational system.

Public Efficiency. The sixteen articles contributed to the Manchester Dispatch by Mr. Arnold White have just been collected (under the title FOR EFFICIENCY) into a sixpenny volume, which ought to be seriously studied by every man who cares for his country. There is no need to subscribe to every opinion expressed in its pages, but the hard indisputable facts adduced as to the frequent mismanagement of public affairs must be faced. After all, the final government of any free country rests with the people themselves, and it is to their interest that the men who represent them shall be thoroughly efficient for all public service.

The Real Need. Until the public conscience is awakened, there will be no improvement, and the only way to arouse that conscience is to make men face the hard facts. If only one half of what Mr. White states is true the country is being seriously hoodwinked over some vital matters of home and foreign life. He pleads in the interests of European peace, and in those of home progress, for immediate reform. The ground he takes is humane and not political, and for this reason his chapters demand careful study. But above all else, the great lack in holders of public office is the recognition of God.

The Colour Question. The better class of Americans, together with all friends of freedom, must feel distressed at the tone adopted by the American Press towards President Roosevelt's policy of dealing amicably with the Negro question. What becomes of the boasted American liberty, if a section of the community is to be ostracised simply because its members are black-skinned? Such ostracism is entirely contrary to the spirit of the Gospel. Even the New York Herald tells the President that the time has not yet come when black and white can live together as equals, and that he will do well to accept the prejudice of white against black. Had such a policy been pursued throughout history, the chief part of the civilized world to-day would have been barbarian, to the greater dishonour of God, the Creator of all.

The Los von Rom Movement. Though the revolt from Romanism in Austria is not proceeding so rapidly as at first, there are encouraging signs that it is becoming more a spiritual and less a political movement as time goes on. We hear of many who left Rome for secular reasons becoming devout Evangelical Christians. The converts also show a praiseworthy readiness to build churches and establish new centres of religious life. The number of new mission stations, both in Bohemia and Styria, largely increased during 1902, and twenty-five new Sunday-schools have been started. There is far surer prospects of a permanent spiritual movement in these facts than if thousands of secularly-minded Catholics practically abjured the Christian faith in the act of giving up their allegiance to the Pope.

The Money Measure. An astute financier, speaking at a meeting of his company a short time ago, declared there were no principles that would not yield to money. In his world probably that statement is true; but he made a grievous error in measuring all men by himself and his coterie. There is a great world of men and women, God be thanked, where the money measure is never applied, and where principles are not available in the open market for a monetary equivalent. But "smart society" admits itself ruled by it, and that is why it remains outside the Kingdom of God. Our Lord placed avarice in the same list as murder and other deadly sins, and the reason of it is not difficult to discover, for avarice is allied to murder. Mr. Jowett, in a recent sermon on this subject, said:—

There are refined methods of murder. We can murder men by false witness. One business man can murder another. That is the spirit of murder which declares to itself, "No matter who goes down, I must be up."

"He that hateth (or faileth to love) his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him" (1 John iii. 15).

A Nazarite.—The Nazarene.

"No razor shall come on his head . . . Drink no wine nor strong drink, neither eat any unclean thing, for the child shall be a Nazarite to God from the womb to the day of his death." "All that I commanded her let her observe."—The Angel of the Lord to Manoah and his wife.

"He shall be called a Nazarene." "Mary kept all these things and pondered them in her heart."—The Evangelists Matthew and Luke.

The New is in the Old concealed.
The Old is by the New revealed.

ARE there any scenes in history more pitiful than these?

Scene I.—Samson, with his Nazarite locks still unshorn, fooled, and fooling his life away in Delilah's lap; while she, possessed already of the secret of his strength, toys with his consecrated hair, and lulls him to sleep, that she may shave his head, make him weak like another man, and deliver him to the Philistine lords who lie in wait in the chamber to afflict him.

Scene II.—Samson, with his eyes put out, bound with fetters of brass, grinding in the prison; and anon called to make sport in the house of Dagon, who has delivered their enemy, who slew many of them, into the Philistines' hands.

Yes, there are scenes in modern religious history more pitiful than these. Let us be permitted to personify the Gospel as Samson, and its enemies as Delilah.

Scene I.—The Gospel (as misrepresented by pharisees and sadducees, priests and scribes), fooled, and fooling away its life in the lap of a fleshly appetite, a heady and high-handed criticism, a demonish spiritism, or a domineering Romanism—yielding up the secret of its power into those seductive and injurious hands; lulled to sleep, as upon a Delilah's knees, that she may destroy its Nazariteship, and deliver it, bound and blinded, into a castle of indolence, a critics' school, a demons' den, or a Romish convent prison.

For the truth of the Gospel is being perverted in all those ways.

Scene II.—The Gospel of the glory of the blessed God, as misrepresented by those, its professed advocates or open foes, with its eyes put out, grinding out Philistine delusions and sophistries, superstitions and oppressions; anon called to amuse the people in the house of Dagon, their mitre-headed god, who delivered into their hands their enemy, the Gospel of God, which had slain many of them in the crucifixion of Christ, buried them together with Him, raised them up together, and made them sit together in the heavenlies in Christ Jesus—that having died to sin, they might walk in newness of life. That is the Divine way of destroying enemies—crucifying the old man and raising out of death in trespasses and sins a new creature in Christ Jesus.

But Samson's hair began to grow again and his Nazarite strength to return. He prayed and the Lord God heard him. They set him between the pillars on which the house of Dagon stood. The lad who led him suffered him, at his request, to feel the pillars; and standing there he spread forth his hands (see Isa. xxv. 11; John xxi. 18, 19), clasped the pillars, bowed himself with might, and the house of their god fell upon the Philistines and their lords, and about three thousand men and women (comp. Acts xi. 41), who beheld while Samson made sport. So the dead whom he slew in his death were more than they whom he slew in his life.

The Philistine Dagon-worshippers little thought that they were feebly rehearsing the transcendent drama of the universe and of eternity—God's one strange act—when His Holy Nazarene tasted death for every one; when the revolving fiery sword, that kept the way of the tree of life, was sheathed in the heart of Jehovah's Fellow, quenched in the blood of the Son of His love.

When Herod and Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, were gathered together, and placed Jesus in their midst to make them sport, when they mocked and derided Him, crowned Him with thorns, clothed Him with a purple robe, and gave Him a reed for a sceptre, the Philistine rehearsal was fulfilled in a tragedy which consummated the condemnation of the world and of its prince. Little did the prince and the princes of this world imagine that when they were nailing the mighty Saviour to the cross, offering a Great Sacrifice to their Dagon—self—setting Him between the pillars on which their house stood, and when, in the likeness of sinful flesh, the Son of God bowed Himself with might—humbled himself and became obedient to death, even the death of the cross—He was destroying him that had the power of death, and delivering them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. "Whom none of the princes of this world knew, for had they known, they would not have crucified the Lord of the Glory."

Yet He Himself had exclaimed, when the seventy had returned with joy: "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from Heaven." And when His hour drew nigh, He said, "Now is the judgment of this world; now shall the prince of this world be cast out."

Thank God the Gospel, in answer to much and long-continued praying in the Holy Ghost, is asserting its power. God is answering the prayer of His Beloved, "Glorify Thy Son that Thy Son also may glorify Thee." "Father, glorify Thy Name." And the answer is coming down from heaven: "I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again." We are living in the days when Jerusalem is trodden down of the Gentiles. But in His Temple everything saith, "Glory!"

Yes: The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. For Jesus, the Name which is above every name, is Himself the Gospel—"Christ, the Power of God and the Wisdom of God." "Who of God is made unto us wisdom: righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." "For Him who knew so sin he hath made to be sin for us; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him."

Not only by perverters of the Gospel, but by faithful friends, its presentation has been weak, and there has, of recent years, been far more sense of weakness than of power even in those who have proclaimed it. Let us leave off charging, even in thought, this weakness upon God. The Psalmist did so, but that was his infirmity; let us, like him, encourage ourselves in God. He said: "Is His mercy clean gone for over? Doth His promise fail for evermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? Hath He in anger shut up His tender mercies? [Selah—a solemn pause.] And I said, This is my infirmity. I will remember the years of the Right Hand of the Most High." M.

Practical Papers.

A "MAN OF THE WORLD."

A TYPICAL "man of the world" was Jehoram, King of Israel.* He fairly represents a sinner of the better class, who, evincing great respect for religion, utterly repudiates its claims.

The son of Ahab, he despised his father's obscene idolatry and unblushing heathenism; and affected the greater refinement of Jeroboam's religion, which, professing to worship God through the imagery of the golden calves, was sheer idolatry all the same,

The record in 2 Kings iii. shows that he was willing to pay tribute to the respectable religion of his day, so long as it did not interfere with his worldly aims; he would even commandeer Elisha and Jehoshaphat, and the true worship that they set forth, in order that his purposes might be furthered by their recognition.

We are surrounded by such men to-day. Respectable sinners, we call them. They observe certain outward forms—they would lose caste, or their business would suffer, if they did not! To them religion is a stepping-stone to the heights of their ambition, or a catspaw to secure their own unworthy ends. They profess "good intentions," and pave their way to hell therewith. The greed of gold, the coveting of position at whatever cost—these are their golden calves. "Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God," they evade the precepts of Christ which speak of taking up the cross and the denial of self; their "god is their belly;" they "mind earthly things" (Phil. iii. 19).

It is a striking figure, that used by our Lord of "denying self." To deny an accusation or an acquaintance is to say "No" to it. Thus Jesus says, "If any man will come after (or follow) Me, let him say No to his Self"—that ungodward element so constantly asserted within. To all that Self suggests—pleasure, gain, position apart from God—say No!

But all this is foreign to the man of the world. Self is his god, and the unholy offspring it produces; in conjunction with Self the worship of Jehovah is impossible. He may claim the godly for his acquaintance; he may seek to entangle them in his designs; but with God against him, he shall not prosper. Like Jehoram, he goes forth one day to vanquish his king of Moab, to add to his possessions, to circumvent the obstacles that bar his way to greater wealth—with what result? The Nemesis of God inevitably dogs his steps; and though backed by an army pledged to aid his cause, the water fails, the springs of his strength dry up, and he is like to perish on the plain.

Then comes the thought of God—the appeal to Elisha. But with the froward God will show Himself froward (Psa. xviii. 26). "He will not be slack to him that hateth Him; He will repay him to his face" (Deut. vii. 10). So Elisha replies, "What have I to do with thee? Get thee to the prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother"—for the Baal-spirit, gross, heathenish, unclean, was in the king's soul, though he had condemned its external form. There was no contrition in his appeal; he wanted not grace, only water; not the pardon of his sin, but mere deliverance from its penalty; his mind was disturbed by his dread of thirst, but his heart sought no relief at the Fountain-head. Instead, he sought to hold God responsible for the dilemma in which he had placed himself (vv. 10, 13).

Equally solemn lessons surround Jehoram's subsequent career. Having, in the mercy of God, and for Jehoshaphat's sake,† been saved from death, he still pursued his evil way, in spite of further opportunities for repentance, for God desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he shall turn from his wickedness and live.

> The king of Syria warred against Israel, and took counsel with his servants, saying, "In such and such a place shall be my camp." And the man of God sent unto the king of Israel, saying, "Beware that thou pass not such a place; for thither the Syrians are come down." And the king of Israel sent to the place which the man of God told him of, and saved himself there, not once nor twice (2 Kings vi. 8-10).

Thus it is that by suffering or by mercy the Divine heart goes forth in compassion to save the sinner from the error of his way. Oh, the pity of it, that the inborn Self so oft prevails! Allowed to rule, it bears its hideous progeny of evil deeds; until the man who at first sinned, "but not like his father" (ch. ii. 2), who repudiated the grosser sins and observed with decorum the demands of respectability, exclaimed under the stress of retributive famine: "God do so, and more also to me, if the head of Elisha shall stand on him this day" (vi. 31)! When he began to reign, how he would have scorned so base a suggestion! But the golden calf—whatever it be—at the beginning, is murder at the end—such is the degeneration of a selfish life.

What is the underlying cause of many a murder? Someone stands in the way of ambition's goal. It may be the ambition of unlawful gain or of unlawful marriage; in either case it has brought many a high-born, well-bred, respectable sinner to the hangman's rope. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." "Out of the heart proceed (1) evil thoughts, (2) murders."

Worldly-minded men, Jehoram-like, paid the tribute of respect to the Son of God

> —when they saw the miracles which He did. But Jesus did not commit Himself unto them, because He knew all men, and needed not that any should testify of man, for He knew what was in man (John ii. 23-25).

Divine insight indeed! For the admiration of one day held the germs of murder, which another day resulted in the tragedy of Calvary. Evil within will find its outlet, and in ways the sinner wots not of.

But Jehoram was obdurate. Deliverance, warning, famine, wounds (viii. 28, 29) or health restored (ix. 15)—none of these things moved him, nor turned his heart to seek the Lord; until at last the final sentence was pronounced, and Jehu arose as his executioner. Then the craven heart cried, "Peace!" But "Jehu drew a bow with his full strength, and smote Jehoram between his arms; and the arrow went out at his heart" (ix. 24).

Reader, though your head be full of plans, and your hands be strong of action, there is a vulnerable place between your arms! If your heart is at fault, give up your plans; throw up your hands; wait not till the chariot of wrath hems in your way. While the harbinger of justice is yet a great way off, send an ambassage, and desire conditions of peace (Luke xiv. 32). You may have it, if you seek it in time—but on conditions. Listen:—

> Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts. And let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. (Isa. lv. 6-8).

These are the terms of salvation for all, for high-born or lowly, for respectable or outcast, for peasant or king, for you or me. G.

* Called also Joram, but not to be confused with another Jehoram, or Joram, a later King of Judah.

† The King of Judah's share in this incident will be considered in another paper.

The "Larger Hope."

By Rev. ARCHIBALD E. GLOVER, M.A., China Inland Mission.

THERE are two recorded instances in the Gospels, and only two, where Christ definitely deals with the character of the devil. In the one (John viii., 44), He reveals him as "a murderer from the beginning," and "a liar." In the other (Matt. xvi. 23) He declares him to be in fullest sympathy* with "the things that be of men," as distinct from "the things that be of God."

It is exceedingly instructive to notice the circumstances, in either case, under which Christ makes the revelation. In the one (John viii. 44) it is in connection with the attitude taken up by the Jews, who were rejecting His witness, toward His solemn utterance: "If ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins." In the other (Matt. xvi. 23), it is in connection with the attitude taken up by a devoted follower and confessor of His Name, toward the solemn announcement of the shameful death He was about to die. So that it is as possible for the natural man in the believing disciple to think thoughts congenial to the heart of Satan as it is in the unbelieving rejector. Oh, what need to cry in a broken spirit before God: "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any way of wickedness in me; and lead me in the way everlasting."

Now, in both instances, the heart of man is found giving expression to a lie; and in both the lie is of precisely the same nature. The burden of it is none other than that of the first great lie in Eden—"Thou shalt not surely die." To the unwelcome word, "Ye shall die in your sins" (John viii. 21, 24) the Jews reply, "'We be Abraham's seed'—how can we? Nay, more, "We have one Father, even God'—we shall not surely die." And when Christ speaks of His own approaching death, the heart of His loving disciple utters its lie also—"This surely shall not be unto Thee"—Thou shalt not surely die.

Christ immediately connects the lie with Satan himself. Little as they might suspect it, he was "the father of it"; and the thought which they had voiced had its origin in the heart of the wicked one.

The two cases together, then, give us Satan's characteristic lie in both its aspects. In the one, he seeks to turn the thought of man away from the truth of God's determined purpose in the eternal and final judgment of the impenitent wicked; in the other, from that of His determined purpose in the eternal and final salvation of the believer through the blood of His Son's cross. As the murderer of souls, he sought to thrust his lie upon Christ, that he might hinder, if it were possible, the salvation of any soul through the atoning work of the only Mediator between God and men. Again as the murderer of souls, he insinuates his lie into the heart of "them that obey unrighteousness," that he may blind their eyes, cozen them into a false security, and involve them only the more certainly in the final damnation which is to be his own doom.

He who has unmasked to us both the lie and the liar is God, in the person of His own Son. "God is love"; and the love of God nowhere shines out more conspicuously than in its exposure of the great liar's lie. What was the nature of that lie? On the one hand, to insinuate to Christ, through the devotion of a loving disciple, that the love of the Father could never suffer the Son of His love to die in shame and degradation; and, on the other, to persuade men that no matter what manner of spirit they are of, they "have one Father, even God," and that the God of love will never allow them to pass to an irretrievable doom. To this Christ has but one reply—Such a view of the love of God is from the heart of Satan. It is peculiarly his lie; and the object in it is the murder of the soul.

* The word chosen by Christ (phroncis) denotes the exercise of the affections, and is so translated in Col. iii. 2, "Set your affection on things above."

The Climax of Sin.

By Mr. HENRY VARLEY.

"Of sin, because they believe not on Me."

THESE memorable words of the Lord Jesus Christ claim our deepest thought. Here we are taught what sin is. True, sin is seen in the sinner. He is content to be such; sin pleases him well. The pleasures of sin are called, "seeing and enjoying life—" yielding to the corrupt desires of the flesh and of the mind. Habit, which is the production of action, warps the judgment, weakens the will, defiles and sears the conscience. Experience discloses this terrible truth. Our Lord emphasizes it in these weighty words.

The opposition to, and rejection of, the Son of God—that is sin. This is not ordinary evil energy; this is the capital and crowning sin—the climax of guiltiness. The man who rejects Christ, the unbeliever, attempts to vindicate his position as a sinner. Practically, he says to God, in will and action, "I neither desire salvation from sin, nor the grace and love revealed in the person of Christ. His sacrifice for human guilt and sin is nothing to me. I resent and reject His work on my behalf. My preference and choice are for the following of what is called sin. My choice is not for God and His Christ, but for self, and the free course which I choose to determine."

This is sin. Light has come, but darkness is chosen. Love has come from God in overflowing fulness, but the Bearer of grace and truth is rejected. God manifested in flesh has come, fair, beautiful, and holy; but man, deformed, corrupt, and sinful, is distinctly preferred instead. Christ rejected is the savour of death unto death. To protest against and to prevent the sinner reaching this terrible goal, the Holy Ghost has been sent from heaven. He has come, the Divine Witness possessed of supreme authority.

SPIRITUAL DEATH.

He alone has power to convict men of sin, because they believe not concerning Christ. No ministry of man, however powerful in argument, cogent in reasoning, or gifted with intellectual charms, can produce conviction of sin. By reason of sin, men are dead in trespasses and sins. This leads to perdition, eternal death. Now it is written: "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; they are foolishness to him, neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned." Quickening from this state of sin and death is of the Holy Ghost. The cry, "What must I do to be saved?" was a product of the breath of the Spirit moving amid the dry bones of the Philippian jailer's condition of spiritual death. The production of self-hatred in man is not of the spirit of man. "Wherefore I abhor myself!" was Job's utterance when he had seen God and been taught of Him.

Take into account the dignity of Christ's character, and the realities which belong to being born from above, and His work must pass into the hands of the Holy Ghost. How all-important for us in ministering for Christ, that we have this fellowship with the Holy Ghost for effective service! The persistent habit of praying, reading, singing, and preaching in unison with Him is essential. This condition of mind being ours, the result in ministry will be "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." Associated with the Holy Ghost in service, how wonderful, how encouraging! Here we will be saved from doing work which, apparently successful here, will be rejected in "that day."

Notice the word again, "Of sin, because they believe not on Me." Sin here is not diversity of evil energy of a moral sort in the sinner. Sin is here focussed and concentrated in the capital offence and crime of the rejection of Christ Jesus. Persistent unbelief concerning Christ culminates in the sin against the Holy Ghost, for which there is no forgiveness. As science teaches a tendency to final permanence, so the revelation of God teaches a final permanence in the sin of unbelief. Nothing can be more clearly stated: "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." This is the highest and most awful sentence that the Supreme Judge can pass upon the human soul. In this sentence, God's enduring wrath is seen the enormity of the sin of unbelief.

Without irreverence, I may add, that if this sin of the rejection of Christ is not the very climax of human guilt, God cannot, as the just and righteous Judge, pass this sentence. As John iii. 36 shows that the highest good, even eternal life and glory, is God's free gift to the believer, even so the most terrible punishment that can be known, viz., deprivation of eternal life and subjection to eternal wrath, is the desert and reward which awaits the unbeliever. Let no man make light of this awful sin, or seek to shield himself behind the oft-repeated excuse, "I cannot force myself to believe." God's command to all men is to believe and receive the Gospel, the glad tidings of great joy that the Saviour has come.

I know it is a common thought in many minds that God will forgive the sinner, and, therefore, faith in Christ and His atoning sacrifice is not imperative. Bear with me, in suggesting a startling question, "Has God the right to forgive?" He is the Moral Governor of the Universe, and the supreme and righteous Judge. How can He say to the sinner, "I forgive you, I have nothing against you"? There is not a judge in England set to administer the law that either dare or could thus speak of the man proved guilty. How can God clear the guilty? The answer is, By virtue of Christ's expiatory and atoning sacrifice, God has the right to say, "I am just, and the Justifier of him that believeth in Jesus." Apart from the Gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation, the universe is dumb in regard to the putting away of sin and God's ability to forgive.

"Uncertain Harvest."

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

THEY had met for an evening's chat evidently, and a study it was to watch their faces—four typical country farmers, on whose countenances anxiety and hope were written.

"Everything seems against us this year. From start to close it's been disappointing," said one with a desponding air.

"With all you say, I reckon it'll turn in pretty fair; we just want patience and fine weather. Look over there," pointing to a sweep of fields; "you can't say that's all labour in vain."

Grave silence followed, and the gentle breeze rustled the standing corn.

Then out spoke a burly man in louder tones: "I tell you, we haven't learnt the year's lessons yet; and don't you remember it says in the old Book, 'I am the Lord thy God'? And it's a sorry thing for a country when we forget God, and haven't He been reproving us all along? And now we're complaining about harvest outlooks; and I agree with you, in many parts it looks uncertain."

They turned to walk away, and the fourth left a message of cheer ere he said farewell and crossed the road: "He's no hard Task-Master, mates; 'tis we who are in the wrong. Give God the glory, and let's be faithful to our trust."

"UNCERTAIN HARVEST."

Christians, why the doubtful look over the harvest fields? What if chill winds of criticism and clouds of difficulty and depression have swept over thy tear-sown ground? God is no hard Task-Master. Give Him the glory, and work on faithfully.

"Uncertain harvest!" As the preacher watched his people after months of earnest toil, he sighed; no sign of growing enthusiasm, no eager pressing into the Kingdom, no earnest desire to uphold his hands in the work of the Lord; and his heart grew sad within him.

"Uncertain harvest!" The teacher saw the boys give way to foolish habits, and become irregular and indifferent. The lessons had been well prepared; but all the toil seemed to be in vain, and disappointment took the place of joy.

"Uncertain harvest!" The visitor had taken up the cares and sorrows of many homes, and sought to lighten burdens and lead souls to Christ. Yet, alas, sin and discontent prevailed!

Workers, look out over the great field of the world, far beyond that tiny sphere you occupy, and know 'twas for this Christ lived and died and rose triumphant over all. Gaze on Him from whom alone you can receive the grace and strength to work; claim His all-sufficient power; then go unflinchingly and without a doubt or fear, patiently and joyously to reap no uncertain harvest, but golden sheaves when the Lord of Harvest comes.

Obedience and faith shall bring the sunshine from above. Do well thy part; no labour is in vain for Him.

See the whitening harvest languish,
Waiting for the labourers' toil,
Was it vain thy Lord's deep anguish?
Shall the strong retain the spoil?

Let us take heart again, and, refreshed by His love and strengthened by His might, return to our glad service, rejoicing in that we may be "labourers together with God."

"Give Up Your Sin!"

THIS was the advice given to a London loafer the other day by Mr. Charles Alexander, the singing evangelist. I was accompanying him down Paternoster Row, when a dejected, disconsolate fellow came up and said: "Excuse me, sir, but I must ask you for help—I have nothing in the world."

"Do you drink?" said the evangelist.

"I sometimes take a glass of beer," replied the pale-faced man.

"I thought so." Looking at the hands of the suppliant, Mr. Alexander added: "And you smoke cigarettes; both these things bring a man down."

Changing the note, the evangelist said: "I want you to know that God loves you. Mind, I am not talking down to you; I love your soul. The only reason I am occupying the position I am, and have a little money in my pocket to give you, is found in the fact that I have given my heart to God."

"Why does not God make me love Him?" queried the man, indignantly, and with ill-feeling. "I am without food, and have not a shirt to my back."

"My friend, you must first give up your sin. If you do not, you will doubtless remain as you are. On the other hand, I am able to tell you that in all my travels I never saw a live Christian without a shirt to his back. God clothes and feeds those who leave their sin, and surrender themselves to His will."

Handing the man a piece of money, more substantial than the usual charity gift, Mr. Alexander said: "Now remember that the man who gives you this money is a Christian, who tells you that God loves you. Do not spend it in drink, but heed my words."

The man was broken down, and tears of gratitude flowed as he hastened to apologise for the rudeness and impertinence which he had shown earlier in the conversation.

Continuing, the evangelist pressed home his message: "Christ says: 'Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out.' You may fool men, but you cannot deceive God. He says He will be found of them that seek Him with all their hearts. But nothing short of a full surrender will avail, and you must not expect God to take care of you—to feed and clothe you—until you leave your sin. As a Christian, you will find the promises and power of God working for your good."

The man asked for direction as to further instruction and help, and was commended to the care of well-known workers.

It struck me, as a listener, that the evangelist's method was wise and his words timely; and having regard to the effect of the same, I have jotted down the points for the guidance and encouragement of other workers in the Master's vineyard. F. S. T.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, January 25. 1 Chron. xxvii.

THE arrangements made by David with reference to the army, seem to have been intended to admit of the soldiers following, for eleven months in the year, their agricultural and pastoral pursuits, giving one month to military duty about the person of the king. The list of officers and grandees, with which the remainder of the chapter is filled, shows the splendour and highly-organized character of his kingdom. To what a height of glory God had raised the simple shepherd-boy; and it would seem that his one aim and purpose were to get his kingdom into such a condition that nothing might interfere with Solomon's prosecution of the great work of Temple-building. For this he was raised up.

We cannot but trace the hand of God in David's life. "He raised up David," "David served the counsel of God" (Acts xiii. 22, 36, R.V.). God raiseth up one, and putteth down another. "He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth" (Dan. iv. 35, R.V.).

Every man has, in his own generation, to serve the counsel of God, whether to collect materials or build the temple, whether to order an army or legislate for a nation, whether to be leader or led, teacher or taught; and we are wisest when we do not aim incessantly at our own promotion, but are content to serve the Divine counsel as each day reveals it. He raised up David—there is God's sovereignty; the King served God's counsel—there is man's responsibility.

MONDAY, January 26. 1 Chron. xxviii.

This is the closing scene of David's life. It has been compared to a sunset amid the flaming glories of the western sky. In a great assembly of princes and warriors he addressed a solemn exhortation to Solomon, and delivered him instructions for the great work which lay immediately before him. A Roman once said, "An emperor should die standing," and it almost seems as if that ideal were realized here. David must have rallied greatly after the scene depicted in 1 Kings i. (see 1 Chron. xxix. 22).

How constantly David went back to the bedrock of the Divine choice! How often the Psalms ring out the words of verse 4! Yes, believer, whether for our own stability and growth in grace or for the work we have to do in the world, there is nothing so helpful as to base one's activities on the eternal choice. Note that we ought "to seek out" all the commandments of the Lord (8). It should be the endeavour of all who love Christ to seek out and do all His commandments. The Lord is seeking for such. He looks into all hearts with the desire of finding those who are perfect towards Him, and have a willing mind (9).

David delivered to Solomon the plans which he seems to have received by special inspiration (12, 19). It is almost as though the plans of the Temple had been written with the very finger of God. We, too, are called to construct the Temple of God in our small measure. Each must lay some courses of gold, silver, and precious stones, or else of wood, hay, stubble, which must be burned. But the one thing for all of us is to realize what God intends, and to do it with the best material which we can lay our hands to. Make all things in your life according to God's pattern.

TUESDAY, January 27. 1 Chron. xxix.

David's devotion to the Lord's House was very beautiful. He had set his affection on it. He refused merely to incite others to generosity by his words, but gave in a princely fashion of his own property (xxi. 24). As the figures stand, David contributed of his own resources eighteen million pounds, and his rulers thirty-one millions; but these amounts are so immense that it is supposed that some error has crept into the copies from the original text. He was surely justified in saying that he had prepared with all his might (2).

When a man is known to be sincere, he has great power in his appeals to others; thus, as soon as David said, "Who then is prepared to consecrate himself unto the Lord?" his challenge elicited a large and immediate response. Notice, also, the great joy which this act of generosity elicited. The princes rejoiced, because it is always more blessed to give than to receive; David rejoiced, because of the good fruit which graced the mellow autumn of his reign (9); and the people rejoiced, as they realized all the goodness which God had prepared for Israel amongst all the peoples of the earth. We, Christians, would be happier and healthier if we gave more freely of our substance to the cause of God.

David put the matter justly and rightly when he said that all power, glory, majesty, and victory belong to God; and that men, during the brief space of their earthly life, are only His stewards. If, instead of looking at honour, position, and wealth as the result of our own labours, we were to receive them as the direct gifts of God, entrusted to us that we may administer them for the benefit of man, how much friction, anxiety, and jealousy would be taken out of our lives! What peace would ensue! What praise to Him who gave, who gives, and who will give! Let us ponder verses 11, 12, 13. They contain the secret of a blessed life.

WEDNESDAY, January 28. 2 Chron. i.

What wonderful contrasts had been witnessed by the time-worn curtains of the old Tabernacle. They had seen the desert march, and the conquest of Canaan; they were now to take part in the solemn service with which Solomon celebrated his accession. At that brazen altar sacrifices had been offered year by year that could not make the offerers clean, and now once more a thousand sacrifices told God how eagerly men would be wholly devoted and dedicated to His service. All was insufficient, and needing to be repeated. The contrast with our dispensation is manifest. We have no need to offer our burnt-offerings, since He has died who said, "I come to do Thy will, O My God." All that we need to do is to kneel before our Father, saying, "This is my Ideal, this is what I want to be; I fail, but I present the perfected sacrifice of my Lord to Thee, and humbly ask that I may be conformed by the same Spirit to something of His likeness."

Solomon appropriated God's promises to David. He said, "Let them be established." It is thus that God desires us all to act, putting our hands on what He has offered, and saying, Let this be so for me and in my life.

Does not this night-scene in the life of the young king anticipate our Lord's words, that to those who seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, all other things will be added? He asked for wisdom, which, as we learn from the Book of Proverbs, was a moral quality, and was equivalent to a noble and holy nature, and immediately wealth, riches, and honour fell into his lap. Let us remember to put first things first.

THURSDAY, January 29. 2 Chron. ii.

Solomon made it clear that the House, which he was about to build, was not intended to contain the God of Israel, seeing that the Heaven of Heavens was insufficient for that; but only for purposes of worship. The sense of the greatness of God has always followed the dissemination of true religion. Even Hiram acknowledged it (12). Let us give more time and thought for the personal realisation of this great truth. If for five minutes each day we would concentrate our mind on this sublime theme, there would be more reverence in our prayers, and more faith in our outlook on the mysteries of life and death. We are all familiar with the story of the woman who refused to be credited with great faith, but said that she was a woman of little faith in a great God. They say that the great increase of shortsightedness arises from our modern habit of writing and reading so much, and of the town life, that has few distant views. So we are spiritually afflicted with a similar disease, because we fail to look to what is unseen and eternal (2 Cor. iv. 17; 2 Peter i. 9, R.V.).

How truly we may address Hiram's exclamation (11), to the Lord Jesus! Men think, with the demons of old, that Jesus is come only to torment, whereas He is the supreme gift of Divine Love. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son." The large-heartedness and broad-mindedness of Solomon were shown very remarkably in this correspondence with Hiram. There was no narrow prejudice in his heart, but a desire that those who were outside the Hebrew race should participate in the building of the Temple—thus foreshadowing Eph. ii. 19-21.

FRIDAY, January 30. 2 Chron. iii.

The name of Moriah carries us back to Abraham's supreme act of obedience (Gen. xxii. 2). Upon the sites of human sacrifice and suffering, subsequent generations raise their temples of worship. As the levelled summit of Moriah was too narrow for the extensive buildings and courts attached to the sacred edifice, it was increased by vast walls built up from the valley, and containing between themselves and the hill-slope, vaults and galleries which were of immense service for purposes of storage. The Mosque of Omar now stands on this historic site.

The measurements are given in cubits, "after the first measure," i.e., the old Mosaic standard. Some make the cubit 18in., others 21in. The Temple was twice as large as the Tabernacle, but the porch was an addition, rising to the height of 90 or 100ft. high in front of the Holy Place. Dr. Kitto renders verse 6: "He paved the House with precious and beautiful marble." There was an under pavement of marble, which was covered by planks of fir. The interior was lined with boards, richly decorated with carved work, clusters of foliage, and flowers—the pomegranate, lotus, and water lily being conspicuous. The gold with which the walls of the Holy of Holies were overlaid, amounted to £3,600,000. The pillars, meaning He shall Establish and In it is Strength, were 21ft. in circumference and 40ft. in height.

Such was the holy and beautiful house where the Hebrews worshipped God. It differed from all temples besides in there being no image of the Deity. The cherubim with their outspread wings were only emblems of His servants; but of God there was no emblem or symbol, save the mystic fire of the Shekinah. God is a Spirit. They who worship Him must do so in spirit. He seeketh such to worship Him.

SATURDAY, January 31. 2 Chron. iv.

This great brazen altar measured 35ft. square, and stood 17½ft. high. It is supposed that the whole weight of metal must have been about 200 tons. It represented the cross, on which the world's Redeemer put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself.

The molten sea was the great laver or bath in which the priests cleansed themselves. It may sometimes have been used as a fountain, and in that case held 1,000 baths of water more than on ordinary occasions (see 1 Kings vii. 26). It represented the need for daily cleansing, which is set forth in John xiii. We require to go again and again to Jesus, our Saviour, for cleansing from the sin of even our holy things. Blessed be His Name, "He is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John i. 9).

There were now ten candlesticks, as though Israel needed to be reminded that the surrounding darkness of the world called for more light than of old, and that they were in a more conspicuous position for giving it. As our opportunities increase, with the increase of years and influence, so should our illuminating power increase. Why is it that God's children do not continually grow in grace and strength? Is it not because they fail to keep pace with God's demands for an ever-deepening cleansing from all filthiness of flesh and spirit; and for an ever-extending area of consecration? It is sad when a servant of God does not become more and more emancipated from weights and sins. "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." F. B. M.

Islington Clerical Meeting.

THE annual reunion of Evangelical clergy, known as the Islington Clerical Meeting, took place on Tuesday of last week. Probably no part of the kingdom was unrepresented on this occasion, the attendance being particularly numerous. From the point of view of practical usefulness, the meeting reached a high standard, and the deliberations of the assembly were free from anything approaching party controversy. The general theme considered was "The Obligation of Spiritual Religion in regard to God's Word, Public Worship, Preaching, Private Life." For the seventeenth time, the Dean of Peterborough presided over the meeting, and in the course of his opening address dealt with, among other subjects, the promotion of the spirituality of the Living Church. The great snare of the day, he maintained, was worldliness—a yielding conformity to the spirit of the age; the fear of being accounted singular, and of being reproached for Christ's sake. The remedy is, beyond doubt, in the control of the Spirit of God. There can be no advance apart from Him.

Among those who took part in the proceedings were Revs. Dr. Wace, Preb. Webb-Peploe, A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, W. E. Burroughs, H. L. C. De Candole, and C. J. Procter. Following are excerpts from some of the addresses.

God's Word—Its Authority.

By Rev. Dr. WACE.

The question which has to be answered is whether the Scriptures are of this authoritative character, so that their statements and revelations impose themselves upon us as being the revelation and the Word of God, as superior to our judgments, and requiring our submission. Now, I would submit that the only effectual way of answering this question is to appeal to the one authority which is by common consent supreme—I mean the authority of our Lord Himself. Amidst all the confusions of thought and belief among us, there is, happily, one principle which may be still assumed as allowed by all who profess and call themselves Christians; namely, that the authority of our blessed Lord is Divine and beyond appeal. In the Christian world there is one voice which no one would presume to question, and that is the Voice of Christ. Difficult critical questions may be raised, here and there, respecting the text of the Gospels and the exact import of particular sayings of the Saviour; but if there be a point on which His voice and judgment have been clearly expressed, upon that point all Christians acknowledge that there is, or ought to be, an end of all strife. Amid the perplexities of our times it is impossible to appreciate too highly, or to insist too strongly upon, this precious truth—that there is one authority in the Christian world which no one dares question, and that whatever that authority has decided is decided for us absolutely.

God's Word—Its Application.

By Preb. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

No fewer than 1,904 times, in the books of the Old Testament Scriptures, is the assertion that God Himself has spoken to man. Either God did or He did not. If He did, then He demands the acceptance of His own declarations. And this applies to a vast portion of the Old Testament Scriptures. In many of those 1,904 passages we are brought face to face with this—that the obligation of spiritual religion, with the application of God's Holy Word thereto, implies that the soul of the man, and specially of the minister, is brought into direct contact with God's utterances; so that he has no liberty, no desire, no conception of his own proper duty, otherwise than this—that he should inquire, "What saith the Lord?" Then, when once that question has been decided, his imperative duty or privilege is an absolute adhesion, to the utmost of human possibility, to that which his Holy God and Father has announced to him.

And if this be applied to the many departments of life, then, what of time? what of talents? what of the treasures that God may entrust to us in the form of money, or property, or privilege, or opportunity with others? Shall it be said of the obligation of spiritual religion, that God's Holy Word demands of a man that he forsake all, that he take up the cross, and that he follow Jesus, and even, according to the Old Testament precept, that he love the Lord his God with all his heart, with all his mind, with all his soul, and with all his strength; the obligation, the binding power of the holy love which was exhibited on the Cross of Calvary to us, shutting us in and forcing us forward to give up all for the service of the Lord, knowing nothing in our own daily life, as in our public ministry, but Jesus Christ and Him crucified?

The first recorded thought expressed in language by the Saviour, at twelve years of age, was this: "Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business?" "How can I be sought for anywhere but in that?"

Public Worship—Its Claims.

By Rev. A. E. BARNES-LAWRENCE.

Sunday by Sunday we stand up in our pulpits, declare the central truths of our Evangel, and base an appeal upon them. That is all very well for the 250 inside; but to the 750 outside, or to many of them, it is these very truths that are in question. How can we expect them to give up their cycles, golf, and Sunday amusements to listen to a man—boxed up in a pulpit, fenced and hedged in by custom from all interruption—giving forth ex cathedrâ as absolute truths the very points on which they are unconvinced? That is quite a right method with the 250, but it will never bring in the 750. Admitting that a large percentage of these are simply "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God," yet the indifference of many is due to a slowly-growing genuine unbelief. Their faith is being undermined. The repeated attacks upon the credibility of the Old Testaments which we call Higher Criticism, but which is too often Rationalism under a new name; the sanction given to such attacks by dignitaries and divines within the Church itself, have had their inevitable effect. If in too many cases they have weakened the pulpit, they have in many more emptied the pew.

How are these attacks to be met? It is easy to say, "Preach the Gospel!" but the Spirit of God Himself cannot convert souls where there are empty benches. To my thinking, the pressing need of to-day is a re-statement of the Evidences of Christianity in the full light of modern scholarship. In addition to (not for one moment in place of) our Gospel message, we must find time to set forth the foundations of the faith—why we believe Christ is God; why we maintain the Virgin Birth; why we believe the resurrection, and the like. Men will come to hear, if these truths are not merely stated, but discussed—if, in other words, at the close of our apologetic full opportunity is given for question, for objection, for opinion. I can picture no nobler undertaking for a young clergyman than his self-equipment for such a task. Religion has nothing to fear, and everything to gain, from this method. It means trouble; but that is our business, when souls are at stake, and it is worth trouble.

Preaching—Its Subject.

By Rev. W. E. BURROUGHS.

I think we must confess, with something of pain and regret, that the pulpit is distinguished to-day for the motley variety of the topics which are handled in so-called "sermons"; and this, not to solve the problems of the day by the light of God's truth, not to sweeten and solace the difficulties and sorrows of the day by the strength and comfort of His revelation; but to let the congregation know that the preacher has read the latest articles in the current reviews, and has formed his own opinion on some moot questions of the hour. Now I have with some care gone through the passages in the New Testament in which we are told what should be our themes, and what actually were the subjects of preaching in the model-days of the Church's history.

I do not assert that my catalogue of the subjects of Apostolic preaching is exhaustive, but I do say that it is sufficient to startle some modern preachers who lay claim to an Apostolic Succession which in this matter is not so apparent as we should like it to be. I find such expressions as these: "They ceased not to preach Jesus Christ"; "This Jesus Whom I preach unto you"; "But we preach Christ crucified"; "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord"; "That I might preach Him among the heathen"; "Preach the Word"; "Preach the Gospel"; "There is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins"; "Preach the Kingdom of God"; "Preaching peace"; "Preaching the faith"; "That remission of sins should be preached"; "Preached through Jesus Christ the forgiveness of sins"; "He preached Jesus and the resurrection"; "Jesus Who was preached among you by us." Here is no tameness—no sameness. Here is scope for endless and attractive variety. But there is here surely a central theme—a foundation truth—round which and on which all other subjects of Apostolic preaching rested.

Private Life—The Family.

By REV. W. JEFFREY THOMPSON.

Family life is more than a world miniature; it illumines in a remarkable manner the relationship of God to the human race. From parental love new lives are brought into existence, to be the objects of tender solicitude and watchful care, to be trained in obedience and trust, with the ultimate purpose and hope that they may enter into conscious sympathy and loving fellowship with those who gave them birth. In reciprocated love the end of family relationship is attained, so far, at least, as to its earthly side.

Can we not clearly see in all this the imaging forth of the creative power of God and His continuous providence and care for the race of man? Can we not also see His ultimate purpose shadowed forth—that redeemed humanity should reciprocate the Divine love, embrace the Divine purposes, and render to God a joyful service as His beloved children? Surely in the conviction that we have in the family a Divine parable set forth in life of the deepest truths of existence, we have additional cause for reverence in considering the responsibilities of parenthood and the home relation.

Mr. Meyer's Movements.

THE contrast between the heat of Jamaica and several degrees of frost in Great Britain is rather startling; and yet I am thankful to be back again in this bracing air. We hardly realize how much we owe to it for the indomitable patience and perseverance by which our race is characterized.

Now that I have returned to the ordinary life and work of our own country, it will be better for me to discontinue these regular records, only noticing special incidents that may call for particular attention. But I want to tell my friends where I am, and what kind of work I am engaged in, that they may be able to pray for me.

Last week I held a very encouraging mission in Manchester, conducting afternoon meetings in the Roby Chapel, so closely identified with the revered memory of Robert Moffat; and in the evening speaking in the great Central Hall. Besides these, there were special sermons in certain chapels, and meetings with the ministers of the city, and with the students of Brighton Grove Theological Seminary. This will give an outline of the work in each of the subsequent weeks. Barrow-in-Furness, Jan. 17-22; Bury, 24-29; Bradford, 31-Feb. 5; Southport, 7-12; Bacup, 14-19; Halifax, 21-26; Germany, Feb. 28-March 26; Christ Church, April 5.

I am writing from Barrow, where we are opening with every sign of God's presence; and after all, the best answer to the criticism and lax theology of our time is the fact that the name of Jesus has still its ancient charm, and that there is power in the Gospel unto salvation.

Let us not proclaim our doubts and uncertainties, but those eternal verities which have been again and again proved to have the energy of the Divine Spirit behind them, for the renewal and redemption of men. F. B. Meyer.

Other Lands.

A Cry from Asia Minor.

A TOUCHING account of the spiritual need of Asia Minor comes from Miss Mudie, of the American Schools at Smyrna (care of Miss McAllum, Smyrna Rest). In the district known as that of the "Seven Churches" are to be found large cities and a population of three millions and a half, where there is no Gospel work done, except by a few native Greek or Armenian pastors and colporteurs. Such would gladly welcome a periodical visit from a missionary, but must toil on for perhaps over a year at a time without any such help or counsel.

Philadelphia, Pergamos, Thyatira are all of them cities within easy access by railway from Smyrna, itself a populous town. But, with one exception, these places, along with many others, have to be left in darkness so long as there are no missionaries to visit them. There are many open doors. The harvest is great, but the labourers, where are they? There are pastors, both Armenian and Greek, willing to take their lives in their hands and go forth; but they dare not go alone; they can only go in association with English or American missionaries. The Armenians are crushed on every hand, and Greek Protestants have as little liberty to preach the Gospel.

Some time ago the Greek pastor in Smyrna went to Mitylene to have special services. Many attended every night for a week, listening eagerly to the faithful preaching of the Gospel. Not a few showed a manifest interest in religion, while some seemed to understand the way of salvation through Jesus Christ. After a time he revisited the place along with his devoted wife, intending to remain for a few weeks and evangelize as opportunity might present. There was the same eagerness on the part of the people to hear, while Mrs. Moschou had precious opportunities with the women and girls.

OFFICIAL OPPOSITION.

Soon sinister influences were at work, pressing the Goverment to send them away—what could they do? With breaking hearts they left the place. Some time afterwards another Greek evangelist bravely made the attempt. His experience I give in his own words. After having received a hearty welcome from the people in whose memory the words spoken by Mr. Moschou still remained, he was obliged also to leave the first village visited. He says: "The Lord, however, gave me opportunities of speaking privately to forty or fifty souls. From thence I went to Polychnito, six hours off. There was no opposition there; for many hours in the evening the small club-room was full, and in the daytime the villagers gathered in numbers, and heard the comforting truths of salvation. The local magistrate, getting suspicious, obliged me to return from another village where I had gone; and sent me the same day, with a soldier, to his superior at Plomari. I was taken to prison, where I remained four days." After some sort of trial, he was sent to Mitylene and imprisoned for nine days. There "I had fifty fellow-prisoners who listened attentively to the Gospel as often as I spoke to them. I left one copy of the New Testament in each of the three wards of the prison." After this he was sent in company with a convict to Smyrna, where he was handed over to the police, but was released the same day through the efforts of Mr. McNaughton, the American missionary there.

Only one way seems at present open for the carrying on of this work. The Greek evangelist already mentioned, and doubtless others also, are ready to accompany the American missionary to these places; but, however much the heart of the missionary yearns to go, he cannot, so long as the Church at home makes no provision.

Missionaries in Madras.

THE Decennial Missionary Conference held in Madras, December 10-17, was in many respects a very memorable time. It was a gathering of missionaries from all parts of India, Burma, and Ceylon, the members being delegated by the sixty societies represented, and the delegation being limited to one for every fifteen missionaries. Besides these, however, there were a number of visitors, i.e., missionaries who were not delegated, and who, therefore, could not vote though they were admitted to all the meetings of the Conference. Altogether over 400 missionaries were present.

It was a very timely coincidence that Rev. Dr. TORREY was able to attend the Conference in connection with a mission which he was conducting in Madras. His addresses to the missionaries will long be remembered, especially those which he gave on "Conference Sunday," when he pressed home the necessity of equipment for service by the Holy Ghost. God only knows how many of those present were led to face that question, and to get right in relation to it.

There was another timely feature of the Conference, that it happened when so many in this land and in other lands are having their minds turned to the subject of spiritual awakening, both the need of it and the assurance that God is about to send it. This feeling found expression in one of the resolutions passed unanimously by the Conference, and which must surely send a thrill of gratitude and hope through the hearts of all who read it.

A GREAT REVIVAL NEEDED.

Believing that a great revival is urgently needed at the present time in the Churches of Christ in India and Ceylon, and recognising that there is a growing spirit of expectation in these Churches of a spiritual revival similar to those which have been granted in other countries, e.g., in Uganda, Japan, Australia, &c., and being convinced that such a visitation of Divine grace would result in—(1) The deepening of the spiritual life and sense of responsibility of all Christian workers; (2) Impressing upon the members of the churches the great necessity of a more consecrated life, and of active efforts for the salvation of relatives and neighbours; (3) The conversion of large numbers of nominal Christians to a personal faith in Christ; (4) The winning to Christ of many from the increasingly large number of those who have lost faith in their old religions:—The Conference, while recognising that such blessings ought to be sought by every preacher in the course of his ordinary ministry, yet would recommend that the missions in the different language areas, either singly or in unison with others, should concert measures with this end in view; special sermons being preached on the lines indicated by the subjects above mentioned, and fervent intercessory prayer being continually made for a great spiritual revival in India and Ceylon.

This resolution was prefaced by the expression of "deep conviction that the greatest need in our Missions to-day is Christian LIFE: not more elaborate methods of better organization, or new appliances, but more LIFE, the new life from God, inbreathed by His Holy Spirit."

Another resolution recommends the holding of special conventions of Indian and Ceylon Christians and missionaries, to seek for a real spiritual uplift and a continual Divine baptism, in consequence of which churches will become purer, stronger, and more fruitful to the glory of God.

There was also a resolution calling upon the churches of this land—native, Eurasian, and European—to realize their missionary responsibility in relation to the unevangelized millions of India. In connection with this the Conference sent to the home lands a strong appeal for more workers, expressing the hope that the number of missionaries in India may be doubled by the next Decennial Conference, and that the point of efficiency to be aimed at should be at least one missionary for every 50,000 of the population.

The conference was marked by a great spirit of union, even on questions on which different opinions are held, the evident desire of all being to find the place of agreement rather than of disagreement. There was also the spirit of prayer which showed itself both in the meetings down on the programme and other extemporized meetings, including a half night of prayer. This is our hope for India, that the spirit of prayer will take possession of missionaries and other helpers of the whole Church.

Missions and conferences pass away, but the power remains with those who give themselves to prayer. There are cheering evidences of the prevalence of this sentiment in the prayer circles which are being formed in various places, and also in a prayer league among missionaries to pray for each other's work, and for the outpouring of the Spirit of God on India. Surely all these things combine to show that the time to favour India, "yea, the set time, is come."

I am writing in the midst of the Y.W.C.A. National Camp, which is being held in this Training Home and grounds, and is attended by over 100 delegates from various parts of India, Burma, and Ceylon. It is being held at the same time as the great Durbar in Delhi, and its aim is to "make Jesus King."

Famine in Finland.

VERY touching appeals are reaching us regarding the famine conditions prevailing in Finland. The land is stricken as it certainly has not been since the winter of 1867-68, and Rev. Alexander Francis (of the British-American Church, St. Petersburg) writes that the failure of this year's harvest is more complete than even then, when there were 100,000 deaths. Now there is universal want. Four hundred thousand men, women, and children are already without food, and the need becomes more widespread every day.

The Finns themselves cannot be expected to cope unaided with this crisis. Those who know the country are impressed with the generous spirit displayed. A Finnish Relief Committee has organized assistance in the affected districts, and the work is being done with devotion, intelligence, and probity.

But the means at their disposal are quite inadequate. Applications have been made for the immediate relief of starving children. The Finnish Committee cannot respond, there being no available funds.

A society connected with the British-American Church has opened a relief fund with the sanction of the Government, and has arranged to co-operate with the Finnish Relief Committee, especially in feeding the children whose needs are greatest. The committee have taken entire charge of four schools for a period of eight months, and as the fund increases other work will be added.

"We have hesitated," writes Mr. Francis, "to appeal at home for contributions to our fund, for we have learned from your columns of the widespread distress that exists in London and the provinces. But we ourselves have never failed to respond as a Church to appeals for help for our fellow-countrymen. We recently sent for the famine-stricken in India over £200; liberal contributions were sent to the fund for the relief of the widows of our soldiers who fell in the war; and many charitable associations in London frequently receive generous donations from the Church. We consider, too, that there are many in England who sympathize with the distressed peasants in Finland, and we beg you to permit us to intimate to them that if, after bestowing their benefactions upon charities at home, they desire to contribute for the relief of the Finnish peasantry, our committee will be pleased to receive and administer their gifts. In response to an inquiry from America, the Minister of the Interior has intimated that subscriptions from that country will be gratefully received; and doubtless contributions from England will be equally welcome.

"Eight months must elapse before the harvest is reaped. Two shillings will keep a child for a week, 8s. for a month, £3 until the harvest. No expenses of administration will be charged to the fund."

Mr. Francis asks us to add that contributions may be addressed to our care.

Saving the Lepers.

INDIA.

THE kind response of your readers on former occasions encourages me to bring before them the special need we have at Chandkuri in the Central Provinces just now. The district of Chattisgarh, in which Chandkuri is situated, is in a state of serious famine, and, while the ordinary peasant is practically without food, the homeless lepers are literally starving. Our Asylum at Chandkuri has grown so rapidly that we have now over 400 inmates there, though the work was only begun as a result of the famine in 1897. Rev. K. W. Nottrott writes as follows, under date of October 1:—

"I hope to begin building soon, because all the people around here are starving. There is no hope for any rice harvest at all, and we are face to face with a very severe famine. I hope the Lord will again open the hearts of our friends in England and elsewhere to send us help. There are already twenty-five new lepers here waiting for admission. If possible, please help me to erect more buildings for the next dry season. This will give work for many starving people, and save their lives. It is indeed very hard for Chattisgarh to suffer another famine; but the Lord's ways are not our ways, and He who sent the distress will be able to help and save us."

The sum of £5 enables us to provide one of these destitute and afflicted people with food and shelter for a year, while, above all, the regular preaching of the Gospel is secured to them. Our funds are severely taxed for our rapidly-growing work, and we shall be most grateful for any help towards admitting these waiting and starving lepers, and for providing food and labour for the perishing people of Chandkuri.

CHINA.

Our work among the lepers of China is steadily extending, and being greatly blessed. We have tidings of a number of baptisms at Lo-ngwong, in the Fu-kien province. Some idea of what salvation means to the leper may be gathered from the meaning of the baptismal names chosen by some recent converts there, such as "Obtained Happiness," "Obtained Grace," "Obtained Hope," and "Obtained Righteousness." As an evidence of the real change of life in these leper converts it may be stated that the churchwarden of the Leper Church at Lo-ngwong has recently been appointed to be the head man of the leper settlement there. He was chosen for this post by the mandarin of the district as being the most reliable man they could find. In his letter respecting these Chinese lepers, the missionary writes:—

"One of our most interesting Christians is a leper who is now doing nothing but waiting for his home call from his Lord. His fingers are gone, and some of his toes, and he is suffering great pain, but he is patient and even cheerful in his hope of Christ. His grave is already made, and it is touching to notice the little cross carved on the centre of a stone slab, and to read the man's name underneath, only lacking the date of death. His living room is only a few yards distant from his grave."

The work in our two Leper Asylums at Hang-chow, which are so ably supervised for us by Dr. Main, of the C.M.S., continues to afford us much encouragement. A visitor to Hang-chow recently wrote concerning this work:—

"At the foot of the hill is the most pathetic and touching portion of this great work for God—the Lepers' Home. Some of them were on their knees praying as we drew near. By and by they sang us a hymn. It brought tears into our eyes to look into these poor, disease-torn faces, and at the same time our hearts were full of thankfulness to see how the knowledge of Jesus had transfigured with peace and joy the happy faces of these men. We shall not readily forget the sight."

Madras Tamil Mission.

NOTHING is so inspiring to God's saints as to hear of answers to prayers. Mr. Gnanamutthu J. Israel, superintendent of the Orphan Home, Tondiarpett, Madras, writes:—

Truly God has honoured your efforts on our behalf, in giving you the privilege of receiving contributions from your readers for this work. Your cheque for £15 came at a time when it was most needed. We had been praying that God might help us to prepare the outfit for forty of our senior boys for whom arrangements were made for industrial training. No money came for this purpose. This only made us to pray more earnestly than ever—sometimes six or eight times daily.

Dr. and Mrs. Rudisill, not knowing how our finances stood, fixed September 15 as the day of formal admission of our forty boys into the Publishing Home for training. Up to the 11th no money came; but the conviction deepened that it was God's will for us to get outfit for the outgoing party, and that the money would come in time for the purpose. So I arranged to get new clothing, bedding, plates, &c., for every one of the boys, and also bought the necessary rice for Mrs. Rudisill to use for the boys.

On the 15th (Monday, 4 p.m.) the boys marched from Tondiarpett to Mount Road with banner and singing. On the way your letter containing £15 was handed over to me. It pleased God to try and prove my faithfulness up to the very last moment; but God, true to His promise, "God will provide," did provide in His own wonderful way. You can imagine how my heart was filled with joy on the receipt of God's answer through The Christian.

We undertake to defray the cost of maintaining the lads for a year, while they are taught printing and binding, and other arts and handicrafts that may be suited to individual tastes and capacities. Roughly speaking, our obligations in this matter, reckoning at £5 per head per annum, will be £200. Very few of the number are supported by friends, so we look to the Lord to send us the amount needed.

Most of the forty transferred to Dr. Rudisill are Christians. They read three chapters in the Old Testament and two in the New daily. Twenty-three of them are famine boys. We still have 120 boys and girls with us in Tondiarpett. We secured the services of two experienced weaving instructors, and have made a set of English hand looms and wheels, &c., for hand-weaving. We are also busy putting up a temporary cocoanut-leaf roof weaving shed, 60ft. by 16ft. We still need twelve English hand-weaving looms, and a permanent weaving workshop, which will cost us £300.

Besides 160 orphans, we have 400 ragged day scholars in our five Ragged Schools. The Bible is taught one-and-a-half hours (out of six hours daily) in each school. We have a special children's missioner whose work it is to conduct a children's service in each school once a week. Most of these 400 ragged children are Pariahs, a downtrodden class of people in India. The schools have been in existence for the last eighteen years, and for the last four years have been carried on without any Government grant. We resigned a Government grant of £100 per annum, to enable us to teach the Bible more freely without any restriction upon us in purely soul-winning soil. Many of our old scholars are now working as teachers in various mission schools, and we ourselves employ two such workers.

Three of these schools are situated in the largest slums of Madras; there is a great possibility of winning many grown up people in these important centres: £300 per annum will maintain these five schools in efficiency, and £200 per annum will help us to develop the evangelistic work that is carried on in these slums.

Blessing in Stockholm.

ABOUNDING grace has been vouchsafed to Stockholm and its vicinity. The so-called Keswick meetings held in Södertelge during the first week of October, have already been mentioned in The Christian. Hundreds of Christians met there from several parts of the country, and we are convinced that it was a time of sowing for eternity which will bear abundant fruit. We have the same firm and sure hope with regard to the Church Conference, embracing the whole of Scandinavia and Finland, which was held in Stockholm, October 14 to 17. Earnest, praying clergymen from Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Finland were invited by a Society whose object is to promote spiritual life in the Church.

About 400 assembled on October 14, in worship and prayer for showers of blessing, and a manifestation of the Spirit's power. On the evenings of the 14th, 15th, and 17th, services were held and addresses given in ten of the largest churches in Stockholm, which were all crowded to overflowing. Each day the addresses were on the same subject—the first evening, "Jesus, our Lord, delivered for our offences"; the second; "Jesus, our Lord, raised again for our justification," and the third, "Jesus Christ, coming again to judge the quick and the dead." These truths, ever new and vital, were preached with great fervour and power of the Spirit.

On the mornings of the 15th and 17th, and both morning and evening of the 16th, conference meetings were held in the large church of "Blasüholmen." The subjects were: "The Strait Gate"; "Walking in the Narrow Way"; "The Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church, in its Relation to Existing Denominations"; and "My Kingdom is not of this World." Bishops and clergymen, and some lay workers, gave addresses, and led in prayer and praise, fervent in spirit and full of a holy enthusiasm which spread through the great listening crowd.

The presence of the Lord was felt, and when the powerful strains of the organ pealed through the sanctuary, all joined in singing: "The Word of God shall never fail." We look for and expect great results for eternity from this conference, at which about 50,000 souls received the heavenly seed. The exhortations to the unconverted were powerful, and God's message of salvation fully preached. Glory be to God!

The addresses given at the conference, and also at one held in 1901, have been printed, and very widely spread. We know that much blessing has followed both the meetings and the publications. Many who came experienced very vividly the presence of the Spirit, and one of our fathers in Christ, said: "This is like being at the gate of heaven."

Pastor W. Fuller Gooch,

LANSDOWNE HALL, WEST NORWOOD.

THE present seems a fitting time (in view of the development of the work at Lansdowne Hall and the proposed erection of a permanent structure in place of the iron building of the past nine years) to supply a brief sketch of this esteemed Christian brother, whom we have known intimately for nearly a quarter of a century, and the area of whose ever-abounding labour in the Lord was never so extensive as now.

Born in Fakenham, Norfolk, in March, 1843, he was brought to the Lord in his sixteenth year, when the great Revival movement was at its height; and, having been baptized, was received into Church fellowship on the first Sunday in March, 1859. His call to preach was virtually coincident with conversion, there being that inner revealing of Christ by the Spirit, combined with the authority to make Him known, to which Paul refers in Gal. i. 16 in connection with his own commission, and which is an invariable content in the consciousness of those who have been designated by the Spirit to the oversight of His people.

We find him, very soon after his reception into Church fellowship, preach-in the Baptist Chapel of Foulsham, Norfolk; and from that day to the present there has been no break in the continuity of his career as one Divinely called to minister to others the Bread of Life. Not less significant is the fact that all along the line there have been signs following—such signs as even from the beginning attested the gift possessed to be not simply evangelistic, but eminently for the feeding of the flock.

So marked was the initial blessing at Foulsham, both in the ingathering of souls and the establishment of believers, that Mr. Gooch's father, himself pastor in Fakenham, found it needful to take Foulsham under his pastoral wing, his son being too young for ordination; and, by a conjoint arrangement, to carry on the two causes. The result of this arrangement was that for several years father and son preached at Fakenham and Foulsham on alternate Sundays, while, at both places, there were continuous additions, and a rise in the tide of spiritual life.

A departure was made in 1863, when at twenty years of age the subject of this sketch was publicly ordained as pastor of the Baptist Church in Foulsham, where he had for so long given proof of his Divine call to the ministry. The next move was a call to Diss, Norfolk, in April, 1866, a larger sphere, and one rendered memorable by an unbroken chain of blessing. The joy of the servant of the Lord here was for six years "according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice when they divide the spoil." We have never known our brother refer to Diss without some word of praise on his tongue and a worshipful gleam on his countenance.

In turning now, however, to Mr. Gooch's ministry in Falmouth, begun in 1872, and closed in 1878, the writer of this sketch, as his immediate successor there for some years, is on independent ground, and can speak with the authority of first-hand knowledge. The truth is, I knew Mr. Gooch from his work before I knew him in the flesh; and what impressed me most of all was not the beautiful chapel erected under God through his means at a cost of £6,000, but the more rare and beautiful work of Christly letterpress on human hearts. I have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Gooch reared for himself, or rather for his Lord, a monument in Falmouth more lasting than brass; and that I could but admire, not less the quality than the quantity, of the work done. Nor was the work confined to chapel walls, or to the representative congregation that thronged the sanctuary. All the churches in Falmouth felt the quickening, and the town at large was sensible of the power. And even when we have said that, we have done but poor justice to the area of our brother's influence, which seemed to overlap the county of Cornwall, and to express an apostolic gift which bore in its heart the care of all the churches. Statistics are but a rude means, in such a connection, of gauging success; but I should think I am within the mark when I say that the congregation, if not the membership, quadrupled in Falmouth in Mr. Gooch's time.

We now come to a great trial in his life, and the sorest probably in the history of the church in Falmouth—his removal to London. For this step there was no flesh and blood reason. If the Galatian element be, as some think, strong in Cornwall, no one can allege its presence in this case. Instead of any waning of interest or of attachment on the part of the church, the facts were all the other way. A church more adhesive as regards any given ministry I have never known. Howbeit, the causes of ministerial change are not always obvious; nor do they always lie on the psychical plane, though it is seldom that either sight or inquiry rises higher than that. In this instance we must look higher. It was not the prospect of a larger sphere that drew our brother to West Norwood, for the sphere there was then undeveloped; the church had not been formed, the new chapel was burdened by a debt of £4,000, and hard work had to be done. Nor was it the influence of notable names, such as the late C. H. Spurgeon, J. P. Chown, and J. T. Wigner (only recently deceased), though these brethren all urged upon Mr. Gooch the claims of the new cause at Chatsworth Road, and their representations were prayerfully considered. There was a deeper reason than all these, a reason which we may regard as determinative: the loosening of denominational bonds, the longing, not only to have an open table, which existed in the church at Falmouth, but an open membership—which was provided for in the Norwood Trust Deed. This yearning, which in after years took stronger shape, seems to have been the motive which influenced the will and determined the step.

PASTOR W. FULLER GOOCH.

As the character of Mr. Gooch's work in West Norwood is widely known, there is the less need that we should dwell upon it in detail. The Biblical and expository nature of the work awakened great interest, and many besides Baptists were drawn to settle under a ministry which was as a well-spread table. The evangelistic gift, too, was an equally pronounced factor in the accruing success. For, without being dramatic in manner, or in anywise sensational in method, Mr. Gooch, whether in discourse or in address, has the invaluable faculty of accumulative power. Whatever the topic be, it is bound to grow in his hands, the movement being ever towards a climax which usually has compelled conviction before it is reached. In the power to marshal reasons and draw inferences, Mr. Gooch is singularly effective; and, as this power is laid unreservedly under tribute to the authority of Scripture, it is not to be wondered at that the Holy Spirit has evidently used it in the conviction and conversion of sinners.

In August, 1885, Mr. Gooch resigned the pastorate at Chatsworth Road and removed to Sunderland, in succession to the late Mr. Arthur A. Rees. But principally in consequence of broken health, combined with the urgent requests of many friends, he was induced to listen to a second call from his old charge, and to resume a work for which no successor had been found. This resumption of the old connection, however, was not destined to be abiding. For one thing, the result of the Down-Grade controversy, which culminated in 1888, had tended still further to estrange him from denominational interests and aims; and, though there was nothing cramping in the church deed of Chatsworth Road, the impulse, as time went on, to get outside of all denominations so grew upon him that eventually he had to yield before it. As we did our utmost to retain Mr. Gooch where he was, we can testify the more freely to the conscientiousness of the scruples which committed him to an undenominational course.

After preaching for about a year in the Public Hall of West Norwood, the iron building known as Lansdowne Hall was opened in April, 1893; and, being found too small for the increasing congregations, was enlarged in 1896 to seat 1000. One important feature of the new work has been an annual Conference of Christians generally, to consider the spiritual aspects of prophecy and such kindred subjects as bear on the latter-day features of the times. The interest awakened has led our brother far afield; and if his parish be not exactly the world, it takes in a large number of the principal towns of the British Isles, as he is constantly employed in Convention work, or in the interests of the Bible League, or Undenominational Extension, as the case may be. That he may be freer to serve the Church of Christ at large, Mr. Gooch has recently engaged as helper the services of Mr. George Attwood, formerly of the Evangelization Society, in whom he finds a brother of efficient gift and kindred spirit.

The time is now come for the removal of the iron building, and the erection, on the same site, of a plain, commodious, and substantial, structure. Towards the estimated outlay of £4,500, the people themselves have already contributed £1,000. Pastor and people are looking to the Lord by faith and prayer for help to be sent, the general desire being to dispense with special appeals for the undertaking. It is an instructive proof of the power of faith that, without any guaranteed income, our brother has held on his way; and that, apart from seat-rents or pew-to-pew collections, but by the free-will offerings of the Lord's people alone, not only have all the necessary expenses of Lansdowne Hall been defrayed, but over £200 annually has been subscribed for missions abroad, including a mission of their own in Africa and special work in Germany.

In closing this sketch, we are sure that, next to his indebtedness to God, there is nothing the subject of it is more sensible of than the steadfast, devoted help of her who has been his true helpmate from his first pastorate till now. Mrs. Gooch is, above all, a woman of unobtrusive, sympathetic action, distinguished by her kindly thoughtfulness for the poor and the sick—a faithful partner to her husband in a career that has been tinged with sore bereavement, and which, while marked by strenuous and successful labour, has also been set in much vicissitude. A Living Miracle!

By AVARY H. FORBES, M.A.

IN one of those dark wet evenings which characterized the August of 1902, I made my way to the back yard in which Mr. Donald Dorrington lived. Eight persons were there, studying John viii., which chapter Mr. Dorrington, lying in bed, was reading from a Bible, fixed before him.

Mr. Dorrington was once a seafaring man, but, having settled in Norwich, he worked in a wire-netting factory in that city. Having met with an accident to his knee, he had to go on crutches; and chronic rheumatism setting in, he gradually became an invalid and took to his bed. His record had been a bad one—a drunkard, a fighter, a swearer, and a gambler—and, of course, a stranger to the Gospel. He had engaged in many a boxing contest, and sometimes with a prize-fighter. He came within the sound of the Gospel faithfully preached by Mr. Macdonald, of Mundesley, but he resisted it, and went on with the drink. His sufferings at times were great; getting no ease from strong drink, he resolved to trust the Lord. He prayed to God for relief, and threw himself on One that is Mighty to Save. "O Lord," he cried, "if Thou bend me double, I will trust Thee." Having thus poured out his soul, he fell asleep, and when he awoke he was a new man in Christ Jesus.

He was happy, but of course very ignorant and helpless; so he prayed that God would send some one to help him. While he was yet on his knees his friend, Mr. Macdonald, knocked at the door. This was the first of a series of

NOTEWORTHY ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

Gradually he became a confirmed invalid, and nine and a half years ago he took finally to his bed, from which he has never risen since. He now presents a spectacle which, as he himself says, cannot be equalled in Norwich—nor, we may add, can it be easily paralleled elsewhere. Gangrene has blackened legs and arms, so that they look like those of a mummy or a leper. The fingers and toes are twisted out of all shape, and seem ready to drop off. These limbs are perfectly useless; the patient cannot stir them, and they are, to all appearance, dead.

The sufferer lost his wife long since, and about four years ago his jaws became locked, since which time he has not opened his mouth. Liquid food is administered through a hole formed by taking out a tooth. Lastly, the sight of one eye is entirely gone. Many people would say that life under such conditions would be too frightful to endure; but Mr. Dorrington does not think so. He is one of the brightest and happiest Christians, and his humble bedroom is a centre of Christian work. The Gospel is preached in the little yard outside, and some friends gather in his room every Tuesday evening for a Bible reading.

"I suppose, Mr. Dorrington," I said, "you would not care to have my health and strength on condition of renouncing Christianity?" His reply was very prompt, and almost indignant: "Not for the whole world, and all that is in it. But," he added, "I would give all that for the privilege of going about and preaching the Gospel to others." His prayers are full of love to God, and recognition of His unspeakable love and mercy towards men.

I said that Mr. Dorrington's room is a centre of Christian work. A text-roll hangs on the wall, and the patient has time and ability to think out the verses as they come round, and many a valuable thought the local preachers have received from him. One of his friends once brought to see him a man who professed atheism. The atheist's astonishment aptly expressed itself in the words—

"A LIVING SOUL IN A DEAD BODY!"

Mr. Dorrington spoke to him about Isaiah liii., and quoting some of the verses, "Do you believe that?" he asked. The atheist broke down, and burst into tears. Subsequently he renounced his atheism and accepted salvation, and he is now a preacher of the Gospel.

I heard Mr. Dorrington read from a Newberry Bible, which, he told me, he saw before he got it. He dreamt that a brown paper parcel arrived with two stamps on it. He told his nurse about it, and described the size exactly, saying it would just fit over a certain text-card which hung on the wall. Soon afterwards the Bible arrived, in the brown paper, with two stamps, and of the precise size he had already described.

The late Professor Huxley expended a good deal of labour in endeavouring to discredit the miraculous cure of the Gadarene maniac, and the Gospel demonology generally; and many other "scientific theologians" are engaged in the same efforts now. Such efforts are quite futile; for it is really not on the Gospel miracles—actual and veritable though they be—that living Christianity depends. It is on the "greater things than these"—the miracles which "Christ, the power of God," is performing every day.

THE FALLACY OF AGNOSTICISM.

Agnosticism still pursues the ostrich policy of burying its head in the earth, and groping after problems it cannot reach. It prefers to crack the nuts at the top of the tree instead of opening those within reach.

Evolution teaches us that men, animals, and plants are the outcome of their environment—that if that environment improves they will improve; but if not, they will remain the same, or degenerate; and Huxley furnished us with species of animals which had shown no alteration during he knew not how many thousand years. Mr. Dorrington's environment was that of multitudes of other men, living in the same slums—an environment of violence and vice, and blasphemy and lust. How comes it then that, while others continue in drunkenness and quarrelling, and filth, and misery, such a complete revolution for the better has taken place in his mind and life? I meet the agnostic scientist on his own ground—that of cause and effect. Multitudes of "revolutions," such as that in Mr. Dorrington's life, have taken place, and are taking place every day. Has science or philosophy—has anything but the Gospel of Jesus Christ ever brought them about?

Mr. Dorrington's experiences are manifold, varied, and marvellous. His life, written by a Norwich gentleman (6d. Jarrold), should prove a most instructive volume.

Waifs at Work and Play.

AN army of bright and cheery little folks from the institutions known the world over as Dr. Barnardo's Homes, took possession of the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon, intent on demonstrating their capacity for entertaining an audience, and giving proof of the thorough training which they undergo while under the care of their benefactor. The occasion was the children's Christmas entertainment in aid of the funds of the Young Helpers' League.

For any who are not familiar with its objects, it may be well to mention that the League is a voluntary union of young people from homes representing almost every part of the world, for the support of crippled, deaf and dumb, blind, ailing, and incurable children, who are either waifs or destitute orphans. These are admitted to Dr. Barnardo's institutions freely, without voting, recommendation of subscribers, or promise of support. The members of the League are grouped locally into habitations, and each habitation, when large enough, is subdivided into lodges. There are at present no fewer than 833 habitations and 600 lodges, many of them being in active operation beyond the four seas, touching every quarter of the world.

The great orchestra was occupied by a choir of some 700 neatly dressed boys and girls, presenting a happy appearance which must have given many a thrill of joy to the hearts of the young members of the League and their friends. Indeed, it was not without an effort that one realized that these chubby, joyous children had known the pinch of hunger or the sorrows of the slum homes in the dismal courts and alleys of our land. But the days of rags and tatters and starvation are gone, and prospects of a useful and noble life inspired each young heart with an enthusiasm which found ample and vigorous expression in one of the opening choruses:

Courage, brothers, onward pressing,
Let your eyes turn upward still;
Hope is growing, God is blessing—
There is light behind the hill!

In the course of a long and varied programme almost every phase of the work of the institutions was represented, from the activities of nurses and doctors in one of the wards of Her Majesty's Hospital, Stepney, to an exhibition of operations at the Village Home, showing groups of girls engaged in laundry work, cooking, dressmaking, &c. Brisk drills and military manœuvres by boys, in army and navy dress, were gone through with commendable skill and smartness, and these qualities were even more in evidence when the alarm of "Fire!" was sounded, and a party of the Stepney Home boys gave an exhibition of saving life from a burning house. One of the most instructive items was the procession of young tradesmen bearing trophies of their labour, and badges of their crafts. The varied nature and extent of the industries taught and carried on in the Homes was thus seen, no fewer than sixteen different trades being represented.

There were, as usual, no speeches; but Lord Kinnaird presided, and H.R.H. Princess Christian (accompanied by H.H. Princess Victoria) was present, and received purses in aid of the funds, and conferred medals, ribbons, and badges of honour upon officers and companions of the League for distinguished service. The programme closed with an exhibition of limelight pictures, illustrating the experience of the homeless child, from the moment it joins Dr. Barnardo's enormous family, and its passage from suffering and sorrow to social advancement and spiritual awakening.

It is gratifying to note that no fewer than 330 cots are being wholly supported by companions of the League, who now number over 26,000. When it is remembered, however, that Dr. Barnardo has under his care over twelve hundred incurable or helpless waifs, it will be felt that a wide field of effort lies open to the League. Miss Rachel Norton, 18-26, Stepney Causeway, E., will be pleased to give particulars of membership and full information to friends anxious to interest young people in the movement.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

FIRST WEEK OF MEETINGS AT MILDMAY.

AFTER the opening services, reported in our last issue, the meetings at Mildmay Conference Hall were largely attended throughout the week. The afternoon addresses to believers were much appreciated, and were felt by even Christians of long experience to be most helpful and instructive. The evening audiences, while affording, by the way, a splendid opportunity for building up and directing workers, always contained a number of men and women in whose hearts the soil had been prepared for the reception of the good seed. The largest number of professed conversions was seen on Thursday, but every meeting was fruitful in the ingathering of souls.

Yet, as Dr. Torrey said on Friday, the audiences were not such as an evangelist desired to see, and he appealed strongly to the large body of Christians to set themselves earnestly to the task of bringing in the unsaved. He praised God for what they had seen, but longed for even better times, and firmly believed that God was about to grant blessing on the effort. The outstanding feature of the week was the faithful preaching of the Word with deepest solicitude for souls. Few who were present will ever forget the thorough exposure of many of the sophistries by which men are tempted to turn their backs on the Bible and the teaching of the Cross.

"WHERE ART THOU?"

Despite the cold weather on Tuesday evening, the simple attraction of the singing by the choir of well-known hymns brought goodly numbers forward a considerable time in advance of the hour for the service. Dr. Torrey devoted a large amount of attention to helping Christians into a fuller realization of their duties and privileges. He also insisted again and again on the importance of taking advantage of the opportunity to invite their neighbours and friends.

The reason why so many were saved during the mission in Australia was, he said, that people were so much in earnest at Melbourne, Ballarat, and other places. The Christians came long distances themselves, and brought friends with them, sometimes inviting them to come hundreds of miles. And the Lord was with them. He recalled an experience of an American pastor who appealed specially to his congregation to bring out the people to a special mission. A blind man who was present at the gathering was first to speak, declaring that, though he could not see, he would feel for men. On the following evening he waited in a recess near the church, and sprang out so suddenly on hearing footsteps that the passer-by took him for a highwayman. But the passing man entered and was converted; and next day three more, brought in in the same fashion, were also brought to the Lord.

After calling attention to the numerous and searching questions addressed by God to men, Dr. TORREY chose as his text the first of these —"Where art thou?" (Gen. iii. 9)—which was put to Adam because, like every sinner to-day, his one desire was to hide from God. This, he said, supplies the real reason why people stay away from church—that the house of God brings God near, and men by staying away think they get away from Him. But like Adam we shall all be called out from our hiding places sooner or later. God puts the question to each where he stands.

The need for careful examination of ourselves was illustrated from business and seafaring life. He had known a man who got into a very bad way of business. Friends pressed that he should find out where he stood; but he said, "No, I am going to face this thing through." He would not look into his books, but plunged ahead, ending in such financial ruin that he never got on his feet again, and Dr. Torrey had to pay his funeral expenses. Hints were given for the facing of the question.

FACING THE QUESTION.

1. Seriously. He recalled a little boot-black to whom he spoke about his soul, but the lad made sport of the matter. Yet it is much more serious when men of ordinary culture and refinement joke about it.

(2) Earnestly. It is folly to imagine that we can deceive God, there is no advantage in deceiving our fellow men, and it is consummate folly to deceive ourselves.

(3) Thoroughly. Many a man is sincere and earnest enough, but does not go to the bottom of the question.

(4) Prayerfully. One day he met a brother minister who had an awful experience. He went to visit a lady who lay dying, and who cried out, "Oh, Brother Norris, I have been a professing Christian for forty years, and only now have I found out that I have never been saved, and I am lost." The sure way to avoid this mistake is to go down prayerfully before God, asking Him to search us through and through, that we may see ourselves as He sees us.

THE GROUND OF HOPE.

(5) Scripturally. We have one chart and compass—the Bible. Dr. Torrey visited a young husband and wife whose only child had been taken from them, and they professed to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour. After a short time they began to drift back into the world, and he called again, but saw only the wife. They talked about the security of the child with the Saviour, and he asked, "Do you ever expect to see that little one again?" "Oh, yes, was the reply, I am very sure I will." "Why? Do you think that little one is with Christ? Do you expect to go to be with Christ when you die? You have a hope of heaven?" "Yes." "Why do you believe it?" "I feel so." "Is that all?" "That is all." He went on to say that he would not give a snap of his fingers for a hope built on feelings. The lady asked if he could point to any assurance that he had eternal life, and he pointed with confidence to John iii. 37.

(6) Immediately. When those were invited to rise who had been professed Christians, but not out and out, men and women, young and old, rose in all parts of the hall to indicate their resolution to be whole-hearted for God. Others were found ready for the first time to range themselves on the Lord's side; and a cheering and stimulating after-meeting was held.

PERSONAL EFFORT.

A pleasant innovation was introduced on Wednesday afternoon by Mr. Alexander. "We have been together three days," said the evangelist, "and surely during that time you have heard something worth passing on to others. So I want you to rise and speak out what has been most helpful to your own souls." Quite a number of friends responded, and their testimony showed that no gathering had been without direct results.

Turning to John i. 41, 42, Dr. TORREY gave a thoroughly rousing address on "How to win thousands of souls for Christ," maintaining that the application of the text by the congregation would never fail to have this result. As an illustration of personal effort he gave the instance of Kimball entering the boot store and speaking to a clerk, and winning him to Christ. The young man proved to be none other than D. L. Moody. There is not a child of God who cannot do something towards bringing others to the Saviour. We cannot all preach, sing, or teach: God does not expect it of us; but we can all do personal work, and can do it any time and anywhere. Even invalids can influence for Christ the friends who come to them in their sickness.

The speaker went on to show how personal effort touches all classes, hits the mark, and meets every difficulty. There are men who will never enter a church or a chapel; these must be reached by individual endeavour, for personal effort is effective, and succeeds where everything else fails. Concerning the responsibility of Christians in the matter of bringing others to a saving knowledge of Christ, Dr. Torrey had much to say, and his direct appeals and straightforward speech must have touched the consciences of many.

WEIGHED IN THE BALANCES.

The requests for prayer read out by Dr. Torrey at the evening gathering comprised some pathetic petitions. One was on behalf of two young women, convicted of sin at an earlier meeting, but whose father had refused to allow them to attend again.

Taking as the subject of his address the mysterious handwriting on the wall of Belshazzar's banqueting hall, Dr. TORREY applied to the hearts of his hearers the interpretation of the word Tekel—"Thou art weighed in the balances and found wanting." Turning to the Decalogue, the speaker dealt with each commandment as a weight to test any life. Asking the question he said it was that which a man thought most of—which has the first place in his heart. It may be money, position, or pleasure, but whatever it is, if he thinks more of it than of the Almighty, he puts it in the place of God. "Many here to-night will sacrifice their ease, comfort, conscience, and honour for the sake of money. Others are sacrificing eternal life and God's honour for pleasure—their god. And how many are making intoxicating drink their god? How many worship social position?" Having spoken of the sins covered by the second, third, and fourth commandments, Dr. Torrey rebuked in unmistakable terms the irreverence for parents often manifested by children.

THE SIXTH COMMANDMENT.

There are many ways of killing besides the dagger, revolver, or dose of poison, and in this connection the evangelist told of a home where a good mother lived with a wayward son. Night after night she wept bitter tears over his recklessness and sin. She had a stroke of apoplexy and died. The medical certificate said, "Death from apoplexy," but if you had asked me beside her grave what was the true cause I should have told you that the son had murdered his mother. I knew a lawyer in America who was making £5,000 a year in his profession. He was an unbeliever, and I said to him one night, "You ought to be a Christian." "Oh," he replied, "I do not see things as you do. I do not believe in the things you do. I suppose you believe in hell?" "Certainly I do," was my answer. "Well," said he, "suppose I dropped down dead here, should I go there?" "You would," I rejoined, "and would deserve it." "Why?" he queried. I replied, "You have got your wife under your heel, and are grinding her to death by your cruelty."

After dealing with the remaining commandments, the speaker expounded the golden rule, and closed a powerful and impressive appeal by declaring that all out of Christ are under the curse of a broken law, but when Christ died on the cross He bore the curse of the race, and men by accepting Him become free.

HOW TO PRAY.

A large assembly gathered on Thursday afternoon. After the opening hymn, Mr. Alexander announced "a kind of review," when, with words of pithy comment and kindly encouragement, he again urged those who had received blessing in the mission to testify to the fact. The ice once broken there were many speakers. One sister had received a vivid realization of the value of souls, another had been much helped in her prayer life, and the crowning incident was a touching story of decision made on the previous evening.

A capital beginning thus made, the meeting went on with fervency. Lord Radstock led in prayer, and Dr. Torrey subsequently pleaded with Christians to gather in the unconverted. There were good numbers in the inquiry room last night, but there would have been many more had outsiders been brought in.

Dr. Torrey's address was directed to Christians. The subject was, "How to Pray in order to Obtain the Answer." Much praying is pure waste of time. Probably there are people here who are unable to testify to their prayers being answered. If we turn to Acts xii. 5 we find the key to the problem. The verse brings out three important points: (1) Prayer must be made unto God. Oftimes when people take the name of God upon their lips there is no real approach to Him. They say "God," but they do not think "God." They try and say something to influence the audience; the prayer is like that described by an American paper as "the most eloquent prayer ever offered to a Boston audience." Prayer is an audience of the King of Kings, and is one of the sweetest and holiest privileges of life. We should ask, not "How much ought I," but "How much time can I spend in prayer?" And, does one ask, "How are we to get into God's presence?" The answer is, through the precious blood (Heb. x. 19), and in the Spirit (Eph. ii. 18).

"AT FULL STRETCH."

2. Prayer must be made without ceasing (A.V. earnestly). The sense is "stretch-outedly." The soul is to be at full stretch in its earnestness. "Do you wonder why your prayers are not answered? How much earnestness do you put into them? Some here have forgotten what they prayed for this morning. Others can remember only too easily, for they have a sort of 'praying wheel' in their minds; they use the same set phrases over and over again, without real thinking. This is mockery unto God. Yes, we are to pray earnestly. Study religious biography, and you will find it tells of mighty conflict in prayer. It was so with Wesley, with C. G. Finney, with David Brainerd. We cannot pray as we should, with cold hearts . . ." How can this earnestness be had? Not by "working up," with frothing at the mouth and screaming, but "the Spirit maketh intercession" for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. Fasting goes with prayer, not in a legal way, but in this spirit of earnestness. In religious work to-day there might well be less feasting and more fasting.

3. Prayer is to be united—"of the Church." Christ said (Matt. xviii. 19), "If two of you agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." When there is real united prayer, God gives the answer. One man prays because he has a burden, but another merely because the other man asks him to join. What we need is for all Christians to pray with unity in the Holy Ghost, crying for a mighty revival.

COMING JUDGMENT.

The evening service was a powerful one, and many in the large congregation were visibly impressed. Dr. Torrey spoke on Coming Judgment (Acts xvii. 31), and set forth five of its important aspects. (1) Its Certainty. In the days of Noah men laughed at the idea of judgment, but the flood came. In the days of Lot they laughed, but the fire and brimstone fell. They scoffed at Jeremiah's prediction of the coming of Nebuchadnezzar, but the prophecy was fulfilled. They scorned Christ's prophecy of the days of tribulation that should afflict Jerusalem, but the city had to endure the most awful siege recorded in history. We judge the future by the past, and are absolutely certain that there will be a judgment; and God has given us a guarantee of it in the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ from the dead: "He will judge the world by that man whom He hath ordained; whereof He hath given assurance unto all men, in that He hath raised him from the dead."

(2) Its Universality.—The whole race will be judged in righteousness. Every impenitent sinner, every infidel, every hypocritical churchgoer, all those who rejected Him, defied Him, betrayed Him, will be present, face to face with the Lord Jesus Christ as their judge.

(3) Its Basis.—According to (a) the deeds done in the body. Some would teach us that there is repentance after death, but that is in contradiction to the old Book. "Young man or woman, living a life of frivolity; professing Christian, living so like the world; libertine, living like a beast; you have to face judgment." (b) A basis of judgment will be foolish words. It is the careless unstudied words that reveal what we are. Dropping accidentally, they are a revelation of what is in the heart. Well may the ungodly tremble at the prospect. (c) Acceptance or rejection of the Lord Jesus Christ, appointed by God to be our Saviour. To reject Him proves the possession of a wicked heart.

THE JUDGE.

(4) Its Administration.—Who is to be the judge? The Lord Jesus Christ Himself. "That same Christ whose work you trample under foot because you want to be comfortable in your sin. The Rejected will judge the rejectors. Annas and Caiaphas; Pontius Pilate, who believed in His innocence, and yet gave Him over to death; the soldiers who buffeted Him; Judas, who sold Him for thirty pieces of silver; all these will stand at the bar of Him whom they used despitefully."

(5) Its Issues.—Eternal glory or eternal shame. "I would that I had the power to picture the judgment throne, the eyes of Him who shall sit there, piercing the sinner through and through. There you must stand before that dreadful judgment with all the secrets of your life laid bare. Repent! Repent! Repent!"

CONDITIONS OF ANSWERED PRAYER.

On Friday afternoon there was more readiness and spontaneity about the quoting of texts and of sayings by which individuals had been helped than on the previous days, although Mr. Alexander remarked, "You folks are just about as slow as any I have ever seen." He then advised them to get to praying that the Lord would wake them up; and, while of course they would be expected to act sensibly, to do something.

Starting from 1 John iii. 22, Dr. Torrey delivered a searching address on "The Conditions under which Prayer is Answered"—(1) the keeping of the commandments of God, and (2) the doing of the things that are pleasing to God, whether He has commanded us to do them or not. He thoroughly exposed the fallacy that Christianity consists of a number of specific commandments, as to what is to be done, and what is to be left undone. "That is not the Christian life; that is legalism." God expects us to make it our study to know His will as loyal children, and when we know it, to act accordingly. "When it is the study of your life to please God, He will make it His business to bless you."

Dr. Torrey showed that it is along this line that each young Christian must personally decide such questions as "Shall I dance? Shall I go to the theatre? Shall I play cards? I cannot settle these questions for you; but ask yourself whether it will please God for you to dance or not to dance, to go to the theatre or to remain away, to play cards or to abstain. Nobody will have much trouble in settling them from that point of view."

DO WE WANT ANSWERS?

Why is it you do not have any prayers answered? Are there not things you do that you have compunctions about? You think it wrong to do them, or you would not raise the question what is wrong about them? There is great harm in anything if it keeps your prayers from being answered. Notice the words, "in truth" (Psalm cxlv. 18), and corresponding clauses all through the Old and New Testaments, wherever prayer is spoken about. You will find there is always some word that brings in reality or sincerity.

Many are praying for a revival who do not want one. They think they do, because it would mean a great many people coming into their church, and great increase in prestige and finances. But if they knew that it would cause the truth to be proclaimed so plainly and pointedly that some of the richest members would go out and give up their pews; that sons for whom they have other plans would go to China or Africa to preach the Gospel, and die there—and if they were to pray after they had thought about it in that way, their prayer would be, "Heavenly Father, it would be very inconvenient for us to have a real revival; please do not send it just yet!" When we want a revival, in God's way, at any price, it will come.

People are praying for a baptism of the Holy Spirit who do not want it. They think it means new joy, and life, and power; and it does. But if they remembered what it really involved, how for instance it would take a man out of a comfortable living in England and send him to the hardships of the missionary frontier—the prayer of some would be, "Father, do not baptize me with the Holy Spirit just yet!" When for the glory of God, whatever it may cost us, we desire the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and cry to Him for that, we are going to have it.

THE PERSONALITY OF THE DEVIL.

At the opening of the evening meeting, Dr. Torrey said he had been told that the weather was very cold indeed for London, and he supposed some of the people who might have been there were frozen up; but he remembered preaching in Dakota when the thermometer stood at thirty degrees below zero, and the people came out and were converted. Finding that at least nineteen-twentieths of the audience were professing Christians, he spoke frankly on the duty of bringing others to the meetings. He could not preach to the unsaved when they were not there; but if the Christians who were attending had done their duty, there would have been more outsiders inside. Messrs. Henry Varley, W. R. Lane, and Leonard Weaver, were present; and special prayer was made for a blessing on the meetings which they were engaged to conduct during the following week.

The text for the evening consisted of the words, "A man shall be as an hiding-place" (Isa. xxxii. 2), and a solemn description was given of the need in every life of a hiding-place from (1) the accusations of conscience; (2) the powers of sin within ourselves; (3) the power of the devil; and (4) the wrath to come.

Over in America, he said, there are many people who are too wise to believe in the existence of a personal devil; but he believed in it—(1) because of the testimony of the Bible. He had found by experience that the man who follows the old Book comes out ahead every time, and that the man who is too wise to do so comes out behind. (2) Because of his own experience and common sense. We see everywhere in this magnificent universe the footprints of the Creator; but, alas, we see also, everywhere in human society, the footprints of the enemy. One cannot walk the streets of London without seeing the footprints of Satan—in the dram shop, in dens of infamy, in the faces of the men and women you meet. What means it that men of education and refinement go into strange delusions, like Christian Science? It means that there is a devil—cunning, subtle, masterly, marvellous, more than a match for us.

THE AWAKENING OF CONSCIENCE.

The wrath to come is in the future yet; but the Christ who is able to save men from the power of sin now, certainly is able to save them from the consequences of sin hereafter. If we have a kind of faith that does not save us from the power of sin to-day, it will not save us from the penalty.

Some can understand how a murderer can be haunted by a conscience that drives him to despair, but they have never sinned in such a way. That may be, but they have sinned, and when conscience awakes in its dignity and points the finger of accusation, we shall not balance up the greatness or smallness of the sins. Your conscience does not trouble you. Conscience sometimes sleeps, but it never dies, and woe be to the man or woman who has no hiding place when conscience awakes.

As in all the other addresses throughout the week, point after point was driven home by apt and telling illustration. Scripture truth is vividly opened up; but Dr. Torrey never loses sight of the fact that he is doing the work of an evangelist. The passionate earnestness of his appeals arrests all who come within the sound of his voice. The note of conviction dominates every utterance, and when he speaks of the deep personal satisfaction which he finds in following Christ, face, tone, and bearing unite to corroborate the words.

Lord's Day Services.

In spite of unfavourable weather and the dangerous condition of thoroughfares, a goodly company assembled at the early morning gathering of Lord's Day. The service was an occasion of spiritual quickening and helpful intercourse, but above all was an earnest looking to God for further manifestations of His unfailing power in the days of the coming week, by drawing to Himself all who should seek, in sincerity and contrition, newness of life.

The congregation joined heartily in singing what has become one of the favourite melodies —"Trust and Obey"—after which Mr. P. S. Badenoch led in prayer. Reading the first sixteen verses of Psalm cxix., Dr. Torrey commented briefly on the passage, remarking that meditation is almost a lost art. One verse thoroughly assimilated is worth ten chapters hastily scanned. Taking as the subject of his address Heb. iv. 12—"The Word of God is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword," Dr. Torrey gave an exposition which was particularly helpful to the workers assembled. He remarked that the verse set forth the tremendous power of God's Word. A book that has the power to draw men to God must have come down from God, as no other book has. Answering the question, What has the Bible power to do? the speaker referred to some of the achievements of the Word. It has power (1) to convict of sin, being the discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart; (2) to regenerate men, (3) to produce saving faith, (4) to produce the faith that prevails with God in prayer. In appealing to his hearers to give more time to the study of the Scriptures, Dr. Torrey said it must be confessed that the average Christian spends more time with his newspaper than with his Bible.

TIME MUST BE FOUND FOR THE BIBLE.

Continuing on the same subject in the afternoon, Dr. Torrey pointed out that the Word of God has power (5) to cleanse the outward life and inward character, (6) to keep us from sinning, (7) to protect us against error, (8) to promote spiritual growth, (9) to produce joy, (10) to produce hope, (11) to bring peace, and (12) to make us wise.

"I wish," he said, "I could get every child of God here to study the Word for thirty minutes every day. I think I could afford to close my mission right at this point if I could secure that. In the ultimate outcome there would be more good done than if we had the place packed every night with people, and the inquiry room filled. Will you do it? You find time to eat your meals—far more time than you can give on the other side. You must find time for this, or you will break down spiritually.

"Symmetrical healthy growth is impossible without proper feeding, daily regular feeding upon the Word of God. It is absolutely impossible; you cannot grow if you let days pass without studying this blessed Book. A man well known in Student Y.M.C.A. work had told him that he had been at many conventions; but one at which he received more blessing than at any other he remembered was attended by only four persons. They covenanted to spend a certain specified portion of the day in Bible study. He had passed much of his time travelling; but, in the providence of God, not a day had passed over his head without the specified time over the Word of God. The greatest blessing he had ever known, had come through the keeping of that resolution."

The power of a knowledge of the Word of God was illustrated by a comparison between Mr. D. L. Moody and some contemporaries of great secular learning.

SUNDAY EVENING.

North London was wrapped in a dense cloud of mist in the evening, and the thoroughfares were thick with slush; but despite these drawbacks, a large audience assembled.

At the outset it was evident that Mr. Alexander, with his energetic lieutenant, Mr. Harkness, had effected an immense advance in the choir arrangements. The main body was much augmented, and an additional singing band stationed in the gallery. The telling rendering of old-time favourite hymns and choruses, such as "Beulah Land," "Happy Day," and "Hallelujah! Thine the Glory," came with freshness and force. Indeed, Mr. Alexander's manipulation of the forces at his disposal was a revelation in musical leadership.

Dr. Torrey, in announcing a Day of Prayer and Fasting for the ensuing Wednesday, explained that the object was not merely to go without food, but to give the day up to God. "If you can pray better by eating nothing, eat nothing; if you can pray better by eating a little, eat a little; but see that the day is given to Him. Some of you are in earnest for souls; some of you are not. I hope you will all be so after Wednesday,"

THE DRAMA OF LIFE.

In the address which followed, Dr. Torrey's originality suggested something of the daring and quaintness associated with the name of Rowland Hill. Taking for his subject the parable of the Prodigal Son, the speaker gave a vivid modern paraphrase under the title of "A Drama of Life, in Three Acts," the sections being entitled (1) Wandering; (2) Desolation; (3) The Wanderer's Return.

The familiar story was set forth with vigour, the wild career and ultimate repentance of a prodigal of the day being depicted in striking fashion. The discourse was studded with such crisp sayings as the following:—

"The desire to have your own way is the essence of sin. There is sin vulgar, and sin elegant, but both represent man meaning to have his own way."

"The first fruit of sin is pleasure. The pleasures of sin are the devil's bait, and remember beneath the bait there is always the devil's hook."

"After all, you cannot have your own way. It is God's way or the devil's. Will you be the child of God, or the devil's swineherd?"

"Pick out the most faithful servants of Jesus Christ, and also the most determined infidels; call on them on the same day, compare their faces, and likewise their characters, and I am surprised if that does not make you a Christian."

"It is not enough to think; go farther, and resolve. 'And the only way a sinner can come to God is with a confession on his lips, 'I have sinned.'"

"You have forgotten God, but He has not forgotten you. You have not followed God, but day and night God has followed you, looking for a sign of repentance."

THE CONCLUDING APPEAL.

"A daughter wandered away from home. Her mother sought her with tears, but found her not. At length, the mother prepared a hundred photographs of herself, with the words inscribed beneath, 'Come home,' and got a friend to put them up, one in each of a hundred haunts of degradation and shame. The girl was one of a party of revellers in a certain place, and on looking around caught sight of one of those photographs, and read those words. Stricken with remorse she rushed from the place, and taking the first train home was soon wrapped in her mother's arms. In Luke xv. God has given us a picture of His love, and has written underneath, as it were, the invitation 'Come Home!' Who is coming home to-night?"

But few people left when Dr. Torrey closed the first meeting, so quitting the platform he spoke again in the body of the hall, passionately urging the unconverted to repent and turn to God. Mr. Alexander took up the thought in song, bringing out the wooing note of "Ye who are weary come home." Many workers were soon busily engaged in leading the anxious forward, and after a glorious reaping time the meeting concluded with triumphant song.

Monday's Gatherings.

Mr. Alexander again demonstrated his versatility on Monday afternoon, when, in addition to securing precise and tuneful rendering of the hymns, he drew forth from many of the audience expressions of gratitude to God for what He had wrought through His servants during the services of the day before. One after another of the congregation rose to their feet, and from glad and full hearts testified to the quickening of their spiritual life and purpose, through the light which had been shed on truths new and old.

MORE LESSONS ON HOW TO PRAY.

After a number of requests for prayer had been read by Dr. Torrey, and embodied in a fervent petition by Mr. George E. Morgan, Mr. Alexander sang as a solo, "Jesus is living with me." Dr. Torrey's address was a continuation of the series which he has devoted to the subject of "Prayer." Drawing attention to what he termed the most positive and precious promise in the word of God concerning prayer—John xiv. 13, 14—the speaker proceeded to offer some thoughtful suggestions on the conditions of acceptable prayer as laid down in the Scriptures. Anything asked in the name of Christ the Father promises to do. God hears Him always, and prayer in His name must prevail. To pray in the name of Christ is to pray on the ground, not of our own credit, but His; to renounce the thought that we have any claim on God whatever, and approach Him on the grounds of Christ's merits alone. It is not merely adding the phrase, "I ask these things in Jesus' name." I may put that phrase in my prayer and yet be resting on my own merit; but when we approach God, not on the ground of our own merit, but on the ground of His merit, not of my goodness, but the atoning blood, God hears.

We learn from 1 John v. 14, 15, that if we are to pray aright we must pray according to God's will. But the question is asked, "How can we know the Divine will?"—(1) Through the Word of God. When anything is definitely promised in His Word, we know that it is His will to fulfil that promise. If then, when we pray, we find some promise of God in His Word, and lay that promise before Him, we know that He hears us, and if we know that He hears us, we know that we have the petition which we have asked of Him.

We may know the will of God (2) by the teaching of His Spirit (Rom. viii. 26, 27). There are many things that we need from God that are not covered by any specific promise, but we are not left in ignorance of the will of God. When we are led out by the Holy Spirit to pray for any given object, we may do it in all confidence that it is God's will, and we shall get the very thing we desire. This passage was not put into the Bible in order that we might introduce "ifs" into our prayer, but in order that we might throw our "ifs" to the winds and have confidence, knowing that we have the petitions which we have asked of Him.

A MOMENTOUS QUESTION.

One of the most impressive gatherings of the mission was undoubtedly that of Monday evening, when Dr. Torrey made a powerful appeal to the unconverted from the searching question, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation" (Heb. ii. 3). With an earnestness that mightily moved his audience, the speaker set forth the folly and guilt of neglecting the salvation which God has sent through His Son Jesus Christ. With telling urgency the evangelist pleaded that if God had only spoken through prophets and angels the message would have had a right to claim our attention, but when, in infinite condescension, He gives His own Son to proclaim the salvation purchased by the outpouring of His own life, how great must be the condemnation of him who neglects the only means of escape from the sinner's doom.

The impression made by the speaker's impassioned words was deepened by a solo from Mr. Alexander, "Give me thy heart, says the Father above." The appeal was not in vain, for many signified their desire to surrender to Christ, and passed into the inquiry room.

Foreign Mission Week.

CANNIBALS RESCUED FROM CANNIBALS.

I WANT to tell you the story of a good man who has just died on the island of Tongoa, in the New Hebrides, far away in the South Seas. His name was Maripau, and though brought up in dark heathenism, he had been a devoted Christian for over twenty years. He belonged to one of the most important families on the island, and was among the early converts to Christianity.

Tongoa is a small island in what is known as the Shepherd Group, and is upwards of twenty square miles in extent. The Gospel was first preached to its inhabitants in 1879 by Rev. Oscar Michelsen, whom God has spared till this day. When in England, a few years ago, Mr. Michelsen told the story of his work, and rejoiced to declare that the island was no longer heathen; many of the people were decided Christians, and those who were not so, had been weaned from tribal wars and disputings, also from the cannibal feasts and cruel practices of former times.

Among the first converts of the Mission was Manambalea, the chief of a village named Selembanga. His two brothers also became Christians, and right earnest ones too. One of these was Maripau, whom I have already mentioned; and I confine my attention to him because his remarkable career has now come to a glorious end. Those who want to know of his wonderful brother, Manambalea, should read Mr. Michelsen's very interesting book, Cannibals Won for Christ."*

Tongoa lies to the south of a larger island named Epi, and in 1881 sad news reached the mission house. For generations two of the villages on Epi had been at war, and by degrees the weaker tribe was being eaten up by the stronger. Not merely conquered in war, but eaten up! Without delay the chief Manambalea was sent to fetch away such as remained of the people of the weaker village, and Maripau and his other brother accompanied him. Two boat-loads were brought to Tongoa—about two-thirds of the remnant, which numbered about forty, all told. As it was impossible, on account of the weather, for the small boats to touch the rocky shores of Epi, the rescuers had to swim through a rapid current, and in right desperate circumstances to bring men and women and children to a place of safety among Christian Tongoans.

While the work of rescue was being effected, Maripau took up residence with the poor, timid people. His presence was a comfort and protection to them—for the most part old women and children. It was not an easy or pleasant task that he assumed. In due time, some warriors from the stronger village turned up, and called upon him to explain his action. The brave fellow faced the enemy boldly:—

"You do not know us," he said; "we are the people of God. Now God loves people, even those whom you are destroying; therefore we have come to take them away and care for them."

The leader of the savage company showed an angry spirit at this, but Maripau was not afraid. His trust was in God, so he said, "Remember, I am God's man. You may shoot me if you like; but if you do, you fight against God."

The spokesman of the cannibal tribe remarked: "You say you are God's man, and love men. Why, then, do you carry that gun in your hand?"

This put Maripau in a difficulty. He replied: "We are all accustomed to carrying guns. But you need not suppose that I have any intention of shooting you." With that, he threw the weapon to the ground.

Realizing that the situation was critical, Maripau quietly made his way back to Tongoa, in the hope of hastening on the work of rescue. By sea and land he hazarded many dangers, and he had the joy of achieving his end. Without delay—the sea having become more calm in the meantime—along with his two brothers he returned to Epi, and completed the grand deliverance.

It was a splendid deed all round, and Maripau had a noble part in it. It is a pleasure to add that the rescued tribe remained in Manambalea's village of Selembanga for several years; many of them became true Christians, all of them entered into civilized modes of life. The missionary took the earliest opportunity of placing teachers in the midst of the cannibal tribe on Epi, and by-and-by these people likewise became peaceable and happy, some of them owning Jesus Christ as their Lord and Saviour. What then? Why this—they asked if their old neighbours might return to Epi! In due course this was allowed, and the friendly relations of human sympathy were sanctified by Christian fellowship and love. Needless to say, these events made a deep impression on the people of other villages on the island of Epi, where the Gospel has since made much progress, to the great encouragement of the missionaries.

In a letter received a few days ago, Mr. Michelsen reports the death of Maripau. Having all along thought his action most brave and noble, I received the news as if it related to an old and dear friend. For many years Maripau was an energetic worker, ready to go anywhere or do anything for Christ. He loved all who loved the Lord. When he realized that his end was near, he sent for his son, also a devoted Christian, and after praying for the missionary (who was away in New Zealand) he said: "Now, son, pray for me." As his son was praying, the old man fell asleep. The son was greatly grieved; a few days later, however, his turn came, and he too fell asleep in Jesus. In reporting these sad losses, Mr. Michelsen adds that "Manambalea is still working as hard as ever."

This story shows the power of the Gospel in a marvellous manner. All the natives I have named were cannibals less than a quarter of a century ago; but, coming to know the light of the Gospel, they made the little island of Tongoa a place of peace and joy. Let us pray that in other lands the advance of the Kingdom of Christ may be attended with the same evidences of the grace and goodness of God.

An Evening with Chinese Missions (Isa. xlix. 8-12, 22-25).

THE Arabians and others have called China Sin, Sen, or Tchin (12); and so the name has become current. It was not originally used by the Chinese of themselves.

In this remarkable chapter of Isaiah the Messiah is depicted as turning from the Jews, who had rejected Him, to the Gentiles. In one of his most memorable sermons Paul quoted v. 6 with terrible emphasis (Acts xiii. 47). The rejection of Christ by the Jews, as is narrated throughout the Acts of the Apostles, was the opening of the door of Hope and Faith to the Gentiles. The casting away of Israel led to the reconciling of the world (Rom. xi.) Ultimately, without doubt, the receiving back of the chosen people will lead to yet more blessed results, when Hebrew missionaries shall go out into all the world. Perhaps these passages will never be fulfilled in all their significance until then.

In the meanwhile, it cannot be denied that the results of Chinese Missions are amongst the most satisfactory fruits of modern missionary enterprise. Well may we say that God has made His mountains a way (11), i.e., that He has so contrived it that the difficulties which threatened to make the evangelization of China impossible have been levelled, and have even contributed to the progress of the Gospel.

1. We must go back to the Opium War (1842), which first opened the great sealed empire to Christianity. It was an iniquitous war, of which Great Britain has every reason to be ashamed. Its intention was to force the Chinese to take Indian opium, in order to augment the revenue of the Indian Government. We succeeded in compelling them to do so, and to open certain treaty ports, at which Englishmen began to settle, and from which efforts were put forth to evangelize the surrounding districts. The name of Dr. Morrison (1782-1834) must always be associated with these early efforts. To his remarkable labours the first translation of the Bible must gratefully be attributed.

2. In 1860, at the close of our second war with China, a treaty was ratified, by which the whole of the vast empire was opened to Europeans. It was a memorable day when one-fifth of the human race was suddenly brought within the reach of Christianity. True an unspeakable wrong was committed that day when, with China lying helpless at our feet, we forced upon her most unwilling statesmen the acceptance of the vile opium traffic. (Endeavourers, never rest until our Government is forced to recede from this accursed trade, which is still maintained!) Still, it was a memorable day when some 300,000,000 of the human family became accessible to the Gospel.

3. Our thought goes back to those early pioneers—W. C. Burns, who after a period of successful evangelistic work in Scotland, went out to spend thirty years in China, dying there finally amongst strangers; Lockhart, the pioneer of Medical Missions; Medhurst, Milne, and many others, whose names are inscribed on the foundations of Chinese evangelization.

We always think of Hudson Taylor, the beloved founder of the China Inland Mission, who, when quite young, was intimate with W. C. Burns. In those far-away days he heard God saying to him, "I am going to evangelize inland China, and if you will walk with Me, I will do it through you." He went out in 1853, but in 1865 he says, "The awful realization was burned into my very soul that a million a month in China were dying without God." Week after week the conflict went on, until at last the pressure upon mind and soul became so intense that sleep almost forsook him, and it seemed as though reason must fail. The thought of China's millions was always before his soul, till at last he rolled it back on God, and dared to believe that He would find workers and funds. Out of this sprang the C.I.M. with 750 missionaries and workers.

4. We can never forget the recent awful massacres and martyrdoms, which shows that the seed sown was of the good old sort of which martyrs have always been produced. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTE.

With the January issue, the Church of England Endeavourer appears as a sixteen-page periodical. Its columns give much interesting information concerning the movement in the Established Church, as well as numerous items concerning the progress of C.E. generally, while attention is given to missions.

"In School and Playground," by G. E. Morgan, M.A. Rev. Carey Bonner, of the Sunday School Union, writes: "Bright and thoroughly up-to-date; precisely of the kind that young people appreciate, being all short, pithy, and thoroughly interesting." (1s. Morgan and Scott.)

Paul at Athens (Acts xvii. 22-34).

Golden Text—Acts xvii. 18.

"WHEN they persecute you in one city, flee ye into another." Paul had preached to the idolaters of Lystra, the rough mountaineers of Pisidia; he had suffered from the superstitious at Philippi, and the persecuting Jews of Thessalonica. Now, again, as a fugitive he escaped from Berea, and took refuge in Athens, the centre of Greek culture, "the mother of arts and eloquence," the city of 3,000 idols. While waiting there for his fellow-workers, zeal for the honour of his Lord impelled him to proclaim the risen Christ, the Son of the living God, amid the lifeless formalism of that apparently devotional city.

In the (1) Synagogue first, to a few devout Jews and proselytes. In the (2) Market, to Epicureans (those who counted the pleasures of the body to be the chief happiness of life). The Stoics (those who gloried in the pleasures of the mind. Fatalists). The newsmongers (v. 21). They called Paul a "babbler" (a bird who frequented the market-place to pick up spilt seed), a picker-up and retailer of scraps of knowledge without sense or aim (Matt. x. 25). By invitation (3) On Mars Hill, a rocky height rising sixty feet above the valley of the market-place, with seats cut in the rock, whereon sat Paul's congregation.

The court of the Areopagus, an ancient and venerable tribunal of the greatest philosophers in Greece, celebrated throughout the country. Paul's learning, and training in early life came to his aid. His tact and courage were equal (vv. 23-25, 29). He did not point to hideous idols made by savage tribes, but to some of the finest monuments of idolatry the world has ever possessed.

Paul's Sermon to the Men of Athens.

1. The Unknown God revealed; to introduce another god in Athens punishable by death.

2. The Creator of Man (John i. 3); man not to make his god to worship.

3. The Creator of the Universe (Job xxxviii. and xxxix.); not located in temples built of earth.

4. The Creator Spirit (Gen. ii. 7). Our spirit, breath, and life are from Him (Job xxxii. 9).

5. God is a Spirit.—He seeketh the worship of the Spirit, not body (John iv. 22, 23). Cain brought the labour of his hands, Abel brought the type of Christ (John xiv. 6; Eph. ii. 12).

6. God is the Ruler of our lives and destinies (Job xiv. 5 and viii. 5); not fate or chance.

7. God is the Sustainer of men (Heb. i. 3; Job xxxiv. 14, 15).

As God's offspring man cannot worship any below Him; not an image made by human hands, however beautiful (Numb. xxvii. 16; John i. 4).

The sermon led up to Jesus and the Resurrection. The longsuffering of God. Till the Light came (John viii. 12; xii. 36; xv. 22; Rom. i. 17-25). The Day of Judgment appointed (Matt. xxv. 31-46). The Judge—the Lord Jesus Christ (Rom. ii. 16). The resurrection of Christ (Acts ii. 24).

Result of the Sermon.

Some mocked (Acts ii. 13); Jesus knew (Luke xviii. 32); some postponed, but courteously (Heb. ii. 3); some believed. One of the judges in the court.

Some hearts, some "humble spirits," in Athens gave "the Holy One" a temple in which to dwell. Read Isa. lvii. 15; John xiv. 23.

The Gospel Paul preached on Mar's Hill met the need of the cultured Greek as well as "the common people," and they heard Jesus gladly (Mark xii. 37).

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

SEEKING NEW THINGS.

Shortly before Christmas a curious sight may be witnessed in the neighbourhood of Houndsditch. Hundreds of street merchants, sellers of penny toys, wend their way to the East End and besiege a few wholesale shops where "something new" is always to be had. "Is there anything fresh?" is the constant question to the wholesale dealers, and immediately before Christmas the very latest toys are sold in the gutters of certain City thoroughfares. Here, surely, is a parable, not only of the people of Athens, but of men to-day in this, our own land. The cry now is, as at the time of the Apostle, for some new doctrine, some fresh religion, and people are as apt as ever to fly hither and thither after the very latest belief. Paul, in disputing, was determined not to know anything, save Christ Jesus and Him crucified and risen. Let us, with our hearts fixed on Him, seek for grace to say steadfastly—

On Christ, the solid Rock I stand,
All other ground is sinking sand.

A PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE.

There is an old man in India, a mutiny veteran, who treasures a stick that was given to him by General Nicholson, who laid down his life in regaining the city of Delhi. As he died, he handed the stick to the soldier, and asked that it might be seen by all the troops. "Be, as it were, myself," he continued, "so long as you hold my stick." Many people have since endeavoured to obtain possession of the relic, but to one and all the old man replies, "I must keep it, for he, the great Nicholson, gave it to me." The soldier has had a knowledge, not only of his general, but he has known him himself; hence his devotion. The Athenians were, for the most part, content to know of God, as of their idols. Paul urged them to know Him personally. Our head-knowledge of God may be excellent, but unless we have felt after Him, and found Him through Jesus, heard His voice and received from His hands the token of His love, we shall lack the burning zeal we desire (v. 27).

GOD WITHOUT A RIVAL.

In the recent Durbar at Delhi there was universal regret at the absence of the Emperor himself, the one in whose honour the whole ceremony was performed. The Viceroy and the Duke were representatives of the Imperial Monarch, to whom all the mighty chiefs and rulers of the Indian Empire bowed. Gorgeous as was the whole display, honour was paid by all to the Emperor King, and in like manner the Apostle Paul, standing among the learned philosophers of Athens, held up God and the risen Saviour, the Son of God, to be worshipped and adored, in preference to the many idols of the city. Many men to-day would willingly have God in the heart if their worldly idols could be retained as well. The Lord our God, however, is a jealous God, and if He enters the heart all idols must be dethroned and abandoned. God is not like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device (v. 29).

SMALL BEGINNINGS.

While to-day there are many thousands of Christians in the New Hebrides, it was not always so. In the early days of Dr. Paton's work there, a native Christian teacher was clubbed, nearly to death, by a heathen priest. The missionary pleaded with the convert to remain in the shelter of the mission house; but the native replied, "When I see them thirsting for my blood, I just see myself when the missionary first came to my island. I desired to murder him, and they now desire to kill me. Had the missionary stayed away because of the danger, I should have remained a heathen; but he continued to teach us, until, by the grace of God, I was changed to what I am now." The poor fellow, it may be added, was afterwards clubbed to death, and his last words ran, "Lord, forgive them, for they know not what they do." As in the South Seas, so in Athens. At first there were but certain men who clave to Paul and believed (v. 34), though later the Gospel spread throughout the whole of the then known world.

Union in Prayer.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN,"

—I should like to suggest to my fellow-readers of The Christian, that while it is highly desirable that we should do what we can to extend its circulation, there is yet another duty which possibly we have not thought of. The Christian differs, as it seems to me, from almost all other religious periodicals. It is a distinctly evangelistic enterprise, even though it may, and must, be conducted on business principles. If that be so, it is surely the duty of those who read and profit by it week by week to pray the Divine blessing upon it.

Let us unite, brethren, in asking for those who have the heavy responsibility of conducting the paper a rich endowment of the spiritual wisdom which they need. Let us pray that The Christian may go forth on its weekly mission with the abundant blessing of God, and that it may be more useful than ever heretofore in the comforting and strengthening of believers, and in attracting wanderers to the fold. And, as a proposal of this kind is nothing if not definite, may I further suggest that Saturday evening should be the time fixed upon to unite our supplications?—Yours in the Faith, An Old Disciple.

Personalia.

It is announced in "Footsteps of Truth" that Miss Beatrice Hurditch, who has been labouring as a missionary in India, is returning to this country under medical orders for a much-needed season of rest.

We learn with much satisfaction that, through the blessing of God, Miss Charlotte Mason (of the House of Rest) is making progress towards convalescence. She is not yet able to leave her room, but her strength is gradually increasing.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

MOTHERWELL.

THE long-anticipated visit of Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones to Motherwell began on Friday, January 8, under the most discouraging weather conditions. It was probably the worst evening we had all the winter. For all that we had capital meetings. The lesser town hall was crowded with friends to welcome the temperance evangelists, and a little later the large hall (which seats 1,200) was, if not crowded, at least well filled for the first meeting of the campaign.

Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones "caught on" at once; that was the only meeting of the series at which the large hall was not completely filled. Both the speaking and the singing were of a character quite different from anything that had been anticipated. Dr. Henry's forceful eloquence, his command of facts, his power of pressing these home on the common mind by illuminative illustration, and, above all, his high-toned appeal to Christian motive in all his addresses, drew the people as soon as they heard him, while the soul and meaning Mr. Jones threw into his rendering of the simplest pieces reached their hearts at once, and they could never get enough of his singing.

At a school children's meeting, on the Saturday afternoon, Dr. Henry enlisted the services of many active young workers, who have all the week been coming to us for more pledge-books. On the Lord's Day, Dr. Henry twice occupied the pulpit, and had congregations that filled two of the largest churches in the town. The evening gathering in the parish church was specially remarkable, as large numbers could not find admission. In the afternoon he addressed a P.S.A. of men only, in the town hall, and afterwards described it as one of the finest meetings of young men he had ever seen. He had a corresponding meeting with women in the Christian Institute on Monday afternoon.

YOUNG HELPERS ENLISTED.

It is unnecessary to describe in detail the first three evening meetings of the week in the Town Hall, for they had all the same characteristics—crowded audiences, rapt attention to the speaking, delighted appreciation of the solo singing, and a turn of busy pledge-signing ere the meeting was brought to a close. It may be stated that in the course of the campaign Dr. Henry secured 929 new signatures to the pledge during the time of the meetings, and that a still greater number, which there has not been time yet to reckon up, was secured by the young people throughout the town.

The concluding lecture, however, was the most memorable of the gatherings, for then the interest reached its climax; and there was deep feeling as Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones left to catch their train, while the crowded meeting was singing, "God be with you till we meet again." It was evident that the parting was with much regret on both sides.

Dr. Henry's visit has made a deep impression on our town, and been the means of a great revival, not of temperance sentiment alone, but of Christian feeling. Multitudes of God's people are in consequence of it realizing more fully than ever they did before their own and the Church's responsibility with reference to the tremendous evils of drink. Needless to say, the temperance workers of the town are all greatly encouraged by the success of the campaign; and they realize that they have a great but happy labour before them in doing their utmost to follow up the mission and secure its fruits.

The Late Mr. Quintin Hogg.

A STRIKINGLY sudden home-call came to Mr. Quintin Hogg last Saturday morning, and a prominent figure is missing from among the philanthropists of London. Mr. Hogg was in his fifty-eighth year, but he has left behind a marvellous record of good work during a career cut short apparently at the zenith of its usefulness. He was the son of a distinguished Anglo-Indian, Sir James Weir Hogg, M.P., the brother of the late Lord Magheramorne. Educated at Eton, Mr. Hogg was a noted leader in the athletic field, being well known as captain for seven years of the Old Etonians' Football Club.

His Christian and philanthropic earnestness showed itself while he was yet a boy. At fifteen he started a Bible-class, and was laughed at by some of the Etonians. But the support of such contemporaries as the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham and the present Lord Kinnaird did much to strengthen his hands. At seventeen he began to take a practical interest in the welfare of his less fortunate brethren. The boot-blacks and newspaper-sellers of the Metropolis stood very much in need of such a friend, but there was a great gulf between them and the class to which he belonged. Not to be beaten, he bought a shoeblack's outfit, clothed himself in rags, and lived in all respects the life of a shoeblack. It is said that he once blacked his own father's boots quite unknown to that gentleman. Having gained a footing, no time was lost in starting Christian classes for the benefit of the lads.

The story of what Mr. Hogg has been privileged to do for the young in and through the Polytechnic is one of surpassing interest. Every side of the boy nature was appealed to. Athletics and mechanical training took their places alongside English education. Above all, the service of God was the great aim. So absolutely free were the services from anything like sectarianism that Roman Catholics and Jews were to be found mixed up with others on the benches.

Mr. Hogg slept last Friday night at the Polytechnic. Before retiring, he was bidding good-bye to a boy, and, remarking that it was a cold night, bade him put on his overcoat. When he found the lad did not possess one, Mr. Hogg would not allow him to leave till an attendant had been sent out to purchase the desirable garment. The act was typical of the life. He was the succourer of many. Next morning he had passed to the presence of the King. His life was spent in the service of the struggling, helping those who by-and-by were able to help themselves and others. We hope in an early issue to give a sketch of his career, with portrait.

Mr. Henry Varley's Meetings.

THE protracted season of prayer which has been held by many of the ministers, evangelists, and workers at Aldersgate Street during the past month is bearing fruit. At Enfield Town Christian Mission, at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, at the Y.M.C.A., Queen's Road, Bayswater, Mr. Varley has been speaking with marked acceptance and success, large numbers being arrested and impressed, whilst believers have been strengthened and sent on their way rejoicing.

The meeting for men only in the large baths, next to Whiteley's, was attended by hundreds, who heard the impressive lecture, and were held in rapt attention by the preacher's fearless and needed words. Despite the foggy and cheerless day on Sunday last, the Conference Hall, Stratford, was the scene of two interesting services. Mr. Varley states how much they were encouraged, not only by the attendance for such a day, but by the cordial interest in the evening service. Large numbers of men were present, and the Word preached—dealing with the regeneration of Saul of Tarsus—was "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power."

In view of other special meetings to be held in the Corn Exchange, Rochester, Snodland, and the Conference Hall, Stratford, on Sunday, 25th inst., and on Thursday, 29th, Mr. Varley asks for special and fervent prayer. Adopting the Apostle's words in an appeal, he writes:—"And pray for me also, that utterance may be given unto me that I may know how to open my mouth boldly to make known the mystery of the Gospel."

Aldersgate Noon Meeting.

THE Monday noon prayer meetings at Aldersgate Y.M.C.A. are increasing in spiritual fervour and usefulness. Large companies of evangelists and other Christian workers assemble week by week, and there are many signs that this long-established gathering is renewing its youth.

On Monday last Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield (vicar of St. James-the Less, Bethnal Green) brought a timely message on John i. 42. His subject was "Spiritual Fruitfulness," and he pointed out that in the case of Andrew leading his brother to the Lord, it was fruit (1) from an ordinary, everyday man; (2) from one who had just been in communion with Christ; (3) the result of speaking but one sentence; (4) from an interview with one individual; (5) in the home; (6) by a man himself brought to the Lord only that day. Thus, Andrew was looking unto Jesus, following Jesus, abiding in Jesus, acknowledging Jesus, bringing another to Jesus.

The subsequent season of testimony, praise, and prayer, which is so interesting a feature of the noon meeting, afforded opportunity for many cheery words from workers. Mr. Chas. Cook, Mr. Ned Wright, and other friends took part, and Mr. Henry Varley expressed some helpful thoughts on the lines suggested by Mr. Watts-Ditchfield, urging the duty of personal work, and emphasizing the importance of seeking to win souls, not only in large gatherings, but one by one. Mr. John Lampard, who sails to-day (Thursday) to resume his work among the Gonds and other aboriginal tribes of India, led in prayer; and the meeting was concluded with further intercession by the chairman, Mr. R. C. Morgan. Friends who are in the City during the day should assuredly seek opportunity to attend this noon meeting. It is held daily (except Saturdays), and, as many are aware, the Monday gathering is a special "rally" of toilers in the Master's vineyard.

Irish Notes.

THE First Presbyterian Church, Armagh, on the first Sunday in January takes up a collection which is divided over all the missions of the denomination. This year the collection was made as usual, and amounted to £472, being the largest sum ever contributed by the congregation on a similar occasion.

The Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland which began over fifty years ago as an inter-denominational Society, and which owed its inception to the late Rev. L. E. Berkeley, of Lurgan, is still carrying on its beneficent work. It employs nine colporteurs, who are labouring in various parts of the country, and according to the report presented to the Executive Committee last week by Rev. Wm. Salmond, secretary, these were never more successful than at present, neither were the sales ever more satisfactory.

A memorial has been presented to the Board of Trinity College, Dublin, urging the desirability of opening the teaching examinations and degrees of the College to women students. There are now over seven hundred lady graduates in Ireland, and considering the facilities granted to women to obtain degrees in the London and various other universities at home and abroad, it is hardly considered creditable to Trinity College to have hitherto shown itself so unwilling to concede this privilege.

Reissue of Puritan Literature.—We have much pleasure in calling attention to issues of the Puritan Library, comprising a series of reprints. The two volumes now before us are Robert Asty's Rejoicing in the Lord, and John Bunyan's Come and Welcome to Jesus Christ (1s. each), which have been produced in attractive form, with good bold type. A suitable companion is the first number of The Puritan Quarterly (6d. net). Mr. Percy W. Heward is to be heartily congratulated on his editorship, and on the excellent thought which lies behind the whole movement. If the large circulation which the publications deserve can be attained, the result will be the building up of readers in sound doctrine. It will be a great surprise to many to find what a mine of wealth they have been passing by. (W. G. Wheeler & Co.) Mr. Heward is willing to accept engagements as a lecturer on Puritan subjects. Address, 14, Pier Head, Wapping, E.

Church of England.

At a meeting held in Manchester, on Monday, it appeared that fifty-seven parishes are at present waiting for help from the Church Pastoral Aid Society. The Bishop of Manchester based his plea for more adequate support on the fact that the funds were mainly expended in the central parishes of the great cities. A regular income of £70,000 is required to meet present requirements.

In response to an appeal from his parishioners at Liscard, Rev. J. B. Sayer has decided to decline the living of Bidston, recently offered to him by the Bishop of Chester.

Congregational.

A series of Thursday midday services has been inaugurated at the Grosvenor Street Independent Chapel, Piccadilly, Manchester. Rev. Dr. Goodrich gave the first of the addresses.

Rev. R. F. Franks, M.A., formerly of Mansfield College, Oxford, has commenced his ministry at Swan Hill Church, Shrewsbury, in succession to Rev. E. W. Lewis, M.A., now of Grafton Square, London. The services were of a bright and hearty character, and were attended by good congregations.

The reports presented at the annual meeting of Castle Street Church, Tredegar, showed that thirty-two new members have been admitted during the year. The membership now stands at 232, with 430 Sunday scholars. The income for last year was £626. All the organizations of the church were reported to be in a flourishing condition.

The annual congregational meeting of Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, was held last week. There was a large attendance. Rev. Dr. Leach (pastor) presided. The secretary (Mr. W. M. Wharton) in his annual report stated that there are about 600 seat-holders on the books, and that there is much cause for thankfulness in the year's work. The reports from the various societies show that all are active and doing good work.

Baptist.

Of the £250,000 promised to the Twentieth Century Fund, upwards of £217,000 has been received.

Rev. George Wainwright is meeting with much encouragement in his work at Crewkerne. Conversions are frequent, and the prayer meetings full of praise.

The Baptist Union has received from the Derby Baptist Union an official invitation to hold its autumn assembly at Derby from Monday, October 5, to Friday, the 9th.

At Commercial Road Church, Oxford, the first anniversary services in connection with the settlement of Rev. Christopher Potter have been held. At the public meeting reports were read from the various agencies of the church, which showed very satisfactory progress.

Old Westgate Chapel, Bradford, which has passed into private hands, has been secured for Sunday services as the headquarters of the Bradford Baptist Central Mission. Rev. A. C. Perriam has, for the time being, been appointed organizing secretary. At the opening Sunday evening service some 600 persons were present at the evangelistic service.

The annual meeting of the Putney Baptist Church (Rev. F. J. Feltham) has just been held under gratifying circumstances. Fifty persons were received into membership during the year, and through the mercy of God the treasurer was able to report that in answer to prayer all the money needed for carrying on the work of the different organizations of the church had been provided, also a sum of £400 towards the liquidation of the debt.

Anniversary services were held at the Clarence Park Baptist Church, Weston-super-Mare, January 5 and 6. The secretary writes:—"The statistics for the first year of our existence reveal a condition that is truly gratifying, and exceed the most sanguine anticipations. The Church was organized on December 15, 1901, by Rev. R. Venting, our pastor, with forty-nine members, and fifty-eight have been added during the year, making a total membership of 107. This growth is represented by spiritual and financial strength."

Methodist.

Rev. Vallance C. Cook, of Dalston, has commenced a series of Sunday evening services in the Hackney Empire Theatre, N.E. This is a large and handsome building. The services begin at 8.15. There is a choir of 100, an orchestral band, and special soloists. The venture is a bold one, as Mr. Vallance Cook is personally responsible for an expenditure of £100.

A Circuit Convention has been held by Seaham Harbour Primitive Methodists at the Tempest Place Church for the purpose of deepening the spiritual life of the members. In the afternoon an address full of thought was delivered by Mr. W. Stirling, on "The Nature and Characteristics of a Revival." This was followed by a discussion, several of the members and officials taking part. A public meeting was held in the evening, when earnest addresses were given. A consecration meeting followed.

Presbyterian.

Rev. P. Carmichael is to be invited to take charge of the Enfield congregation for a further three months.

Rev. Archibald Fleming, of Pont Street Scottish Church, S.W., is making steady progress towards recovery.

The church at Huddersfield is making good progress under the ministry of Rev. E. Ritchie. He was inducted at the beginning of October, the membership then being fifty-seven. Since that time over fifty members have been added, only five of whom have brought certificates from other churches in Huddersfield. Rev. John McNeill (who has been conducting a mission in the town under the auspices of the Free Church Council) recently took a Sunday afternoon service, when the building was crowded.

Mr. Thomas Payne has been conducting some helpful services in the Gay Street Mission Hall, Liverpool. Meetings for the deepening of spiritual life were held on New Year's day. In these Mr. Payne was assisted by Mr. Charles Melton, of Wakefield.

The annual New Year prayer meeting, arranged by the Women's Total Abstinence Union, was held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday, January 14. Sister Constance, of the Baptist Deaconess Mission, and Mrs. Donald Campbell, of Streatham, presided, and inspiring addresses were delivered by Revs. R. Harriss Lloyd and Alex. Connell.

The West London Open-Air Gospel Mission is being carried on with much encouragement by Mr. Harold St. John (116, Elgin Crescent, Notting Hill, W.) and a number of workers. This is the eighth year of the Mission. The meetings have been well attended, and many who have been brought to the Lord are working for Him. Indoor gatherings are also held. The Mission has recently suffered the loss of its founder, Mr. James J. Salmon (or "New Jim," as he loved to be called), who suddenly passed away on Thursday last while on his way to an open-air meeting during a mission at Batley, Yorks. Mr. Salmon was formerly well known as a betting man and pugilist; since his conversion at St. James' Hall, fifteen years ago, he had laboured devotedly for the Lord. He leaves a wife and six young children to be cared for.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. JAMES HENRY BARBER, of the Society of Friends, aged eighty-three. He was an earnest temperance worker, and an ardent adult school teacher. The Sheffield Adult School, one of the most prosperous in the country, was started by him with three scholars in 1845. At the present time it has over 1,500 members on the books. Largely through his efforts a good many of the scholars became members of Sheffield meeting, where he was a minister.—Mr. CHARLES D. DENNY, senior deacon of Bloomsbury Chapel, E.C. Mr. Denny joined the church so far back as 1859. He was for twenty years a deacon, and previously for fourteen years an elder of the church. He visited among the poor of the district for a period of thirty-five years. At the Spring Sessions of the Baptist Union, regularly held at Bloomsbury Chapel, he was practically the host on behalf of the church, and thus became very well known throughout the denomination.—Mrs. WALLACE, wife of Rev. Hugh C. Wallace, minister of the David Thomas Memorial Church, Bristol, and sister of Dr. Horton, of Hampstead. Mrs. Wallace had only been married two years and nine months.—A heavy sorrow has fallen upon Dr. Alexander Mackennal, of Bowden, by the death of Mrs. Mackennal, after about six weeks' illness.—Wesleyan Methodism has lost a highly-esteemed minister by the death of Rev. WILLIAM E. CODLING. He laboured in many of the leading London and provincial circuits, and his superintendency of the Great Queen Street circuit, London, was especially fruitful.—At Rysland, Newton Mearns, N.B., on the 13th inst., JAMES OSBORNE, J.P., aged eighty-four years, husband of Alice Todd Osborne, who has been used of God so signally and widely in connection with work among soldiers.—Mr. JOSEPH GEORGE ROE, a valued helper at Waterloo Workman's Hall Mission, Andover, on Tuesday last week, as a result of a cycle accident.

BLIND and DESERTED.

It seems difficult to believe that such inhumanity could exist as is told in the following case to hand:

"There is a sad case of a blind young girl at J——, She is very delicate, and quite unable to earn sufficient to maintain herself. The friends who have assisted her since her desertion (by both parents), are no longer able to continue their help to the same extent as they have done."

Contributions to help this and many other cases we are interested in will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Mr. W. H. Jude in Oswestry.

COMMENCING on January 11, Mr. W. H. Jude conducted a six days' mission in the Public Hall and Wesleyan Church, Oswestry. Much interest was evinced in local musical circles. A splendid choir under the conductorship of Mr. John Roberts rallied round Mr. Jude at every meeting, listening with earnest attention to the speaker's strong appeal for consecrated service in the musical department of public worship. On the Friday evening Mr. Jude gave "His Life Story," with numerous and pathetic extracts from his "Music and the Higher Life."

The Boy Preacher.

During the last fortnight we in Sheffield have had the privilege of listening to the "Boy Preacher," Mr. Jack Cooke. Every week night the Temperance Hall has been filled, and each Sunday morning, afternoon, and night the Empire Theatre, capable of holding 2,500 people, has been packed from floor to ceiling, hundreds being unable to gain admission. The interest evinced by these vast audiences from start to finish of the address has been most impressive, and up to Friday night upwards of 250 persons have passed through the inquiry-room and professed conversion.

The audiences were composed largely of men, and with a large proportion of young men. Mr. Cooke in every address left no doubt on the minds of hearers as to his own deep conviction and earnest belief in the atonement and the finished work of Christ, and pressed home the necessity for whole-hearted service for Christ. The poverty and weakness of man and the all-sufficiency of Christ Jesus, these run through all his discourses. Christians especially have been blessed. The meetings are continued throughout the week, and conclude on Sunday night. J. W. Schofield.

Chas. E. Barraclough at Sheffield.

We have just been favoured with a "return visit" of Mr. Chas. E. Barraclough to the Brightside Primitive Methodist Church, Sheffield. The second visit has been even more richly blessed than the first, and we have had quite a revival.

The attendances were good from the start, and increased as the mission proceeded, until on the last night of the special effort the place was full.

Mr. Barraclough both sang and preached, and his rendering of "Will there be any stars in my crown?" moved all hearts. The evangelist also introduced and sung "The Glory Song." God seems to be in this song. Not a few on this occasion pressed into the kingdom.

There has been a wonderful work of grace among the young men. Night after night they came boldly forward and, having believed in their hearts, confessed by a definite act of dedication their intention to follow the Master.

The testimony meeting was a refreshing time, and it did one's heart good to hear those who had "passed from darkness to light" upon the evangelist's "first visit" get up and tell how that the intervening years had been "the best in all their experience."

We all regretted when the services finished, and other engagements carried our friend from us to labour in other fields. Our prayers will go with him, and we shall hope he may be led to return here for "a third visit." (Rev.) Frederick Jeffs, Minister.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Stourbridge.

The various Free Churches of Stourbridge have just united in a ten days' mission, which was conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane. While his visit was looked forward to and worked for by a little band of earnest Christians, the churches did not seem to realise the importance of their undertaking as they ought to have done, hence the start was not so cheering for the missioner as could have been desired. However, after several meetings of real hard work on the part of Mr. Lane and a willing band of workers, the spiritual tide began to rise, and the blessings to descend. Larger companies gathered, and many went away with consciences moved and hearts convicted of sin. During the later meetings about fifty persons of all sorts and conditions manifested a desire to live the new life and to serve the Lord Jesus Christ. Perhaps one of the greatest blessings accruing from the mission is that members of churches have themselves been aroused, and there is much evidence of a quickened religious life. Gratitude is due to, and bestowed upon, Mr. Mr. Lane by the organisers of the mission for his willingness and earnestness in the work, and thanks are rendered unto God for His manifold blessings. Of the meetings themselves, a word or two may be said. On the Friday night Mr. Lane gave his popular lecture on "Bunyan and the 'Pilgrim's Progress,'" illustrated by fifty fine lantern views. There was a large attendance on this occasion, and also at all the succeeding meetings. On the Sunday a men's meeting was held in the afternoon, and much enthusiasm was evinced. At night the large Town Hall was full to overflowing, and at the closing meeting on Monday evening, when Mr. Lane gave an account of his conversion and experience in the Guards, there was scarcely a seat to be obtained. It is to be hoped that the spirit of reviving, which has made itself felt, will continue to work, and that the effects of the mission will be seen for a long time to come. C.

Mr. Chas. E. Barraclough has been with us at the Seamen's Bethel, Hull. He spoke with power; several seamen who attended the services throughout professed Christ, and also several residents. We thank God for our brother's visit. A. J. Maclean.

Rev. R. Venting has just concluded a successful series of Gospel addresses to men only at the Y.M.C.A., Weston-super-Mare, January 11-18, which were attended by nearly a thousand men. The addresses powerfully appealed to the hearts and consciences of the hearers, the result being that a goodly number of young men enlisted under the banner of the Cross.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr has just concluded a very encouraging mission at Fountain Road, Hull (second circuit Primitive Methodist). Four churches united, and the mission was well sustained. The Sunday evening services were crowded, very powerful, and yielded the largest results. Over 100 names were registered, and at the temperance lecture on "The Down Line" eighty-six pledges were secured. The Church has been graciously quickened.

Blessing is attending the nightly services held by Mr. L. Weaver at Barnsbury Chapel, N. The congregations are increasing, as also are the number of decisions for the Master. On Sunday of last week Mr. Weaver gave an address on the subject of publicly confessing Christ and its attendant blessings, and in response to his appeal more than a score openly so confessed Him for the first time, quite apart from a goodly number who went into the inquiry room, among whom were a number of young men. J. H.

It is with very deep gratitude we return thanks to God for encouragement at Barnsbury Chapel. Night by night, in spite of the inclement weather, the numbers have increased, until, on Sunday evening last, a large company gathered to hear the simple and plain Gospel address on, "Awake, thou that sleepest." A remarkable case was related by a sister who told us that she asked her brother to come with her to the service, but he refused, so she came alone. Afterwards she found that he came to the outside of the chapel, and was persuaded by a worker to enter. Within a few minutes of entering he accepted Christ. F. C. Pallett.

Master Fritz P. Wood has just concluded a fortnight's mission at Cootham. Wet weather during the first week prevented a great many from attending; but after that numbers increased night by night, the Lord manifestly working, and several being added to the Lord; one notable case of blessing was that of a young woman, very worldly and gay. One night, after attending the service, she went home, but not to rest, for conviction had fasted upon her soul. That same night her mother dreamt that she could not sleep for anxiety of soul, and woke her husband to tell him, and at that very time (as it afterwards proved) she was in agony; the result was that she stood up in the closing meeting confessing Jesus as her new-found Saviour. Since Mr. Wood left twenty-eight Sunday scholars have come forward and confessed Jesus as their Saviour. Truly the Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." F. T. M.

Mr. J. Henry Brunton, of London, concluded a mission on Friday night at Athole Hall, South Shields. The meetings commenced with the annual New Year Christian Conference on January 2, which was largely attended by believers belonging to the town and surrounding district. On the following Sunday afternoon an address of an instructive and refreshing nature, dealing with some of the names and offices of the Lord Jesus, was given to Christians. Gospel services were held each night except Saturday. From the beginning there was evidence not only of interest, but, through grace, of real anxiety of soul. The addresses were characterized by a quiet, earnest pressing home of the truths of Scripture. Although sin and its bitter consequences here, with Divine and eternal retribution hereafter, was given great prominence to throughout, the numbers attending continued to increase until the close—the last meeting being crowded. A goodly number professed faith in Christ, and the many Christians who attended received much spiritual help. K.

A Gospel Temperance mission has been held at All Souls' Church, Langham Place, W. Among the speakers were Bishop Ingham, Canon Barker, the Bishop of London, and Rev. W. R. Mowll. In a preliminary letter to his parishioners Rev. F. S. Webster (rector) wrote:—"When whisky is drunk instead of afternoon tea, and ladies take champagne at their clubs before lunch, it is obvious that something can be done to promote temperance, even by those who shrink from the more Spartan remedy of total abstinence. We need not always be a drunken nation. The working people of our large cities need not always be exposed to the temptations and contaminations of our present public-house system. We need not always throw away £160,000,000 annually on a luxury which makes paupers and criminals by the thousand, and seriously retards the physical, commercial, and moral prosperity of the nation. Public opinion, which has become sadly apathetic since the conversion of so many of the great breweries into limited liability companies, needs to be aroused once more. The conscience of the church of Christ must be awakened. Temperance reform lies at the root of all the social questions pressing upon us to-day."

Unauthorized Insets. We thank our correspondents who have forwarded us copies of an inset enclosed in last week's issue. We need hardly say that this was done by newsagents, a custom which we regret our inability to prevent. No insets are enclosed in THE CHRISTIAN from this office except such as bear the words, "Supplement to THE CHRISTIAN" and the date of issue, and even this happens only about Christmas-time. Will our kind readers bear these facts in mind?

Getting Close to Men. The revelations of the London Church Census are resulting in a perfect crop of suggestions for filling the churches—many of them being novel. It is, therefore, worth while to call attention to the old-fashioned way of reaching people, i.e., by going where they are. Sermons would gain in compelling and attracting power, if they were born of direct and close contact with God and men. In London, particularly, pastoral work is difficult, and it has largely fallen into decay, but it is one of the great sources of strength. We all know men of no great ability as preachers, who have excellent congregations, and churches whose membership steadily increases. And almost invariably the explanation is to hand—"Mr. A. is not a great preacher, but he is such an excellent pastor!" If the lamentable facts now being brought to light help to quicken our pastors and teachers to a little more "spade-work" in the above direction, they will serve an excellent purpose.

A Successful Experiment. An interesting illustration of how people may be reached when Christians make up their minds to work, comes to us from Birmingham. A Methodist minister of that city had seen at the watch-night service a crowd of public-house frequenters and others, who attended that one service and no other. Acting on the assumption that if they came once they might come again, he held a special service for them at ten o'clock on Sunday evening. All the public-houses were visited, with the result that a large congregation of genuine non-churchgoers attended, and listened attentively to the Gospel preached and sung. Already fruit has appeared. Here is a case of the success of holy ingenuity. When once Christian people get a heart determined to win souls, God will honour their faith.

"Settlement Churches." The very able and practical paper on the Problem of the Mid-Town Church, read by Rev. J. H. French at the autumn meetings of the Baptist Union, is now issued as a penny pamphlet (16, Gray's Inn Road, W.C.). We are glad to see it in this form, for it deserves a careful reading by all who are haunted by the vision of deserted city churches. Mr. French pleads for "settlement" churches as distinct from the ordinary "settlement," so that the main object of the Church may be to the fore, while combined with the social and philanthropic work generally undertaken in settlements. We quote one sentence which opens up large possibilities:—

> We ought always to have in residence on, or near to, the church premises, consecrated men and women, some of them volunteers from the suburbs and country, to be eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, and healers of the broken in heart.

The number of paid workers must, in the nature of the case, be always limited, but there are hundreds of persons whose incomes are secured, who might bring joy to their own hearts and salvation to hundreds of others, if they would volunteer for work on these lines for the Saviour's sake.

Cultivate the Habit of Believing. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." If we fill our minds with the words, and precepts, and narratives, and promises of God, faith and hope and love must come. What is true physically, is also true spiritually. Two things cannot occupy the same space at the same time. When Satan injects an evil thought, let us turn our mind to a good one. If a worldly song comes like a thistle-seed floating into the mind, resolutely repeat to yourself a hymn—"Rock of Ages," "Jesu, Lover of my soul," or Psa. xxiii., or John iii. 16, and there is no room for the unholy thing.

Study the Word, Meditate upon it. "Meditate on these things (feed upon the Word of God, and the God of the Word will make His presence felt). Give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting may be manifest to all." The miserable weeds of morbid self-consciousness cannot grow, if the ground of the soul is fully occupied with the good seed of the Word of the Kingdom (Matt. xiii. 19). There is no such educational book as the Bible. It educates spirit and soul and body, informs, trains, and disciplines the whole man. To feel conscious that the infinite God, who made and keeps us, is speaking to us in His Word, that the ink is not dry with which it is written, that the warm breath of the Spirit who inspired and still inspires it, is warm upon our cheek as He whispers His words of love and power into our ear, is a joy which makes days of Heaven upon earth.

Only "with all saints." As each member of Christ's mystical body is a living person, as the spiritual house is built of living stones, so it is only as the members diligently endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, only as in spirit they are all with one accord in one place, only as they have one mind to make Jesus King, that the fulness of the Spirit can be unitedly received. Only "with all saints" can we know the love of Christ, which surpasseth knowledge; only as Christians love one another can the Church be a true witness-bearer in the Pentecostal power of the Holy Ghost.

On Systematic Giving. A posthumous article by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, on the duty of proportionate giving towards charities and religious objects, contains some shrewd and healthy advice. He says that, as a rule, > men have no idea how little they do give. Our constant tendency is greatly to exaggerate the amount of our contributions to Christian and philanthropic objects. I have known many instances in which men have been persuaded to keep a careful and correct account of all they have given to various Christian objects, and so far as my experience goes, after six months' experiments they have been amazed and distressed to discover how little they have contributed to entirely unselfish objects. If we could only persuade every Christian to keep a careful record of the amount of his income which he uses in this way, we should in numerous cases have achieved the end we have in view.

There is here much food for thought. It is not the most generous people who are conscious of their generosity, but vice versâ.

Inebriety as a Disease. One of the most welcome features of recent medical congresses and conferences is the prominent place given to the scientific study of drunkenness. Our readers will remember the manifesto issued by the International Congress, in which the action of alcohol was exposed to the public. The most weighty medical opinions in the world pronounced alcohol to be a poison, and drunkenness a disease. The meeting of the Society for the Study of Inebriety, held last week, devoted itself to the discussion of this one phase. It narrows the ground when drunkenness is removed from the category of capricious outbursts to that of a specific disease, resulting in brain and tissue degradation. The doctors plead, with reason, for more time in the treatment of drink victims, and also for natural conditions of life. Above all, distinctively Christian influences should be brought to bear; for it must never be forgotten that inebriety is a sin first, before it becomes a disease.

A Bishop's Warning. There is in the Bishop of Hereford's recent letter to his diocese a striking comment on the feeble hold, too often exhibited by men in power, on what should be dominant principles. The bishop finds ground in the present condition of things in England for grave questions as to the prospects of the nation and the Empire. In the prevalent materialism of the day, the fascination of wealth, the craving for pleasure and excitement, the growing luxury, and the secularisation of life in some classes—and, in others, a religious observance without the regenerating influence of religious motive—may be found a cause of decadence. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God"—in obedience to this command lies the real welfare of the Empire.

Child-Toilers. It is difficult to believe that so recently as a little over thirty years ago boys and girls of five years old were toiling in English mines and fields, in thousands of instances from 5 a.m. to 9 p.m., and walking miles to and from their work. Undoubtedly, thanks to Lord Shaftesbury, and the noble band of north-country working-men who preceded and followed him, much has been done to ameliorate the lot of the child labourer; but a great deal has yet to be effected, and, among other things, it remains to be enacted that children under eleven years of age shall not be employed in wage-earning toil. The public conscience has been awakened in regard to the little folk, and it is for Christians to direct it, both in the way of legislation and in that of efforts to quicken and develop the feeling of parental responsibility.

The Third Commandment. The organization on a large scale of a National Association for the Suppression of Bad Language points to the widespread development of an evil which certainly is a foul blot upon our civilization. The growth of the use of obscene and blasphemous language is not confined to the so-called lower orders, but is increasingly common in other classes of the community. Any repression of it will undoubtedly be a public benefit, and it is to be regretted that the existing law is not more frequently put in force against offenders. Meanwhile in this as in other evils the influence of the individual Christian should be brought to bear. Timely and kindly reproof would seldom be wasted, and certainly such admonition would afford an excellent way of witnessing for the Master.

Cunningly Devised Fables. Mr. George Augustus Sala once wrote that he found no fiction so amusing as Rev. Alban Butler's Lives of the (Romish) Saints. It would seem that the Pope has his doubts as to the veracity of some of these "amusing" legends, for he has now directed the appointment of a Commission to revise the "biographies and legends." These have to be examined with great care, and authentic particulars recently discovered have to be substituted. It would be an advantage if the whole collection were swept away, and replaced by the histories of the saints of God recorded in Holy Writ.

A Sceptic's Tribute. We occasionally hear pulpit reference to the late Professor Huxley as a strong opponent to Revelation, and as one who was unable to reconcile to any degree science and the Word of God. The following is even more worthy of prominence, and is certainly a remarkable testimony, coming from such a source :—

> I have been seriously perplexed to know by what practical measures the religious feeling, which is the essential basis of conduct. is to be kept up, in the present utterly chaotic state of opinion on these matters, without the use of the Bible. Take the Bible as a whole; make the severest deductions which fair criticism can dictate, and there remains a vast residuum of moral beauty and grandeur.
> Then consider the great historical fact that for three centuries this Book has been woven into the life of all that is best and noblest in English history, and is as familiar to noble and to simple as Dante and Tasso once were to Italians.
> By the study of what other book could children be so much humanized, and made to feel that each figure fills like themselves but a momentary space in the interval between two eternities, and earns the blessing or the curse of all time, according to its efforts to do good and hate evil, even as they also are earning their "payment for their work."

An Effete Romanism. Every day the evidence accumulates which points to the empty lifelessness of Romanism across the Channel. A writer in the December issue of the Monthly Review gives a very painful picture of the condition of things in France, so far as the Romanists are concerned; and, among other striking statements, he says :—

> Apart from the clergy, in France to-day the people are Catholic for every reason, except the all-sufficient one, of sincere belief, carried into practice. There is no enthusiasm in their profession of faith, which is the result of tradition or atavism. . . . There are still writers and artists who allow themselves to be dazzled by the mystical and historical treasures of Catholicism, but to all these religion is merely a matter of interest, fancy, or taste. We look in vain among them for the stuff of which martyrs are made.

Commenting upon this, the (Roman) Catholic Times has the candour to say—although urging that the writer has left out some good traits which undoubtedly exist—that "this severe criticism of French Catholics . . . is on the whole correct, and need scarcely be doubted."

Christianity v. Mohammedanism. Some disquieting remarks have recently gone the round of the Press about the success of Islam in making converts. A writer in the Spectator has put this fact in its true light. Granted that 60,000 converts are made to Mohammedanism annually among Eastern nations (which is a purely conjectural figure), this is nothing compared with the extension of the Christian faith. According to Mr. Eugene Stock in the new "Encyclopædia Britannica" the increase of communicants among Protestant missions is at least 120,000 a year, which of course is far below the number of persons baptized. This does not, moreover, include the accessions to the Roman, Russian, and Greek Churches. Thus one of the cheap arguments of the critics of missions is shown to be built on the usual slender foundation of such attacks. Mohammedanism has never shown any missionary genius in the past except at the point of the sword.

Turkey and Macedonia. There can be little doubt in the minds of those who attentively study affairs in the Near East that Turkey is throwing dust in the eyes of Europe with regard to the real state of things in Macedonia. The wonderful "reforms" of which we read are, according to the Consuls, simply reforms upon paper, the actual persecutions, tyranny, and anarchy still going on just the same as ever. Over against these airy reforms must be placed the dismissal of Said Pasha, the one man who knows what Macedonia needs, but whose suggestions have been carefully and consistently scouted. The testimony of the Consuls and of other independent witnesses is worth infinitely more than the sworn affidavits of Turkish officials. Macedonia is being treated after the fashion of Armenia, with this difference that the Armenian murders were swift while the Macedonian ones are more protracted.

The Settlement in South Africa. It is with feelings of genuine relief and gratitude that the nation has heard of the prospects of the Transvaal Settlement which has been brought about through the visit of Mr. Chamberlain. The financial proposals evince a desire for an equitable basis, and there seems to be some prospect of returning prosperity to the tried and desolated country. There is one question, however, to which the attention of the Christian public at home must be carefully directed. The great problem of how to get the native to work is one that will tax the most far-sighted statesmanship. It will be a difficult thing to instil a sense of the dignity of labour into a race which for untold centuries has lived in comparative idleness on the one hand, and by fighting on the other. How this is to be done without introducing a system of veiled slavery is not easy to see; and as there are many leading men in South Africa, who covertly aim at that solution, it will be necessary to be on the alert against a policy so debasing and suicidal.

Practical Papers.

A WORLDLY "CHILD OF GOD."

JEHOSHAPHAT was a child of God, and most of his life was spent in childhood still. Several of his outstanding acts were puerile to a degree; and, king though he was, he repeatedly merited rebuke like a child, for doing childish things.

Yet he feared the Lord and served Him, as did Asa his father. But he made the fatal mistake of letting others do as they pleased, and he did not remove the idolatrous high places from his kingdom. Small wonder, then, that his eldest son, who succeeded him, murdered his brothers, and followed the abominations of Ahab, whose daughter he had wed.

His chief fault lay in his eagerness to ally himself with his contemporaries, the godless kings of Israel—Ahab, the idolater; Jehoram, the time-server; and Ahaziah, the tempter of God. Impulsive, easy-going, unreserved, and good-natured, he wore his heart on his sleeve, and turned a ready ear to their proposals, exclaiming in two instances: "I am as thou art; my people as thy people; and my horses, as thy horses" (1 Kings xxii. 4; 2 Kings iii. 7). Affability, like fire or water, is a good servant but a bad master. In its extreme form it lacks backbone, and is not far removed from cowardice.

As we are all too apt to do, he went first and prayed after, deciding his own course and then desiring God to prosper it. "Is there not here a prophet of the Lord, that we may inquire of him?" he asked on both occasions. Had he been in closer touch with the spiritual forces of his day, he would have sought their counsel first, or at least have known where to find them.

His first escapade was with Ahab in an expedition against Ramoth-Gilead. The simplicity of the man is well depicted in his consent that Ahab should enter the battle in disguise, while he himself should wear his kingly robes; immediately he was surrounded by the enemy, and only Divine intervention saved his life. On his return, "Jehu went out to meet him, and said: Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? Therefore is wrath upon thee from the Lord" (2 Chron. xix. 2).

His second blunder was to enter into a dispute in which he was in no way concerned, and to aid Jehoram in his attack upon the king of Moab (2 Kings iii.).* As a result, he was confronted with death from thirst, and came under the scourge of Elisha's rebuke.

Finally, in his infatuation, "he joined himself with Ahaziah, who did very wickedly; he joined himself with him to make ships to go to Tarshish" (2 Chron. xx. 35, 36). "But they went not; for the ships were broken at Ezion-geber" (1 Kings xxii. 48). Then it was another prophet, Eliezer, who "prophesied against Jehoshaphat, saying: Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, the Lord hath broken thy works." By this time, the erring child had learned his lesson, and stiffened his back, so that when Ahaziah proposed another attempt, saying, "Let my servants go with thy servants in the ships," "Jehoshaphat would not." He had thought that what was right for Solomon would be right for him to do. Solomon had a navy; why not he? He forgot that much depends on the man as well as the thing. It is unsafe to follow a human lead without consulting God.

Furthermore, the ships were to go "to Ophir for gold." He "had riches in abundance" (2 Chron. xviii. 1), yet he sought for more. Here is the reef upon which many a Christian bark has foundered; which has brought to many a child of God the painful experience—"The Lord hath broken thy works." But He wounds, only that He may heal; and all through the ages it has been ever so—the works destroyed, the soul saved, "yet so as by fire."

But what a loss! What wasted energy! What risk of life! What sullied reputation! And all for what? For things that perish in the handling. For friendships that will, at the crucial moment, place us in the forefront of the battle, while they hide themselves in mufti. For worldly gain that, when secured, will parch the soul with thirst, or wreck it at the harbour mouth.

Like Jehoshaphat, the worldly Christian is no match for the world, and no credit to the Church; he has too much of the world to be happy with Christ, and too much of Christ to be at ease with the world. It is a solemn charge—"helping the ungodly; loving them that hate God." Perhaps we have never faced our doubtful associations in that light, or called them by so hard a name. "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world," says John; "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 John ii. 15). But we do not go so far as that! We do not love the world. Very well, then; "the friendship of the world is enmity with God" (Jas. iv. 4). That comes nearer home.

AN APOSTOLIC COMPLAINT.

Addressing the Corinthians (1 Cor. iii. 1-3) Paul says: "I could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk and not with meat . . . for ye are yet carnal." He does not blame them for having been babes at the outset, but for having remained in that puny, puling state. Similarly, the writer to the Hebrews complains: "When by this time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one should teach you again the first principles; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. Strong meat belongeth to them that by reason of use have their senses exercised (note the satire!) to discern both good and evil" (v. 12-14). How wide the gulf between what they were and what they might have been!

Oh why are we, so often, children of God, yet only children still? As if our motto were, "Once a child, always so!" What need to have our "senses exercised"! Why are we so dwarfed and stunted, and grow so little in knowledge and in grace? Because of our conformity to the world, and our friendship with the ungodly. The demands of "Society" press hard upon us; its chill breath—sceptical, indifferent, persuasive — blows upon us, and our spiritual heat dies down. Thus we "come short" of the glory of God; and never attain "unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Eph. iv. 13). Then what? Danger; thirst; shipwreck of faith!

Yet there is one bright spot in Jehoshaphat's career. He was weak, but he was not wilful. Most of us are "good in spots"! Even in his egregious blunders Jehoshaphat recognised God, and the Father never forsook his foolish child. "Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down; for the Lord upholdeth him with His hand" (Psa. xxxvii. 24), and it is like an oasis in the desert to find that when the king had his own battle to fight—a conflict not of his own seeking—he met the foe with no appeal to human aid, but with holy trust in the living God.

There are few more beautiful prayers in Scripture than that recorded in 2 Chron. xx., followed by his memorable exhortation to the people: "Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not yours, but God's!" Ah, here is piety! And here is power; for "all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, fell before the Lord, worshipping the Lord." Then came the victory; then the spoil—"They found in abundance both riches, and jewels, more than they could carry away"—a safer investment than "ships of Tarshish," and "gold of Ophir." Thus it is that our faithful God desires to bless. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Let us not be content to remain children of God; to speak as a child, to understand as a child, to think as a child; to act as a child, to be punished as a child; but seek to put away childish things, and become "strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus"—men and women of God. G.

The Revival We Need.

EXPECTATION of a great religious awakening seems to be increasing. Go where you will, in all meetings for conference and prayer, REVIVAL—its need and how to promote it—is the chief topic of the hour. The air is full of the voices of vision, for holy men have seen the outline of "new springs and new summers in the morning sky."

It may, perhaps, strengthen faith, and give point and direction to prayer, to summarize a few forward-reaching thoughts as to the chief elements of such a revival as we need.

I. A NEW SENSE OF GOD in all the churches, and in all our services for worship and testimony—a quickened sense of the invisible and the infinite, of God, of heaven, and of eternity.

It is a noteworthy fact that Christianity in the Acts of the Apostles is always aflame with the presence and power of God. The Kingdom revealed there is not in word but in power; and the faith described there is that which does not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.

But in our day, by far the larger part of the Acts of the Apostles is sealed, and even unintelligible to many Christians, just because they have never passed through experiences and revivals like those which the inspired writer records with such sympathy and knowledge.

We of the present generation cannot easily grasp the depth and the reality of the glorious times of 1859, and again of 1873-5. To most of us those times of revival are only a name and a report, while to an ever-decreasing circle they are an inspiring memory and

AN UNDYING EXPERIENCE OF GOD.

The great testimonies of what has been realized in days gone by bring us face to face with the ever-present problem of our own spiritual poverty. For we must confess that the Church has well-nigh lost her power to awe the hearts of her people and the world by revealing the living God. The infinitely High and Holy is no longer, in experience, the infinitely Near in vision and in voice. The thoughtful among us have long been saddened by what we have felt and seen. Man has been far more prominent than God, religion than Christ; and what we know as truth more desired than love and God. But we are full of hope for the future. A good time is coming—a time when a false and foolish literalness will give place to the ideal and the spiritual; when in His Church, and the Cross once more will sway the hearts of men.

GOD ALONE WILL BE EXALTED

2. Another characteristic of the next Revival, I hope and believe, will be A NEW AND RICHER EXPERIENCE of righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Righteousness—justification by faith before God, as well as moral uprightness of character. Peace—peace with God, the peace of God, and harmony among brethren; keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Joy—joy in God who is our exceeding joy. In every Revival there is joy, and rejoicing, and singing, and exulting in God and in the things of God; and all in the Holy Ghost. Men and women in need of Revival, remembering the truth contained in the words, "The joy of the Lord is your strength," cry, and cry continually: "Wilt THOU not revive us again, that Thy people may rejoice in THEE?" "O send out Thy light and Thy truth; let them lead me; let them bring me unto Thy holy hill, and to Thy tabernacles. Then will I go unto the altar of God, unto God my exceeding joy; yea, upon the harp will I praise Thee, O God, my God."

3. A third feature of the Revival we need is, I think, A NEW NOTE OF CONVICTION AND AUTHORITY in all public statements of Divine truth, and in their application to the hearts and consciences of men. When the tide of grace is low, we are tempted to speak with much uncertainty, and to become apt scholars in the use of words which are foreign to the Gospel. But the Gospel which Paul delivered concerning Christ, who died and rose again, must evermore be preached with directness, with authority, and with the accent of conviction. If one accepts Apostolic doctrine, one must also accept

APOSTOLIC EMPHASIS.

To the preacher in whose heart is the Word of God and the Fire of the Holy Spirit, the message that he has to carry is now and always, and in all places, the same. It is Jesus and the Resurrection, and always on this wise: "Let all the House of Israel know assuredly;" "It shall come to pass in the last days, saith God;" "God commandeth all men everywhere to repent;" "Repent ye, and believe the Gospel;" "Whether it be right to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye, for we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard." "We believe, and therefore speak."

4. Such are three of the characteristics of the Revival we need; but as a missioner in the churches, with, I humbly trust, a profound sense of my responsibility to both my Master and my hearers, I must, of necessity, add a fourth. We need A NEW POWER OF ATTRACTING AND MOVING MEN. I honestly believe that there are thousands of young people in this country who are on fire with a desire to win souls for Christ; but they themselves would be the first to acknowledge that they are not doing it, and that the real soul-winners at work amongst us are lamentably few. What is the cause of this failure? In many instances it is owing to ignorance of the Word of God and its use, and of the right methods, of the "how" to win men. But when we have said all this, the real reason for failure is still tugging at our hearts and consciences—is still making its voice heard. It is the unction and power and demonstration of the Spirit that we need; it is the tongue of fire that is the first and cardinal condition of success. For when men see that God is with us in power, there will be a great awakening of the national mind, and men will be stricken by the Spirit of God, and press upon us to hear the message of redemption by the blood of the Lamb. W. MONRO COLLINGS.

German Baptist Mission.—The work undertaken by the German Baptist Mission is one that appeals to Christians of all nationalities. The evangelization of such Roman and Greek Catholic countries as Bavaria, Bohemia, Austria, Roumania, Poland, and Russia, is a task that calls forth the devotion and highest energies of men of God. The society employs no paid collectors, and depends entirely on the donations and subscriptions sent for the support of the missionaries in the field. From year to year some of the lifelong supporters are being called away, and the society is desirous of seeing their places filled by friends of the younger generation, that the ever-increasing opportunities before the missionaries may not be lost through lack of support. The treasurer, Mr. Wm. S. Oncken, Lincoln, will be glad to furnish information.

Christian Recognition and Association.

The following appeared in a provincial Congregational Church Magazine:—

A family talk between Mr. Waggett (a small tradesman, of Blanktown, Midshire), Mrs. Waggett, his wife, and their niece Olga, on a visit from S——. All Church members.

OLGA: "Aunt, have you seen that absurd letter in our Church magazine that Helen sent us? I wonder the editor allowed it to appear. That first subject proposed for discussion is ridiculous! 'Where and when should a church member avoid the company, and ignore the presence of a fellow-member?'"

Mrs. W.: "And yet, dear, it is a very practical inquiry, and one that is settled in real life every day."

Mr. W.: "You mean that church members do avoid the company, and ignore the presence of fellow-members every day; but the question is, should they do so?"

Olga: "Well, circumstances have to be considered; and suppose we take this simple circumstance first, that they don't know each other, for I am sure there are very few of our members that I know."

Mrs. W.: "Of course, my dear, there is the previous question, whether you ought not to try to know them, seeing you are all one family in Christ."

Mr. W.: "I assume the querist means his question to apply to those only who have already become acquainted with each other. What circumstance, then should effect recognition and association?"

Olga: "Why all those circumstances which influence us every day when we meet persons with whom we are slightly acquainted; for being members of the same Church cannot be supposed to make us all bosom friends."

Mr. W.: "Bosom friends! If you mean that the affinity of taste, equality of culture and station, and the many other incidental conditions that go to cement worldly friendship, cannot exist universally among church members, I grant your position. But if, on the other hand, our discipleship to Christ is to be witnessed by our love one towards another, our mutual relationship will surely be something different from that of slight acquaintanceship."

Olga: "Oh, the whole subject is awfully complicated by spiritual pride, I think, for I have heard one of the leading ladies in our church say that her servants invariably 'forget their proper place' as soon as they become church members."

Mr. W.: "It certainly tried my complacency when on my way to business in company with Mr. Smith the banker, a working-man, in a state of grime and carrying a whitewash bucket, hailed me with, 'Good morning, Brother Waggett! What a glorious day, bless the Lord!' It was the bricklayer's labourer, converted at our village mission. I was certainly not pleasing myself when I shook hands with him, much to Mr. Smith's astonishment."

Mrs. W.: "I am glad you did not ignore his presence, my dear."

Mr. W.: "I couldn't if I would, but I had to ignore Mrs. Binham-Jones' proffered hand when I met her a few minutes afterwards, or I am afraid I should have soiled her mauve kid glove!"

Olga (laughing): "I am glad I wasn't with you, uncle."

Mr. W.: "In charity we must remember that one reason why recognition and association among Christians are neglected is the wish not to hurt each other's susceptibilities by unwelcome intrusion."

Mrs. W.: "Strange that it should be so! I never feel that anyone can have a better introduction than that they know and love someone whom I greatly love also, especially if they love my Best Friend."

Mr. W.; "Nevertheless, it is so, and I believe the feeling exists more among the poor towards the rich than in the other direction. A member in a lower social station shrinks from paining the false amour propre of a higher placed fellow-member."

Olga: "While probably a pride akin to that of Diogenes is stirring in his own breast."

Mrs. W.: "I am afraid that sometimes our well-to-do members recognize their poorer brethren and sisters in a patronising way more painful than silence."

Mr. W.: "True, but the most painful thing of all is that sometimes recognition is regulated by time and place and not by affection or principle. The warm grasp and genial greeting at the evening service is cheering and strengthening, but when the same person evidently carefully avoids seeing you in the tram-car, or meets you with the blank look of a stranger in a waiting room, it is a mercy if the revulsion of feeling takes no worse form than that of pity."

Olga: "Well, uncle, if you are going to draw upon your imagination in that fashion, we had better adjourn the discussion. I am glad to say my experiences at S—— have been very different from those you imply are to be met with in Blanktown."

Mrs. W.: "If I might have the last word, my dear, I would simply say that the law of love will meet every case. We shall have no difficulty as to our own bearing to our fellow-members, rich or poor, whether recognised or not, if we do unto them as we would that they should do unto us; in other words, as Christ would have done." AMICUS.

Outside the Chapel—and Inside.

"DON'T you remember speaking to me outside the chapel?" This question was addressed by a poor fallen sister to a rescue worker to whom she had applied for help in forsaking her evil life.

"No," the worker did not remember; for she knew that unless the sinner accepts at once the invitation to repent and reform, it is seldom indeed that it is ever heeded.

But R. O. was an exception to the sad rule. She was desperately in earnest. "They do say," she said, "there's hope up to forty-four years of age, and I'm only forty-one." It was easy to induce her to take the only safe course—to enter what is called a "long home," where by the blessing of God upon patient and continuous training, bad habits could be removed and she might "cease to do evil and learn to do well."

But the poor woman's phrase rang in the ears and rested in the mind of the worker outside the chapel.

"The chapel" was the rough and ready designation of a tabernacle, which was a centre of holy Christian life and usefulness. How many have reason to thank God to all eternity for blessing received "inside the chapel"! Outside is one of the worst corners of sinful London. Here, evil is not gaily decked out as in Piccadilly. It stalks about nightly in all the grim realism of poverty, hunger, dirt, and drink. (Do the congregations who gather for worship in the churches Sabbath by Sabbath ever think what is going on outside? Would such sinners be welcomed if they could be induced to come inside?)

On the last night of a mission in the chapel, the rescue worker was passing up and down, as often before, that dreadful bit of road, distributing Gospel messages to the lost sheep outside the chapel. "I wonder," she thought, "if any of these poor creatures would come inside? I wonder how they would be received if they did come? It is true we have been urged to go outside and compel the wanderers to come in, but does it mean such sinners? Anyway, I'll not go in alone." With much prayer and persuasion, two abandoned women were induced to accompany the worker inside. How kindly and wisely they were received! They were not marched up to the front as late comers too often are, but were ensconced in a cosy sheltered corner. Both stayed to the end of the after-meeting, and then one still lingered. A good sister came and talked and prayed with her, and then insisted on taking her into the inquiry-room. Never will the worker forget the missioner's sad, tender, pitying look, and wise words, as he dealt with that poor straying sheep. It was not a momentary excitement, as we feared; the woman was sincerely wishing to forsake her evil life. It was not easy to find a home where one who had wandered so far could be received, but at length such a haven was found. When the worker saw her some time after that memorable night when the lost was found, the poor woman hardly looked the same being who had been wandering in sin "outside Brown's chapel."

Thank God, that is not the only place where such wanderers are welcomed. Another church on the worker's night-beat had some months previously thrown open its doors for a midnight meeting, not only for this special class of sinners, but for the many idle busybodies who throng the streets and the public-houses late at night. Ministers and prominent laymen, as well as devoted Christian sisters, helped to make that meeting a success.

There are many sad signs of the times, but surely it is a token for good that not a few workers are thoroughly awake to the claims of the lost sheep outside.

It is true that something is needed for such work beside the first great qualification, "a heart of compassion." There must be a Spirit-taught tact and wisdom, that can only be gained "outside the camp;" often, by a sowing in tears, and in loneliness that would be heart-breaking were it not for the consciousness that it is going "forth unto Him outside the camp."

How cheering to such workers are the prayers and sympathy of those who are called to work inside the fold! Above all, how blessed when, in answer to those prayers and by means of such sympathy and help, those who were outside, "afar off," are "made nigh" by the blood of Christ, and gathered into the fold!

Hymn for a Sick Bed.

"My groaning is not hid from Thee" (Psa. xxxviii. 9).

In pain and weakness here I lie,
As one by one the hours go by;
Yet this sweet thought aye comforts me—
"My groaning is not hid from Thee."

I cannot talk, I scarce can pray,
My wand'ring thoughts will fly away.
But here is strength and help for me—
"My groaning is not hid from Thee."

A feeble infant's wailing cry
Reveals the mother hovering nigh;
And I can never lonely be—
"My groaning is not hid from Thee."

My wayward tears will sometimes flow,
And sad at times my heart will grow;
Yet peace this whisper brings to me—
"My groaning is not hid from Thee."

How wonderful this love Divine
Which doth encircle me and mine,
And bids each anxious care to flee,
Our "groaning is not hid from Thee."

Yea, I may sleep and take my rest,
And feel my Father knoweth best;
Why should I sad or faithless be?
"My groaning is not hid from Thee!"

"In School and Playground" — Five-Minute Talks with Young People. By G. E. Morgan, M.A. Rev. B. J. Gibbon (Bloomsbury Baptist Chapel), writes: "A capital little book. The writer is evidently still a boy at heart. His tone is simple and childlike, without being childish; Christian and Evangelical, while still natural and human." (1s. Morgan & Scott).

The Protestant Alliance has arranged for a series of reply lectures to be given in the Kensington Town Hall during February, as a corrective to those now being delivered by Roman Catholic priests for the purpose of proselytizing. These lectures will be delivered by Mr. Walter Walsh and Rev. W. C. Minnie on February 9, 16, and 26. Other lectures will be delivered in the neighbourhood by Mr. David S. Hyslop, and meetings have already been arranged at Craven Hill Congregational Church, Lancaster Gate, W., on February 9, and at Park Chapel, Chelsea, on February 2.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, February 1. 2 Chron. v.

IT was a great day for Israel when the Ark was borne to its place and set down under the outstretched wings of the cherubim. All the priests were there; on this special day they did not keep their courses. All the singers and minstrels were present, Heman and his family in the centre, with Asaph on the right and Jeduthun on the left. On the other side of the altar, the priests stood with their brazen trumpets, blowing first a long, plain blast, then one with quaverings, and then a long, plain blast again. It was when there was a complete unity, "when one sound was heard," when all voices and instruments rang out the one note of praise and thanksgiving, that the Shekinah cloud, radiant with glory, quietly and majestically filled the house.

But there is something in this era which is even more noteworthy. It was when the followers of the Lord were with one accord in one place that the house where they met was filled with the symbols of the presence of the Holy Spirit. Then the Divine Shekinah came to another temple—the temple of the Church.

But has there ever been anything of this kind in thy heart? Hast thou ever been conscious of receiving the filling of the Holy Spirit in the Holy of Holies of thy spirit? Hast thou now the realization of the indwelling of God, through the Son of His love, and by the Holy Spirit? If thou only wouldst dare to believe it, that the Spirit of God is within thee, as certainly as the Shekinah was in Solomon's Temple, and wouldst live in the hourly recognition of this, thy life would become full of love and eternity.

MONDAY, February 2. 2 Chron. vi.

In the court of the Temple, a brazen scaffold had been erected, probably covered by an awning, but with no seat, as Solomon first stood and addressed all the people, and then knelt in prayer. The name of David was on every lip, and the thought of him in every heart, as Israel beheld the result of his years of preparation. God will see to it, when the Temple stands complete, that all who have laboured for it will be remembered.

The prayer is extremely beautiful. We may apply it to ourselves because we may be smitten before the enemy, or carried into captivity, or troubled with some secret plague or sorrow (28 sq.). At all such times, there is no resort for us save in prayer, but thank God, we need not turn to any material sanctuary. The true Temple is within, in the spirit; we can enter it in any place and at any moment, and the High Priest is waiting to mingle His tears and supplications with ours. O sinful soul, ponder verses 38, 39; and from the place of thy captivity, turn thee to thy Father, and claim forgiveness, and restoration to the land on which His smile ever rests.

The closing address (41, 42), bidding God arise and enter His rest, is quoted in Psa. cxxxii. 8-16. May we not ask that He would come and abide thus in our church, our home, our heart? The ark of His strength is surely the blood and righteousness, the might and love, of the Lamb of God. Come, Thou blessed We, and make Thine abode with us (John xiv. 23). Then shall all the powers and attributes of our souls, like white-vestured priests, stand to serve Thee; and songs of rejoicing gladness shall ring through each chamber of the soul. (Ponder Psa. cxxxii., noticing the prayer, 8-10, and the answer, 13-18.)

TUESDAY, February 3. 2 Chron. vii.

Fire has always been a symbol of God's presence and acceptance (Lev. ix. 24; 1 Kings xviii. 38). Our God answers by fire. Wherever there is a welcome, He will fill the void with glory. He answered Solomon's prayer, clause by clause, for prayer brings literal answers; and went further to promise that His eyes should be ever open and His ears attent unto all that concerned His Temple. "Mine eyes and my heart shall be there perpetually" (16). How sweet it is to claim the fulfilment of those latter words for ourselves, if we have become the temples of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. vi. 19). It is sweet, O my God, to know that Thine eyes and Thy heart are perpetually on my life! But I am thankful to remember that this does not depend on my fulfilling certain conditions of service, but only on my abiding in Jesus Christ, and not grieving Thy Holy Spirit.

Because man is spirit and God's offspring, he reaches unto God, and searches even the deep things of God; because he is soul, he roams and investigates the heavens; because he is flesh, he investigates nature, and is her interpreter. God's indwelling in man, instead of swamping the individuality of his soul, develops it, as the sun develops peach trees, orange, apple trees, &c.

Within, within, oh turn
Thy spirit's eyes and learn
Thy wandering senses gently to control,
Thy dearest Friend dwells deep within thy soul,
And asks thyself of thee,
That heart, and mind, and sense He may make whole
In perfect harmony.

The sacrifices were profuse, but it must be remembered that only the blood and fat were presented on the altar; the rest of the victims furnished the necessary food for the vast multitudes, which had gathered from all parts for that sacred week. The indwelling of God always leads to deeper and fuller surrender.

WEDNESDAY, February 4. 2 Chron. viii.

When Solomon had finished the Temple, and other vast operations in Jerusalem, he turned his attention to the strengthening of his frontiers. In the north he colonized and fortified the cities which Hiram had refused. Hamath-Zobah and Tadmor (Palmyra), in the same direction, were fortified, and made strongholds against invasion from that quarter. The remnants of the Canaanites were brought under tribute, and the whole kingdom was organized. There are several disparities between the numbers given in this chapter and those of Kings, which is probably the result of the frequent transcription of the numerical symbols.

Pharaoh's daughter and her retinue were housed in a palace specially built to receive them. In connection with Solomon's marriage, we should read Ps. xlv. What a change had come over the chosen people, that the daughter of their former oppressor should wed with their monarch! How little do we realize what God has in store for those who humbly obey His will!

We cannot read verse 16 without recalling Eph. ii. 10. All Solomon's work was prepared for him. He had nothing to do but pursue the programme as it slowly unfolded before him.

The two harbours mentioned here were situated on the eastern arm of the Red Sea. Ships and sailors seem to have been provided by Hiram, for the Hebrews had no skill in navigation, and always speak of the sea with disparagement. It is for them the troubled sea which cannot rest, and heaven is a place where the sea is no more. For us the sea is an object of affection, and a means of intercommunication; and our Lord loved it. In its murmurs we can still hear His footfall, and His voice saying, It is I, be not afraid. How many objects of dread He has abolished, teaching us to love and rejoice in what once gave unmitigated alarm.

THURSDAY, February 5. 2 Chron. ix.

The Queen of Sheba is always the emblem of the soul coming to a greater than Solomon, with its hard questions and munificent gifts; and receiving His answer to every question, and more generous donations than were brought (Matt. xii. 42). But who would not prefer to be numbered among the friends and servants that stand continually before Him (7)? There are many who admire Christ, and pay Him transitory visits, but they are happiest who never leave His presence. If a young girl should read these words, let her bring to the Lord Jesus the sweet spices of her faith and love, and He will satisfy all her desire, whatsoever her heart craves (12).

We are dazzled with the enumeration of Solomon's splendour, which surpassed the treasures of Ormus and of Ind. Certainly he carried the splendour of the Hebrew nation to a very high pitch, but he laid the foundations of its deterioration and overthrow. The people became familiarized with the vices, luxuries, and idolatries of neighbouring peoples. The unblushing manner in which Solomon formed foreign and forbidden alliances, and built temples for the idols of his wives, prepared the way for the subsequent relapse of the whole people from the service of Jehovah (Neh. xiii. 26).

Let us turn from Solomon to the lilies of the field, and "consider how they grow." They do not seek magnificence or beauty as their end and goal; they just do the will of God; obeying the laws of His kingdom, and leaving Him to clothe and adorn them. Let the glory and show of this world be to those who seek them; be content to do God's will, and, without knowing it, the beauty and glory of your life will be fairer than Solomon's.

FRIDAY, February 6. 2 Chron. x.

This chapter is almost exactly the same as 1 Kings xii. It is interesting as showing first how to deal with men. The system of terrorism will secure a poorer quality of service than consideration and kindness will. If we will be kind to our dependents, and speak good words unto them, they will be our servants for ever. This is why some families keep their servants so long. There is a considerateness and thoughtfulness in the behaviour of young and old which brings out the best quality on the part of those to whom they are shown. To hear some people speak to their servants, one would suppose that they were of a superior order of beings, and that those whom they addressed had no sensibility to human sweetness and thoughtfulness. Let the master remember that he is a servant to Christ, and treat his employés as he would wish his Master to treat him.

The other lesson of this chapter is the evidence it presents, that God is working out His own plans beneath the rivalries and revolts of kingdoms and peoples. The insurrection of the Ten Tribes from the House of David might appear to be owing to the impolicy of Rehoboam's answer; but we learn that it was brought about by God that He might establish His word (15). How often we are reminded of Nebuchadnezzar's noble words! (Dan. iv. 35.) The scene of the judgment of the nations is already in process (Matt. xxv. 31).

SATURDAY, February 7. 2 Chron. xi.

When a matter is of God, we are wise at once to cease resistance, and endeavour to find the law of what seems so harmful, though it is not really so. For instance, a woman may suddenly find herself a widow, with a young family, and an encumbered estate. It is of no use repining, chiding, and resisting. Let her be sure that there is a way out, which God knows. Let her set herself to wait on God, for Him to show her His will. Let her see to it that her misfortune works out her weal, because it calls out her noblest qualities, gives her sympathy with others, and strengthens the endurance of her children. Nothing can permanently injure us which God permits.

Rehoboam set to work to fortify several of his border-cities; he welcomed the priests and godly Israelites, who were driven out of Israel by the idolatries which Jeroboam instituted; and he judiciously placed his sons, and their respective families, in the cities of the kingdom, to increase and maintain their loyalty. The one mistake which he could not alter thus led to a great development of resources still left to him. This is a great lesson! Some, when they have met disaster, become paralysed, and sink down in despair. How much wiser it is to arise in God's name and strength, and on the morrow after the disaster begin to lay the foundations of some new achievement, more permanent and satisfactory than the dream which has been, perhaps happily, dissipated. Be of good cheer! Confess your mistake and sin! Repent! Begin again! There is yet time to retrieve the past! F. B. M.

Young Men of London.

BAYSWATER.

THE New Year has opened well among the Christian young men of London. The reunion of the members of the Y.M.C.A., Queen's Road, Bayswater, brought much encouragement. The numerous company present included Mr. Henry Varley, Mr. Willson, and Mr. Walter Wild, the energetic secretary. A large audience assembled in the Lecture Hall, when Mr. Varley delivered an eloquent and instructive address on "The King in the Court of Conscience." Reading Psa. xxxii., Mr. Varley found its keynote in the 1st and 2nd verses, viz., "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven," and "Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile." The character of King David in the sight of God, after he had committed sin, was dealt with in an exhaustive manner. Some had questioned the Davidic origin of the Psalm, but Mr. Varley could no more be sceptical in regard to the Bible than he could fly. He knew, as the outcome of careful study, that the Book was true. For forty-seven years he had been preaching, and that Book had during the whole of that time been his constant guide.

Two days later, a great meeting of men only was held in Paddington Baths, when Mr. Robert Miller presided, and Mr. Henry Varley gave a lecture on "The Curse of Manhood." A clear and powerful appeal was made for the abandonment of certain common forms of sin which are terrible in their results.

EXETER HALL.

DR. PIERSON ON "THE ORACLES OF GOD."

A large amount of interest has been aroused in connection with a series of lectures on "The Oracles of God," which Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson is delivering at Exeter Hall, under the auspices of the Central Y.M.C.A. The topic of the second one, given last Friday evening, was "The Consistency of the Bible with Modern Discovery"; and the removal from the small to the large hall was more than justified by the splendid audience, mainly composed of men, though both sexes had been invited.

Tracing his study and thought on the subject back over fifty years, Dr. Pierson explained that while he was yet a lad, with no special training whatever, he was misled into error by designing companions; but, having discovered that Jesus Christ was a personal Saviour, he set himself to ascertain by investigation whether the Bible had in itself the proofs that it is a Divine Book. Applying the test by the examination of Natural Science, he was amazed to find, not only that his difficulties were removed, but that, along these lines, supposed to be most antagonistic to the Bible, was to be found the largest confirmation of its Divine origin.

Reviewing ground formerly covered, it was shown (1) that the Bible is not a scientific book, its object being ethical and spiritual. It could not be scientific because (a) God never reveals what men can discover by their own study, (b) He never anticipates scientific discovery, and (c) the Bible being given for ethical and spiritual purposes, any treatment of scientific topics would divert the mind of the reader from the true object. Yet (2) it is impossible for the Bible to treat such topics and not now and then refer to scientific matters, as an educated man cannot write a letter on a spiritual subject without betraying knowledge of other kinds. (3) As God is the only true Scientist in the universe, if He gives us a book He is bound in it to show something of His own omniscience and universal knowledge. (4) We cannot believe that God in giving us the Bible, though He may not anticipate scientific facts, will contradict scientific truth. We are unavoidably driven to the conclusion that God would be compelled to invent or devise some methods of language by which, without anticipating scientific truth, He should use such phrases as would accommodate themselves to the growing knowledge of the human race from time to time. This is exactly what He has done, and is one of the marvellously features of the Book—its elastic phraseology.

HOW MOSES WAS SAVED FROM ERROR.

Dealing with the science of Cosmogony, Dr. Pierson quoted Herbert Spencer's declaration that the universe contains five factors which together account for it—(1) time or duration; (2) space or extension; (3) matter in three forms, solid, liquid, and gaseous; (4) force or energy; (5) motion. Herbert Spencer does not believe in the Bible; but F. Hugh Capron has pointed out that it might have been well for him to read the first three verses of Genesis. These opening words contain the suggestion of the most mature Natural Science. "In the beginning, God." There are no four words like them in any literature.

Turning to geology, the order of creation was shown to be (1) chaos, (2) light, (3) condensation, (4) land, (5) vegetation, (6) animals, (7) man. Geology is only a century old, and comparative anatomy three centuries; yet Moses is correct when examined in the light of all that has been discovered since. Who taught him these things thousands of years before they were dreamed of as sciences? He laid down the order that geology and comparative anatomy tell us was that of creation. Anthropology and analytical chemistry have united to prove that the human body has thirteen elements in common with the dust of the ground. Emphasis was laid on the fact that light is not spoken of as created. Who guarded Moses from the mistakes that any observer would have made, which ancient writers would have made and did make when they attempted to teach natural science? There was an infinite Intelligence behind the ignorance of Moses, and He guided the pen from making fatal mistakes, which would have marred the Word of God in all ages.

FULHAM.

The annual meeting of the vigorous Y.M.C.A. at Fulham was held in the noble Town Hall last Thursday evening. Mr. Douglas Fox presided, and the large platform was crowded with friends and workers, including Mr. Peter Lawson, mayor of Fulham. Prebendary Webb-Peploe spoke on the inspiration of the Scriptures illustrated from the internal evidences of the Bible, and Mr. Henry Varley on personal and practical godliness. The addresses were received with evident interest and hearty applause.

The anniversary was well fitted to further with enthusiastic energy the coming twenty-fourth year of work at Fulham.

ALDERSGATE STREET.

Here also the New Year opens auspiciously, and gives promise of increasing hold upon young men. A series of special addresses have been given by Rev. W. R. Mowll, of Brixton. Each evening the hall was well attended, and the interest increased as the days passed on. Mr. Mowll's evident desire to lead men to Christ carries with it real success. Mr. Basil Hewer, who, as secretary, so heartily carries on and seconds these special efforts for the conversion of young men, has much cause to rejoice over the work being done.

Harrogate Y.W.C.A.—This branch of the Young Women's Christian Association, which for several years has been carried on at the old Vicarage, Cambridge Street, is now about to make a forward movement. The committee have been compelled to seek fresh quarters because the development of the work is much hindered for want of better accommodation, and because the house they now occupy has been sold. They have secured a house close to the Stray, which (with the addition of a wing) will, they believe, fulfil all the requirements of the work and place it upon a permanent footing. For the purchase and extension about £5,000 will be required, towards which between £700 and £800 has already been promised. The meetings for Bible study conducted by the hon. superintendent, Miss Annie W. Marston, have been greatly appreciated, and have proved a blessing to many, both residents and visitors, and in this rapidly-increasing town and health resort there is much need for such a work.

Mr. Meyer's Movements.

To the Members of Christ Church, S.E.

January 23, 1903.

MY DEAR PEOPLE,—It is a great pleasure to be again in England, and within reach of you. I thank God for the many prayers, and living sympathy with which you have followed my missions.

In view of recent events, such as the deaths of Dr. Parker and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, and the fact of the Education Bill having gone against us, I have resolved, after long and anxious consideration, to postpone the fulfilment of my extended missions, and to permanently resume the pastorate of the church in April next.

I am glad to say that the expression of this, my determination, to the officers, it being so so much in accordance with their desires and wishes, has elicited their unqualified concurrence.

We can never be thankful enough to have had the presence and splendid services of our friend, Dr. Pierson; and I hope that we may, on many occasions, again have his valued help, not only in the times of my vacation, but on the occasions when you may be disposed to grant me a longer furlough.

I am much anticipating my return to the church at the beginning of April.—With warm affection, yours very sincerely,

F. B. Meyer.

MR. MEYER IN MANCHESTER.

Rev. F. B. Meyer began a period of special service for the Free Church Council by a Mission in Manchester, January 10-15. He has struck out something of a new line in missions, and the success of the Manchester experiment augurs well for those he is to conduct during forthcoming weeks in smaller towns, where such events may naturally be expected to attract even more attention. Large congregations on the Sunday morning and evening in different suburbs welcomed the missioner, and a great afternoon meeting for men midway, at Rusholme, gave him an opportunity for one of his best and most characteristic services. His forceful brotherly advice as to "How a man may keep straight," will assuredly prove a powerful influence in the future course of many who heard it and have been eagerly discussing it since.

Daily addresses on "The Spiritual Life" brought increasing congregations, on the succeeding afternoons, to the old Roby Chapel, in the heart of the city. In these Mr. Meyer exerted his teaching powers as an expositor of some of the deeper truths of Scripture, in a manner helpful to all who are seeking "the things which are above," the motto of the addresses.

Evening meetings assembled at the Central Hall for the consideration of special subjects which Mr. Meyer's wide and varied experience peculiarly qualifies him to deal with. The first of these, "Religion in Relation to Public and Municipal Life," may have shown him in a new light to those who have associated Mr. Meyer only with convention and consecration meetings. His account of the way in which the necessities of South London forced him to active participation in the public life of the neighbourhood was heard with the deepest interest. As Dr. Goodrich remarked from the chair, his rousing call to spiritually-minded persons to exert themselves, by vote and influence, against the domination of the brothel and the public-house, would weigh with some who would perhaps refuse such an appeal from other quarters. A Sunday-school workers' meeting and a young people's meeting occupied the next two evenings, and the mission was closed by a sermon which was an earnest appeal to Christians to be filled with the Spirit for all godly living and service.

Not the least pleasant gathering, nor the least likely to be fruitful, was Mr. Meyer's informal breakfast conference with some sixty ministers on the Wednesday morning. The regretted absence of Mr. Mackennal, president of the Federation, on account of the lamented death of Mrs. Mackennal, cast something of a shadow over the week, though certainly not to detract from its sacredness in memory or blessedness in result.

Brompton Hospital for Consumption.—The Country Branch and Convalescent Home for open-air treatment is being erected at Heatherside, near Frimley, Surrey. This building will combine the latest improvements in every detail. The patients will, in all cases, be drafted from the parent hospital, on recommendation of the physicians in charge. The site is on the well-known Chobham Ridges. About £60,000 is needed to complete the undertaking.

Other Lands.

In the Indian Jungle.

ABOUT twenty-four years ago, in the closing days of a great famine that desolated southern and western India, Rev. C. B. WARD was led into orphan rescue work by the infectious example of a godly Methodist engineer in the Nizam's service. This ended in the establishment of a mission in the Telugu, or eastern part of the Nizam's Dominions. For ten years a landed foothold was in vain sought in this Mohammedan State; but during this time, now in one district, and then in another, Mr. Ward was missionary, teacher, editor, contractor, engineer, doctor, or whatever else necessity required. By public road and railway contracts employment was found for the orphans, and means for the support of the work. Meanwhile, from friends in America, Australia, and England came help, so that they were left in need of no good things.

In the end of 1888 a village was secured near Yellandu, 150 miles east of Hyderabad, almost in the heart of Telingana, and within the borders of an aboriginal tribe called Kois. They were short in stature, frank in nature, exceedingly accessible; without written language, temple, priest, or caste; very unlike the Hindus, treating their women with far more consideration; practically free from child marriage and polygamy. Their religion was patriarchal, the head of the family being his own priest. Between 1888 and 1892 help was obtained from the Transit Society and other friends to reconstruct the village, and to fit up the mission at Yellandu with homes for the missionaries and workers, as well as a school-chapel, and other accommodation for aggressive missionary work.

In February, 1892, with two native brethren, Mr. Ward set out for a survey of Koiland. In a tour of some 700 miles they explored Southern and Western Bastar, going as far as Jagdalpur, the capital of Bastar State, situated 275 miles north-east from Yellandu. In 1893 he made a tour of some 1,200 miles, going to the northern borders of Bastar, as far as 400 miles from Yellandu, and discovered that the Kois were scattered over a stretch of country 400 miles by 150; coming to the conclusion that the people numbered about 400,000. Interspersed among them are 100,000 low caste Hindus, more or less assimilated to them in manners and customs.

Everywhere they were found to be a simple and accessible people when once reached. Indeed, they received the missionary with great expectation of they hardly knew what, but something to better their pitiful estate. They were like sheep without a shepherd. At first sight they sometimes ran to hide themselves in the jungle till the visitors should go on, an approach being sometimes won by stratagem.

In this mission field there are no cities, but 6,000 villages are spread over a great forest region that probably was once an open country well peopled. Scythian cromlechs here and there declare a very ancient occupation not Koi. Some traces of Buddhism and a few old Hindu temples tell their story. But to-day this is the home of the Koi, who is pre-eminently a child of the forest. His habit is to make a clearing, and leave his connection with the outer world to the limitations of a footpath. The work required for the evangelization of this people must be of the foot and bridle-path order. Yet great changes are taking place, and sometimes it is feared the golden opportunity for speedy evangelization is slipping away. The population is sparse and the country rugged, and as yet ill-furnished with roads. It has its charms, but this work cannot be free from hardship and trial. These people must be sought out in their village homes, and be won by love for and to Christ.

In the north-west of Bastar is a section known as Abuj Mardian, where dwell the Marias, a division of the Koi people, in all probability the most nude and wild people yet left in India. As yet most of them, male and female, wear but a single garment, and that a meagre one. At night they sleep around camp fires, without blankets. No attempt has ever yet been made to do any missionary work for or among them. Their home is exceedingly rugged, hilly, and difficult of access. There is not to this day a single possible cart road to their home, though they number about 100,000. Their hill-tops are 3,000ft. above the sea, and the whole region is weird and wild.

Till now little has ever been done for this people anywhere. Less than 100 of them have ever been baptized. The C.M.S. friends at Dummigudium baptized some forty of them a few years ago, and the missionaries at Yellandu about fifty. But it is feared they are all scattered. The effort to lead them on has been disappointing in the extreme. Their illiteracy is a special feature of difficulty. Among 400,000 of them it is to be doubted if 100 can be found who can read.

For twenty-six years Mr. Ward has aimed to do two things for the native Christians—(1) by trusting in God himself, to teach them to do the same; (2) to lead them also by his own example to earn their own living.

In connection with the industrial enterprise, magnificent water storage has been secured, which yields a considerable annual income. There are, however, difficulties in the way of getting the full benefit available. In the large tank of 175 acres, one-third of the water is lost for lack of means to raise it about 6ft. If only they could utilize this water, that is, lift it so that it will flow down the water channel to the fields, it would be possible to grow sugar cane that will yield a clear profit of 2,000rs. per year over all current expenditure.

At the mission-house there is a garden that yields, as it is now worked by four bullock motes, a profit of about 600rs. per year. If the water could be raised 20ft. the mission garden would be worth more than 1,200rs. per year. The neighbouring mining company's mechanical engineer has looked over plans, and the possibilities of both enterprises, and agrees as to what is required to enable a clear addition to be made to the income of the Mission of over 3,000rs. per year.

"An oil engine, 3-h. power, with a centrifugal pump," is required for each enterprise, costing together £250. The investment will put, say, thirty native workers into the field for Christ for all time to come.

Balaghat Mission.

A FEW days ago there met in the Lower Exeter Hall a goodly number of the friends of Mr. John Lampard, at his invitation, to take tea with him and look on his face again before he left to resume his work among the Gouds in Central India.

Subsequently the party adjourned to the Council room, which it fairly filled. when Dr. HEYWOOD SMITH took the chair.

Rev. W. DARLOW SERJEANT read a Psalm and a verse out of the first chapter of the Acts, and the chairman said a few words of farewell. Afterwards Mr. Taylor spoke of the Balaghat Mission, from what he had himself seen there, and bore testimony to the marvellous way in which God had blessed the work, and given him to see early fruits of his labour. Miss WALLER, who is going out to the Mission, spoke with a spirit of devotion to the Master's work, and asked the prayers of the company for God's help in entering the mission field.

Mr. LAMPARD afterwards gave a short account of work and said that he had already, besides a few Europeans, several native converts, who are doing good work in preaching the Gospel. He also told how help had been given during the frequent famines, and how the work is spreading.

The chairman read, as a farewell message, 2 Thess. ii. 13, iii. 5, and Mr. Darlow Sarjeant closed with prayer.

The secretary of this excellent and unsectarian mission is Miss Field, 10, Lancaster Road, W. Norwood, S.E. S.

The Gospel in Bohemia.

NEXT to Prague, Pilsen is the most important city in Bohemia. At length this interesting historic town, which bade defiance to the Reformation, has been invaded by Gospel workers, whom the Lord has blessed. Passing by the German work, permit me to call attention to an important mission among the 50,000 Slavs of that city. A quiet Gospel work begun some years ago has taken firm root. Over 200 who were Romanists have become earnest Evangelicals. The old hall and the Y.M.C.A. rooms rented for this purpose are far too small for a work of great promise. The members are nearly all from the poorer classes, yet from their limited resources they contribute generously to the Lord's work.

While facing the question, "Shall we build a house for the work?" we were offered, on reasonable terms, a good house with an immense dancing-hall attached to the house, but situated in a quiet garden. Well built, light and sunny, with accommodation for over 300 people, no wonder we were tempted to buy the place for earnest and aggressive Christian work. The property has been secured, and the first payment duly made. How to meet the second payment, in April, when we take possession of the property, and how to provide suitable furniture, are considerations that lead us to bring our need before Christian friends. The fitting-up of the house for its new work, with the second payment—that is the one due in April—requires at least £300.

The property has been placed in trust in a form recognised by Austrian law. The work has already several important out-stations; for example, in the city of Klattau, fifty or sixty, formerly Romanists, meet every Sunday to have God's Word explained to them. Any friend wishing to invest something in the Lord's work may be sure that a contribution to the Gospel Hall in Pilsen will bear important fruit. (Rev.) ALBERT W. CLARK,

Special Mission in South Africa.

AT this time, when much prayer is being made for world-wide revival, many will be glad to know that a special mission is to commence this week at Johannesburg. It will be conducted by Mr. David Russell, whose gift as an evangelist has long been recognised throughout South Africa; but, being a minister of the Presbyterian Church, his sphere was limited.

About two years ago he relinquished his pulpit at Cape Town in order to give himself wholly to evangelistic work. With the help and counsel of a committee at Cape Town, who have provided him with a travelling secretary, he has been able to accept invitations to visit many parts of South Africa.

The next six months he hopes to spend at Johannesburg and the Randt, or gold-mining district. Its population of English-speaking people offers a large field, and a class Mr. Russell is eminently fitted to reach. In the towns on the coast, which he visited when other parts of the country were closed on account of the war, he drew large audiences of men. Among soldiers he has always been an acceptable speaker.

In every mission yet held God has owned and blessed the work of His servant, and prayer is now asked that during the mission at Johannesburg numbers who are engrossed with the things of this life, in the race for wealth, may be arrested to find in Christ eternal gain.

(MRS.) M. S. OSBORN-HOWE.

Paris City Mission.—The latest report of the Paris City Mission shows that the staff of workers numbers twelve, and that in twelve months 7,837 visits were made (1,065 of them to sick persons). The meetings held numbered 2,631, Bibles and Testaments sold 262, and tracts or Gospels distributed 46,100. The general secretary is Mr. W. J. Lockie, 21, Ballater Road, Brixton, S.W.

A Consecrated Worker.

THE LATE MISS RÖMMELE.

THE late Miss Marie Römmele, a faithful and highly-gifted servant of the Lord, born in 1840, near Heidelberg, was suddenly called to her rest last summer, whilst descending a precipitous mountain path in the Black Forest.

When only seventeen, Miss Römmele came to Great Britain, living as governess and friend with several well-known families. At the time of the great Revival she consecrated her life to God's service. After having finished her daily task with pupils, she hurried to the East End, devoting her evenings to the religious instruction of her country people at "the Strangers' Rest" and elsewhere, having the joy of leading many of them to the Saviour, as well as some of her pupils. Subsequently, she helped greatly in organizing and developing the Continental branch of the Y.W.C.A., and in starting at the same time an association for German governesses, and consolidating another for German servants in this country. Her bright happy manner stimulated others to follow her lead, while her wonderful powers of mind were ever at the service of the Lord. After relinquishing work in this country, she devoted twenty-two years to start and develop in Germany forms of work which she had seen in operation in Great Britain, such as Bible-classes for girls and women, mothers' meetings, preventive and rescue agencies. All through Germany she is considered as the pioneer of women's work among their own sex.

In 1877 she joined the newly-founded "Union Internationale des Amies de la Jeune Fille," and became, a few years later, its president for the Grand Duchy of Baden. In this capacity she held women's meetings all over Germany, starting branches of the Y.W.C.A. wherever possible. Once a year, a great gathering of these associations, at Heidelberg or Karlsruhe, served to carry out the desire for the unity expressed by our Lord Himself in John xvii. 21. Conferences arranged by her for the deepening of the spiritual life brought together every year from 200 to 300 leaders of these associations, pastors, pastors' wives, teachers of schools, men and women of culture and refinement, all animated by a desire to serve the Master in bringing the young to His fold. Dignitaries of Church and State were present at some of these gatherings. Her own Y.W.C.A., a branch of about 200 members, at Freiburg, in Baden, was specially dear to her heart, many of the older members helping her with the younger and more difficult ones. During the summer, after the Bible-class on Sunday afternoons, she led the young folk to some neighbouring spur of the Black Forest, listening to their difficulties and helping them by wise counsel.

In earlier years she translated many of Pastor Stockmayer's writings into English; also rendered articles from THE CHRISTIAN into German for religious papers in the Fatherland. The source of her power with young and old, rich and poor, educated or uneducated, lay, no doubt, in her setting apart the first hours of each day for the study of God's Word, and for intercessory prayer. Anxious inquirers found her accessible at all times, and she was fully equipped to meet their wants. Always ready for service for the King, she greatly helped any British workers visiting Germany, such as the late Dr. Somerville, who highly valued her interest during his mission at Heidelberg, in 1881.

Such incessant labour of love, though it was her delight, told upon her health; and after having never allowed herself any prolonged rest, she felt the need of it last summer, and found it in a quiet spot in her dearly loved Black Forest. On July 31 last, the morning after her arrival there, she left the pension with her Bible, saying that she was going "to be alone with the Lord" in the solitude of a wooded hill in the neighbourhood. Little did she dream that eternal, uninterrupted communion would so soon be hers! When she did not return for dinner, they supposed that she had gone back to Freiburg; but on the following day she was found lying at the spot whence her eyes had last enjoyed the almost sublime beauty of the valley at her feet. After having lain there for twenty-four hours, in no other but God's safe keeping, she was carried still alive, though unconscious, to a neighbouring farm, where, a few hours later, she breathed her last.

Her loss to Germany seems irreparable, but "God, who puts to sleep His workers, still carries on His work." While God's people in Germany are mourning for her as a mother in Israel, let us in this country join them in "asking God to bestow a double portion" of His Spirit on her beloved sister, Bertha, who is endeavouring, in some measure, to carry on the work begun.

In Dark Chili.

SERVICES are regularly held at Rancagua, with an attendance of never less than thirty-five persons, and sometimes the sala is filled, even to standing room; while the Sunday-school has enrolled about twenty-four members, who study the lessons with great interest.

A beautiful experience befell the pastor a little while ago. Half-an-hour after the usual time for service, but one hearer had put in an appearance; and so disappointed was the pastor that he was tempted to close without holding any service at all. But he decided to deliver his message, and God blessed the seed sown, so that the one hearer was converted, and now his family, five persons in all, are rejoicing with him in the blessedness of salvation. Surely a glorious sowing.

The converts do not shirk their responsibilities. Although all are poor, they give of their poverty with such willingness that not only are all costs met, but there is actually a small reserve in hand. They are rejoicing greatly in the prospect of having their own little mission church, and so being relieved of the constant anxiety of being deprived at a moment's notice of their sala. So great is their confidence regarding it, that already, even before the foundations are laid, they have further denied themselves to purchase wood for the platform and pulpit, which have already been made—literally "in faith."

Nearly £200 has already been received, and thanks are accorded to all who have so lovingly given to help forward the cause of the Gospel in far-away Chili. The need of a small church as a witness for the Lord Jesus Christ in the dark, priest-ridden city and district of Rancagua is unspeakably great, and a sum of £105 would complete the whole cost of ground and building. Communications may be addressed to Mr. Peter Rose, care of Messrs. Grundy, Izod, and Co., 84, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

Blessing in America.

FROM MR. CHARLES INGLIS.

I KNOW I have been followed by the prayers of many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, and I am sure their hearts will be cheered that God is giving us a most wonderful time of blessing in this land just now. It has been my privilege to travel more or less all over this vast continent during the last five-and-twenty years, but I have never experienced such a winter of blessing as we are having now. The unity amongst the Lord's people is very marked, and there is an increasing desire on their part to reach the non-church-going masses. I do not think I ever remember such a spirit of hearing amongst people before. In the city of Baltimore, where five churches united, we had nearly 2,500 men crowded into the Opera House, and more than 300 of them were anxious about their souls—many of whom were dealt with personally at the close of the meeting.

In the city of Chicago, where I have been spending the last two weeks, and where it has been my privilege to labour so often in connection with Mr. Moody's work, I have gained the impression that that work never seems to have been more blessed than now. The building, capable of seating more than two thousand people, was filled with those who were eager to learn the truth, and night after night it has been my joy to see weary souls finding Christ. One of the largest Sunday-schools in America is in connection with the Moody Church, where something like 2,400 Sunday-school children listen to the Gospel from the teachers' lips every Sunday; while the Bible Institute, founded by Mr. Moody, has never been so successful as now. Between two and three hundred students, both men and women, have come here from all parts of the world, and are getting Bible instruction. It has been one of the greatest privileges in connection with evangelistic work to speak to these students every day.

My heart has been immensely cheered by what has been accomplished in connection with the penitentiaries in this land. During the past few weeks I have been preaching to more than 2,000 convicts, the majority of whom were murderers, forgers, and burglars; and some of the scenes that I have witnessed will hardly ever be effaced from my memory, many being broken down under conviction of sin, and numbers being won to the Lord Jesus Christ.

MESSRS. TORREY AND ALEXANDER.

I am sure the Christian people in England will be glad to know that there are hundreds of people in this land who are praying very earnestly that Dr. Torrey may be greatly used. I wish Christian friends only knew what this servant of God has accomplished in Chicago. He is the pastor of one of the most successful churches, and it has been my joy to labour with him in his church. We are expecting he will be used in the leading of thousands of souls to the Lord Jesus Christ. What God has accomplished through him and Mr. Alexander in the Australian Colonies, we believe will be experienced on a greater scale in the old land. I expect to be in a number of cities before returning to England, and I shall be glad of the prayers of God's people that hundreds in these cities may be reached and rescued by the mighty power of God.

Eurasian Children in India.—The St. Andrew's Colonial Homes at Kalimpong offer a contribution towards the solution of the problem connected with the Domiciled European and Eurasian Community in India—a problem which steadily becomes more pressing with the growth of the community, with its continued existence in an unsuitable climate and depressing surroundings, and with the increasing stress of competition with the growing mass of educated natives. As the name suggests, the plan is to send the children to one or other of the Colonies of our Empire, where the environment is more favourable than in India, and where there is a chance that, amid surroundings suitable to western people, the children may (with hard work indeed) prosper, and where their descendants will have a fair chance of success in life.

THE LATE

Alderman W. H. Hart,

OF BIRMINGHAM.

THE decease of Alderman Hart, of Birmingham, in November last, carried sorrow into a large and influential circle. A man of business, and an earnest Christian, he died in harness, and in the enjoyment of the esteem and affection of hosts of workers in the Lord's vineyard.

WILLIAM HENRY HART, who was sixty-nine years of age at his death, came of a good stock. His father was a devoted Christian, who had from the first been connected with the Wesleyan Methodist Association, a body which, by union, in 1857, with another branch of Methodism, formed the United Methodist Free Churches. Under the training of his pious parents, the lad was soon initiated into attendance at sanctuary and Sunday-school, and, through the gracious operations of the Spirit of God, he was led in very early life to consecrate himself to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. Under the constraining influence of a new affection, and encouraged by the officers of the church with which he was identified, he entered on Christian work, becoming a Sunday-school teacher when he was sixteen years of age. He never lost interest in the religious care of the young.

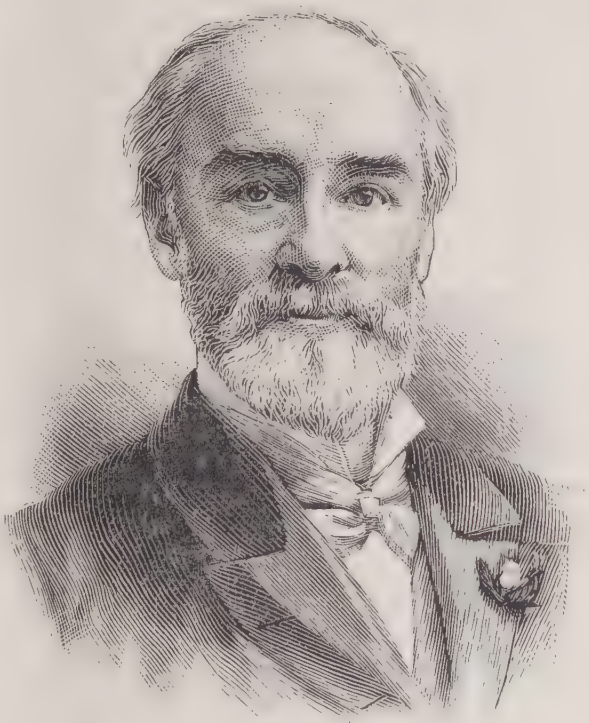
In the Methodist bodies, as is well known, lay-preaching occupies a very important place; in fact, it is essential to the circuit system. Suitable young men are always in request, and the more intelligent they are, the greater is the welcome extended to them. Young Mr. Hart was better fitted in some respects to enter on the work of preaching than many of his brethren. He had been well educated at Birmingham Grammar School, and had the faculty and the means of learning from books and experience. He became a local preacher when he was twenty years of age, and he never wearied of the work. The last sermon he preached was on the Sunday preceding his death, when he occupied the pulpit of the church at Gravelly Hill, and took for his theme, "The peace of Jesus Christ."

Mr. Hart early identified himself with the Temperance Reformation, and his consistent adhesion to its principles was highly appreciated. He was also a supporter of the Free Church Federation movement. A lover of all good men, he was delighted to engage in a brotherly bond with others enrolled, like himself, under Christ's banner, and clinging like him to the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. He had held office in the West Midland Federation, and he was president of a local council when God took him.

He was also a special friend of Methodist Union. It is a pathetic fact that the week before he died he was appointed one of a body of twelve brethren to meet, as representing Free Methodism, with a like number from the Bible Christians and the Methodist New Connexion respectively, to consider the practicability of uniting the three bodies. On the night of his death, Nov. 11, he attended a meeting in a New Connexion chapel, and over the tea-table expressed his strong wish and hope that the proposed union might take place. It is right to add that Mr. Hart was a liberal contributor to Christian objects.

Though interested chiefly in religious movements, Mr. Hart saw nothing inconsistent with his standing as a Christian man in entering upon public life. He held that the influence of Christianity must be all-pervading, and at a comparatively early age he undertook humble duties of a public kind. In 1876 he sought a seat on the City Council, and was elected. So well did he acquit himself as a councillor, that ten years after his first election he was made alderman of the city. He was very active in the discharge of his duties, having a full share of municipal burdens and honours. On several occasions he had the offer of the Lord Mayoralty, but for reasons of his own he thought proper to decline the honour. Eighteen years ago he was put on the Commission of the Peace.

Mr. Hart, though not a rabid politician, had very decided views on politics, being an adherent of the Liberal party. For many years he was Vice-President of the Birmingham Liberal Association, and on the retirement in 1885 of Sir R. Tangye from the treasurership of the National Liberal Federation, he was chosen his successor, and by annual re-election he held the office till his death.



THE LATE ALDERMAN W. H. HART.

These facts will indicate that, without undue laudation, Mr. Hart may be described as more than an ordinary man. His qualifications were of a superior kind. As a preacher, he was evangelical; he preached Christ and Him crucified, and was generally acceptable. For years he was accustomed to preach every Sunday evening to the same congregation, and although this did not hold good in his later years, he had acquired that graceful ease which usually comes only through constant practice.

As a business man he was able, prompt, and accurate. It is often justly complained that church finance is managed in a slovenly or dilatory way—even by men who are business-like in the regulation of their secular concerns. No such reproach could be laid at the door of the late Alderman Hart. His office of Connexional Treasurer in the United Methodist Free Church imposed important financial trusts or burdens upon him. These responsibilities were borne without complaint and their duties discharged with promptitude and fidelity.

The writer of this sketch knew Mr. Hart for forty years, and never had a friend more amiable and kind-hearted. "The memory of the just is blessed." Testimony to his worth was borne on the occasion of the funeral, which took place at Witton Cemetery, and was attended by friends representing many churches and other organizations. JOSEPH KIRSOP.

National Purity Crusade.

THE National Purity Crusade is pressing forward. This week-end about one hundred meetings will have been held since its opening. It has begun to stir deeper than the surface of public opinion in Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Cardiff, and districts surrounding these centres. At the close of the South Wales mission, now proceeding, it will carry the banner of purity through Kent. The meetings already held have been specially called for the purpose. We rejoice to note from the Vigilance Record, just issued, and devoted to very encouraging reports of these everywhere-needed purity meetings, that the secular press is speaking out vigorously against the vices which this crusade aims at suppressing, and against the apathy of the Church of Christ in face of them. The Lancashire Daily Post, in reporting the reception of the campaign in Lancashire, says:—

> The Christian churches have sometimeis been accused of weakness owing to theor fatal substitution of being and believing far doing. The vice which the Nation✓ Vigilance Association exists to check is on that neither Church nor State has made much headway against. Both priest and publicist rather affect to treat it as pariah than attempt to cleanse the reeking stream. The vice against which the National Purity Crusade is waged is a huge human sewer, into which are hurled the least desirable element of both sexes, degenerate men and degraded women. Surely, in these days of increased knowledge and improved sanitation, the teachers of the nation can imbue the ignorant with knowledge of the effects of a career of vice, and instil into them the principle that moral cleanliness is next to godliness. Unfortunately it is unfashionable to speak intelligently or plainly on this subject to those most in need of instruction, and many are left to learn in the painful and disastrous schools of experience.

At the final meeting in Manchester, called by the Lord Mayor in the Lord Mayor's parlour, his lordship was influentially supported; while the evening meeting was presided over by Mr. W. J. CROSSLEY, J.P., who said in every capital of Europe great societies had been formed on the model of this Association, supported by men in power. Public opinion on the subjects they dealt with had been greatly purified and exalted. A great change had come to pass in the opinions held on the Continent as to the necessity of work such as that in which they were engaged. It could not indeed have been otherwise when the facts were made known. One of the duties which lay before them was that of preventing the young mind from being tainted by impure literature, by bad pictures, and all the things which tended so much to corrupt. Similarly encouraging meetings and addresses by Mr. James Marchant are reported from other parts of the country.

The resolutions dealing with the Criminal Law Amendment Act Amendments have been passed at all the meetings with constant unanimity, and they have been sent to the M.P.'s for the various districts.

"PUBLIC MORALS."

The announcement of the volume on "Public Morals," published this week, is being well received up and down the country. It is looked upon as the book wanted by all who are concerned in the moral life of the home and the nation. An excellent opportunity is afforded for the circulation of what we believe will become a standard text-book in the subjects with which it deals. (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

The Opium Traffic.

A FALLACIOUS INFERENCE.

THE following note reached us a few days ago from "One Who Knows":—

"As a prominent place in your paper is frequently given to communications from those who are against the opium traffic, I think it right that you should know that the practice of sending opium to China by Government has been discontinued for more than forty or fifty years. It is all sold by auction in Calcutta to anyone who may wish to purchase it. All those who wish to stop the traffic can purchase any quantity of the drug, and throw it into the river or otherwise destroy it. Most of your readers may be in ignorance of this fact, but I can hardly think that the writers of the articles are in that position. I have been intimately acquainted with the subject for more than forty years, and shall be glad to reply to any questions from your readers."

EXPLANATION.

An esteemed correspondent, who has also followed the controversy for many years, supplies a brief answer to the question thus raised:—

"The writer has correctly stated the facts, except that it is 120 years, not merely fifty, since the Government of British India (then the East India Company) made its solitary and unsuccessful experiment in the direct opium trade with China. But it is strange that he can suppose that any difference in the moral aspects of the case arise from the circumstance that the Government of India finds it more convenient to carry on the trade through merchants to whom it sells the opium than in its own vessels. And the suggestion that the right way to stop an immoral trade would be for those who object to the immorality to buy up the opium produced for that trade surely needs no argument to show its absurdity.

"The issue may be made clear by a parallel case. In England, the sale of opium is a monopoly of druggists, just as in India it is a monopoly of the Government. The monopoly is, in both cases, only justifiable on the ground that the drug is a poison necessary for medical use, but capable of doing great injury if sold indiscriminately.

"Suppose the case of a druggist, amongst whose customers is a baby-farmer, known by him to be such, and to use opium habitually for drugging babies to death. If, with such knowledge, he continues, for the sake of profit, to supply the drug, will he not be deemed, even by the law of the land, an accomplice in the murders? And much more will the moral law so treat him. Yet what is the difference between such a case and the action of the Indian Government in selling the drug wholesale, well knowing that the great bulk of it will go to China, and there be used in debauching a great nation, lowering the British character, and, most grievous of all, hindering the Gospel of God's grace from having free course amongst the Chinese?

"The only argument of the letter appears to be adopted from that of Cain: 'Am I my brother's keeper?'"

New Testament for Paulicians.—The work of translating the New Testament into the language of the Paulicians, which is a dialect of Bulgarian written in the Roman character, is being carried out to its completion. Messrs. Bratán and Chorvát have just finished the translation and revision of Rom. i.-xi. These brethren spent some days recently together at O-Besenyö on the revision of this important passage. O-Besenyö is one of the chief seats of the Paulicians. The believers among them are mostly "Nazarenes," and they have a congregation there. When they saw that the revisers were working so hard—six hours a day together—preparing the translation of the Word of God for them, they expressed great gratitude. It is now evident that the work will cost us more than we at first expected. Readers of The Christian rendered us substantial aid when we started. I shall be glad if we can obtain still about £50. This season is a time of breaking of bread to the hungry. Let us give the Word of life to those who are hungering for it. Andrew Moody, D.D.

East London Tabernacle.

FOR years past the East London Tabernacle has been known as a rallying point of Christian workers, as well as the home and centre of a large church fellowship. With the advent of Rev. Edwin H. Ellis it seems to have renewed its youth, as was made plain on Thursday evening last, when the first anniversary of the present pastorate was celebrated. It was a great joy to see such a gathering, the galleries as well as the body of the spacious building being occupied by the assembled hosts of members and friends of the church and its work.

The early part of the meeting was devoted to reports. The treasurer's statement was encouraging, showing increase "all along the line," and testifying to hearty co-operation and mutual burden-bearing on the part of the members of the fellowship and other supporters of the work. Following the example of Pastor Archibald G. Brown, during his many years of ministry at the Tabernacle, Mr. Ellis also made a report; and without in the least disparaging the other addresses, this may be described as the most practical of the whole. He covered a wide ground—the work of the church, the Orphan Home, and the outside mission work. During the year, he said, the members had been drawn towards one another in the bonds of sympathy, and as pastor he had found a deeper and truer love for them all, as a result of more intimate knowledge and earnest co-operation. Death has been busy, and removals from the neighbourhood have affected the roll; but the figures show a net gain of seventy-four members during the year, bringing up the total to nearly 1,700,

Perhaps the other parts of the report, dealing with outside operations, were still more interesting. The Orphan Home gathers fatherless children, in the hope of leading them to Christ. Of the twenty-four children in the Home at the beginning of the year, four have left. The work which is more definitely styled "outside" consists of mission work in the East-End side-streets and slums. Men and women who will not come to the house of prayer are visited in their homes, and quite appalling ignorance is sometimes evinced by those who live within a stone's throw of churches and chapels. In one street, with a population of about 600, not more than twelve persons darken the doors of God's house, and only nine professing Christians were found. One woman said: "I know Archibald Brown, Mr. Cuff, and Dr. Guinness; but I have never heard of Jesus Christ." At the same time, in the very slums, cases have been found of Christian people, uncomplaining though very poor. In one room was found a sick man with a wife and family, the wage-earner being a little girl, who got 4s. 6d. a week by match-box making. A good woman who lived in perpetual straitness, said: "The Lord finds all I want, and when the bread does not come He takes away the appetite!"

Mr. Ellis also spoke of "The Christian" Buildings, in which there are now twenty-three families; and of the Devonport Street Mission, at which many poor folk are fed day by day. He appealed for the establishment of a Medical Mission in the neighbourhood, and a Convalescent Home at Southend.

Addresses were also delivered by Mr. T. A. Denny (who presided), Revs. James Stephens (Highgate), G. P. McKay (Stoke Newington); Dr. Harry Guinness, and Mr. George Nokes. The extent to which the foreign element is growing in East London, was the subject of remark on the part of some of the speakers.

Bible Flower Mission.—In acknowledging the kindness of the friends who have made it possible to cheer so many hearts and homes during the recent festive season, Mrs. Turton, of the Bible Flower Mission, 110, Cannon Street, E.C., writes of the relief which has been administered and its happy results. "There is good reason for believing that the providing for the body has in many cases led to the salvation of the soul. In addition to the ordinary work, at least 10,000 extra gifts were distributed in the Christmas season."

Temperance Work in Ireland.

AN interesting and important Temperance Conference was held recently in Longford. The Bishop of the Diocese occupied the chair, and the Dean and Archdeacon of Ardagh were present, with a large number of clergy and many representative laymen. A paper on the "Limit of Temperance Work," by Rev. W. Welwood, led the way to criticism by Revs. P. K. Lyon and F. de Burgh Sidley, D.D. The former was strongly opposed to half-hearted measures, and "limiting the Most High" as to His power against the drink curse.

The second paper, on "The Moral Responsibility of the Drunkard," by Rev. J. Thompson, was both clear and clever. It was truly stated that the tendency of the present day is to shift the burden of sin from the shoulders of the individual, and lay it upon "tendency," "heredity," "environment," &c. A great step would be gained if drunkenness was recognized as always a sin, on the same level as gluttony, immorality, and other evils proceeding primarily from lack of self-control. Mr. A. Kelly and Rev. T. Reilly spoke to this paper. Mr. D. Irwin also took part.

The afternoon session was opened by an excellent address from the Bishop, who spoke decidedly, but most temperately, from the Total Abstinence platform. A resolution commending the C.I.T.S. was proposed by Rev. Monk Gibbon, who advocated more sympathy in our dealings with non-abstainers, rational amusement to replace intoxicating excitements, and spoke hopefully of progress. This was seconded in a short address by Miss C. Maud Battersby, who showed our obligation to support total abstinence societies, as (1) members of a commonwealth—citizens, (2) members of Christ—Christians, (3) members of the Church, this term being taken in its widest sense as embracing the whole "blessed company of all faithful people," who acknowledge allegiance to the one Head of the Church, Christ.

Another resolution as to legislation was proposed by the Archdeacon of Ardagh, and seconded by Mr. J. D. Crosbie, D.L., who had journeyed all the way from Ballyheigue Castle, co. Kerry, upwards of three hundred miles, to give the most powerful and inspiring help of his address on Christian Total Abstinence. He has found by personal experience the influence gained by being "out and out" in the cause. "We cannot gain it, but if God be on our side no power of earth or hell can prevail against us." The conference was characterized by the freest expression of opinion on all sides of the question, a liberal spirit of "give and take," and ventilating of ideas which is likely to prove of the greatest service in letting more light in upon vexed problems and difficulties in furthering the cause of total abstinence.

Heart Queries.

ARE you living to the Saviour? Do you trust Him all the way?
Are you walking with enjoyment in His sunshine day by day?
Do you magnify His goodness? Do you thank Him for His love?
Do you seek His constant guidance to the Home of Rest above?

Is your heart at leisure ever in His service to engage?
Do you read with joy His message from the Scripture's sacred page?
Have you made the full surrender of the life that He has blest,
Since you heard His voice of kindness whisper, "Come to Me and rest"?

Is your motto "Ever Onward," in the race we have to run?
Are you looking unto Jesus till the victory is won?
Does the joy of His salvation cause your trusting heart to sing—
"I have riches to inherit, for my Father is a King"?

Do you witness for the Master in the world that round you lies?
Do you constantly remember, "He who winneth souls is wise"?
Do you blow the Gospel trumpet? Do you for the Saviour shine?
Are you fruitfully abiding as the branches in the Vine?

If the light of life be shining in your inmost heart of hearts,
If you're drinking of the fountain that eternal life imparts;
Through your soul may hope eternal as a stream of gladness run,
Till the Saviour hath perfected what He hath in grace begun.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

SECOND WEEK OF MEETINGS AT MILDMAY.

THE large number of letters which the evangelists are receiving combine with other evidence to show how deep is the impression that has been made on large numbers of the hearers. The meetings of Christians, as well as the general ones, have been marked by a growing sense of God's presence. Dr. Torrey's addresses on the power and practice of prayer did much to lay a foundation, and the following up of these by a series on the office and work of the Holy Spirit proved to meet a need that was being felt by many. The exposition of Scripture teaching has been done in such a way as to lead all classes of hearers into a fuller and better understanding. Hearts have been deeply moved by the seasons of prayer in which they were led, the note of earnestness which strikes every hearer of the addresses manifesting itself in a childlike directness of approach which carries all who take part at once into the very presence of the King.

One business man who at the beginning asked prayer specially for his employés has several times risen to report gracious answers, through one after another finding their way to the Lord, each time requesting the congregation to continue their intercession. Mr. Alexander has been much gratified with the improvement in the singing. Just as his preaching colleague reiterates the great facts of the Gospel, and uses every effort to leave such an impression on the mind as by the blessing of God shall not be effaced, so Mr. Alexander teaches these songs of salvation, patiently and skilfully trying to get them into the memory so that it will be impossible to forget them.

Tuesday afternoon's gathering was well attended, and the introductory service of song was marked by even more animation than Mr. Alexander had hitherto evoked by his tactful conducting. Hymn after hymn pealed forth, and the choruses especially were taken up by the congregation with unusual eagerness.

POINTS ON PRAYER.

Drawing attention to what he termed one of the most familiar passages in the Bible (Mark xi. 24), Dr. TORREY offered some timely and suggestive thoughts on the necessity of exercising a strong faith when petitioning the Throne of Grace. The secret of much unanswered prayer is that we do not believe that we receive when asking. How is it possible to pray in faith? Only by praying according to the Word. Faith must have a warrant. "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."

"IN THE SPIRIT."

Turning to Ephes. v. 18, the speaker emphasized the believer's dependence upon the Holy Spirit in prayer. The whole secret of prayer is found in the words, "in the Spirit," for it is the prayer that God the Holy Spirit inspires that God the Father answers. When we come into God's presence we should be sure that the petition we offer is not our own, but inspired by the Holy Spirit. Nothing can be more foolish than to rush heedlessly into God's presence, and ask the first thing that comes into our mind, or that some thoughtless friend has asked us to pray for. Oftentimes when we draw near to God, we do not feel like praying. What shall we do in such a case? Cease praying until we feel like it? Not at all, for when we feel least like praying is the time when we most need to pray. If we wait before God, telling him how cold and prayerless our hearts are, then it is that the Holy Spirit is sent to warm our hearts and draw them out in prayer. It will not be long before the glow of the Spirit's presence will fill our souls, and we shall pray with freedom, directness, earnestness, and power.

Dr. Torrey went on to say that some of the most blessed seasons of prayer he had ever known were when he commenced with a heart as dry as possible. "But in my helplessness and coldness I cast myself upon God, looking to him to send His Holy Spirit to teach me to pray. Soon my heart has grown warm, and I have felt myself to be in the presence of God. And I have seen some of the poorest prayer-meetings transformed into times of spiritual power."

PROFIT AND LOSS.

Prayer and praise intermingled during the early stages of the evening service, and the proceedings were of a hearty and inspiring nature. Gospel melodies followed each other in quick succession, after which Lord Radstock led in supplication.

Addressing himself to the unconverted, Dr. TORREY based a powerful appeal on the question, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" (Mark viii. 36). He pointed out that the question was not what shall it profit a man if he gain the present and lose the future, which in itself would be an important query. If a man were to gain the immediate present, and thereby lose the future, it would be but a poor bargain. But this is not the case, for a man who loses his own soul does not gain the present. A man living without Christ does not get the most out of the life that now is. Furthermore, the man who saves his soul, while gaining the eternal future, does not lose the present. To gain the world is to secure all the wealth, honour, social position, power, and pleasure possible. But even then, man falls short of that for which God created him.

Taking a number of the objects which men of the world allow to dominate their lives, Dr. Torrey showed how each must assuredly in time pass away without satisfying the deepest longings of the human heart. The speaker's searching and earnest words of exhortation were used of the Spirit to convict many of sin, and the after meeting was a time of reaping.

A Day of Fasting and Prayer.

Wednesday had been looked forward to with much prayerful interest, it having been decided to set aside the day for fasting and waiting upon God. It had been arranged that Christians should hold prayer meetings in their homes, to which neighbours were invited. The first public gathering at half-past ten was pervaded by a spirit of earnest devotion. Under Mr. Alexander's leadership a number of favourite melodies were heartily sung, and these were interspersed with words of testimony from Christians in every part of the hall. Some told of personal enlightenment and the quickening of the individual life, while others offered praise to God for answered prayer on behalf of relatives and friends.

When the opportunity was given for any who were led to petition the Throne of Grace, from many hearts there broke forth fervent prayers that God would continue to revive His work in the hearts of His people, and by His Spirit convict sinners of the error of their ways.

WHAT HINDERS PRAYER.

Dr. Torrey's address was particularly appropriate to the occasion, dealing with hindrances to prayer. At the outset attention was called to James iv. 3—"Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts"—a passage that shows most strenuous activity without any result. A selfish purpose robs prayer of its power. It may be a prayer for things which it is proper to ask, and which it is the will of God to give, but while the motive is wrong the prayer is powerless. When we ask any petition merely that we may receive something to use in our pleasures or our own gratification in one way or another, we "ask amiss," and need not expect to receive what we ask. For example, many a woman is praying for the conversion of her husband. That is a most proper thing to do; but if she desires her husband's conversion because it would be so much better to have a husband who sympathises with her, it is a selfish prayer. First, and above all, should be the thought that God the Father may be glorified, and because the thought cannot be endured of God being dishonoured by the husband trampling under foot the Saviour of men.

SELFISHNESS AND CHERISHED SIN.

Too often prayers for revival are selfish. When a church desires a revival in order that its membership may be increased or its position of power and influence strengthened, it is no wonder that the prayer is unanswered. Others pray for the baptism of the Holy Spirit, but even this may be done with a selfish motive. Many pray for such a baptism that they may be saved from the wretchedness of defeat in their lives.

Another hindrance to prayer referred to was that found in Isa. lix. 2: "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid His face from you, that He will not hear." Many to-day are crying to God in vain, because of sin in the life. It may be some sin of the past unconfessed and unjudged, or some sin of the present that is cherished, or some habit not regarded as a sin. Anyone who finds his prayers are unanswered should not conclude that the thing required is not according to the Divine will, but should go alone with God and offer the Psalmist's prayer, "Search me, O God, and know my heart, try me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me."

A third hindrance to prayer is found in Ezekiel xiv. 3. Idols in the heart cause God to refuse to listen to prayer. Asking the question, "What is an idol?" the speaker enumerated some of the objects which men allow to take the place of God in the heart, and appealed for an honest facing of the question, Is God first in my life? Other hindrances to prayer touched upon by Dr. Torrey included the lack of liberality toward the poor and God's work (Prov. xxi. 13); the unforgiving spirit (Mark xi. 25); and a wrong relation between husband and wife (1 Pet. iii. 7).

At the close of his address the speaker invited any who felt conscious of hindrances to their growth in grace, and were desirous that these should be removed to rise to their feet; and from the number who responded it was evident that God had been searching the hearts of His people, revealing many shortcomings and failures to enter into the full enjoyment of the privileges of Christian discipleship.

ABIDING IN PRAYER.

In the afternoon, Dr. Torrey again dwelt on the subject of the prayer life, turning first to 1 John v. 14. Putting the question, "How shall we have the assurance that what we ask is according to God's will?" he answered it under two headings—(1) By the Word of God. John xv. 7 shows us that answer to prayer is conditional—(1) "If ye abide in Me." The Lord Jesus tells us of two kinds of branches. Some remained in living union with the vine, so that the sap or life of the vine constantly flowed into them. For us to abide in Christ is to have such a relationship to Him. In so far as we have this experience shall we obtain that which we seek. This is praying in the Spirit, and is a reply to the objection that in prayer we ask God to change His wise will into conformity with our foolish desires. No, we submit ourselves to God to lead out our hearts in agreement with His will.

(2) Another condition is stated. "And My words abide in you." That is, if we are to pray with power, we must meditate and feed upon the written words of Christ; so, our prayers will carry back God's own words to Himself. George Müller, for example, fed his prayers with the fuel of God's Word. He let God talk to him before he talked to God. As Mr. Moody said, "it is best to let God do most of the talking."

PRAYING WITH THANKSGIVING.

We must remember, too, that prayer is to be made with thanksgiving (Phil. iv. 6). "Every time you pray for something new, do not forget to praise God for blessing you have already received, for nothing quickens faith like definite thanksgiving. How Paul's Epistles break forth into thanksgiving! How the Psalms of David abound with praise!

There is one more passage to be noted. In Luke xviii. 1-8 we are taught the lesson "not to faint." "Hear what the unjust judge saith!" If an unjust judge will hear, much more a loving Father. Keep on praying until you get the answer; and when you get an answer at the end of years, you realize as never before that He is a prayer-answering God.

THE REFUGE OF LIES.

A large congregation, which almost filled the capacious building, assembled in the evening, when Dr. Torrey gave a striking address on Isa. xxviii. 17, and applied five tests of a true and safe belief. (1) Does it meet the highest demands of our nature? (2) Does it make us better men and women? (3) Will it stand the test of a dying hour? (4) of the coming judgment? and (5) of the Word of God? The first refuge of lies dealt with was a trust in man's own morality. Do you say, "I am a man of good life and character, and do not feel my need of salvation?" If your goodness will stand these tests you are a remarkably good man, or —which is more probable—you have a remarkably poor conscience. "I have yet to meet a man trusting in his own morality who is made humble, considerate, prayerful, thereby. And, as to the dying hour, those who go through life with this unfounded trust, find their confidence leave them in the illumination of approach to God. I knew a man in Chicago who 'had no use for God and the Bible,' though an exemplary man in many ways. He 'needed no Saviour.' When he had only a few hours to live, his confidence gave way. He sent for me and said, 'What must I do to be saved? Oh, that I were a Christian!' And we shall see how little our own morality will stand the test of God's Word if we turn to Rom. iii. 20 and Gal. iii. 10."

Another refuge of lies is a trust in other people's badness. "I'm as good as other folks; I know men who profess to be Christians, who are hypocrites, and I am quite as good as they." If such an excuse will satisfy you, you have a conscience of a very low order. Will it do to say in the judgment, "I'm not very good, but I'm better than many others?" Turn to Rom. xiv. 12, and remember that "every one of us shall give account of himself to God."

A third refuge of lies is universalism. We urge a man to forsake sin, and he replies, "Oh no, I am trusting in God's love." But what do you think of one who thus makes God's love a plea for rebellion against Him? Oh, the black ingratitude that makes God's love, manifested on Calvary, an excuse for sin! If you teach universalism, the men you lull to sleep in sin will one day wake to curse you."

Another false refuge is infidelity. "I don't believe in your God or your Jesus of Nazareth." Well, is your infidelity making you a better man? I have known men made suicides, robbers, wife deserters, whose moral shipwreck was caused by infidelity; but I have yet to learn of one man made better by unbelief. Once in my church at Chicago I called upon all who had been saved from drunkenness or any flagrant form of sin by the power of the Lord Jesus Christ to stand up. More than two hundred men rose. Then, to give the other side a chance, I called upon any person reformed through reading Tom Paine. For a long time not one rose; but at last one ragged specimen of humanity stood up, but he proved to be drunk at the time. How will infidelity serve in the dying hour? There was a man in camp during the Civil War who was always bragging about his infidelity. On the second day of the battle of Pittsburg he was shot near the heart, and fell back crying, "Oh, God, give me time to repent!" And dare you tell God solemnly, alone, on your knees, that you do not believe in him?

One more refuge of lies is religion "How can that be?" do you ask. Why, here is a man who says he is all right because he goes to church; another, because he says his prayers regularly; another, because he has been baptized or confirmed. Their trust is in religion, but not in God. In that day "many will say, have we not prophesied in Thy name? . . . Then will I profess unto them, I never knew you."

THE SAFE REFUGE.

Is there a safe refuge? Yes. Is there a sure foundation? The Lord Jesus Christ. "Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation." And "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." He meets the highest demands of conscience. No man serves and follows Him but grows better day by day. He is a stay in the dying hour. I have seen men pass without a tremor, trusting in Jesus. I remember asking a Christian man, dying of rapid consumption, "Are you afraid?" "No," he replied, "the Lord is with me." When D. L. Moody was dying, he said, "Earth is receding, heaven is opening, God is calling." Yes, Christ is sufficient in the dying hour. When I am called to the bar, I shall have one answer, "Jesus," and that will satisfy God.

THE PERSON OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Thursday afternoon's meeting was full of encouragement. The testimonies given related largely to prayer answered in the conversion of relatives or friends who had been brought to the meetings. The effective nature of the evangelistic services was clearly demonstrated, too, by earnest words from some who had been brought to Christ during the mission, or had had their love and zeal revived.

The requests for prayer, read by Dr. Torrey, were in themselves evidence of the rising tide of evangelistic fervour. They were presented by Dr. A. T. Pierson, who prayed for "these men snared in the bonds of strong drink, these truant children, this unknown man so near to the Kingdom who asks prayer for the conversion of himself and his wife." Mr. Alexander gave a delightful rendering of "Sweet is the story of Jesus," and Dr. Torrey followed with an address on the Personality of the Holy Spirit, viewing the doctrine (1) from the standpoint of worship. How many sing praises to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, but yet fail to realize the true meaning of their words? (2) From the practical standpoint. "It is of the highest importance to think of the Holy Ghost as the One who is to use me, not as one whom I am to use. The one conception is Christian, the other heathen. If we think of the Holy Ghost only as an influence to be used, the thought tends to self-exaltation; if we think of this august Being as a person, it tends to self-abasement."

Proceeding, Dr. Torrey briefly referred to five lines of proof of the personality of the Holy Ghost. (1) Pronouns implying personality are used again and again in the Bible. John xv. 26 speaks of "He," not "It"; John xvi. 7, 8 says: "He will reprove," &c. (2) All distinctive characteristics of personality, knowledge, feeling, and will, are ascribed to the Holy Ghost: 1 Cor. ii. 10, 11, ascribes knowledge; 1 Cor. xii. 11, will; and passages in Romans, mind and love; Neh. ix. 20 ascribes intelligence and goodness, and Eph. iv. 30, meekness. In other words, the Holy Ghost is a Person concerned about all we say and do. (3) Personal acts are ascribed to the Holy Ghost (Rev. ii. 7; Gal. iv. 6; Rom viii. 26, &c.) (4) Offices are predicated to the Holy Ghost that can only be predicated to a person (John xiv. 16, 17, 26; xvi. 7). The Paraclete is to be an ever-present friend, "standing by." How sweet the truth that the Holy Ghost is always with us, banishing loneliness, and guiding us. (5) Treatment is predicated to the Holy Spirit that is only predicated to a person (Isa. lxiii. 10; Heb. x. 29). By these fine, clear lines of truth God teaches us that the Holy Ghost is a person. "You may have believed it as a theory, but is He a person to you, loving and tender? Do you know the fellowship of the Holy Ghost?"

"It was so easy to preach to-night, the Spirit of God was in this place." These were Dr. Torrey's own words with regard to Thursday evening: and the evidence on the faces of the people of a state of concern could be seen by others besides the evangelist. The writer of one of the requests for prayer had been converted ten days before, had brought her first soul to the Lord eight days later, and was now yearning for her parents. One lady wrote that she had spoken to the conductor of a crowded tram car, who at once broke down, confessed that he had been a professing Christian in years gone by, but had fallen away. "I wish," said Dr. Torrey, "you would speak to all the bus and tram conductors. They all have souls, I wonder if you know it."

THE WAY OF SALVATION.

A rousing presentation of the Gospel was given in the address, of which the subject was announced as "The Way of Salvation made as Plain as Day," based on the reply to the Philippian jailor (Acts xvi. 31). The way of salvation is to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; but what does it mean to believe on Him? The words mean just exactly what they do in modern speech to-day. To believe in any physician, teacher, or banker, is to put confidence in him; and to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ is to have confidence in Him as all that He claims and offers himself to be.

The Lord Jesus Christ claims and offers Himself to every one as (1) the Sin Bearer—Isaiah liii. 6; 1 Peter ii. 24; (2) the Deliverer from the power of sin—John viii. 36; (3) the Divinely taught and absolutely infallible Teacher, who speaks the very words of God, not words of His own, who dwells in God, and in whom God dwells—John xiv. 10; (4) our Master, who has a right to the entire control of our lives—John xv. 14; (5) the Light of the World, and the Guide to follow wherever He goes—John. viii. 12; and (6) our Divine Lord —John xiii. 13. If we have believed on the Lord Jesus Christ and are saved, it will show itself in (1) an assurance that our sins are all forgiven; (2) looking to Him and trusting Him for victory over sin; (3) unquestioning acceptance of everything He says; (4) studying His Word; (5) a surrender of the entire life to His control; (6) obedience to Him in daily life; (7) following Him wherever He leads; and (8) confessing Him before the world and the witnessing for Him to men.

"THE MIRACLE OF REGENERATION."

Point after point was driven home with direct application to those who thought they were believers, but had not realized all that it means. It takes but one instant to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ; it will take a whole lifetime to show you have believed in Him. The act of faith is instantaneous; the fruits of faith are life-long. Turning to those who had never set out on the way of life, Dr. Torrey exclaimed, "Oh the miracle of regeneration! I have seen a man one moment a drunkard, half drunk at the time, get his eyes opened enough to see the Lord Jesus and trust Him. The next moment I was looking into the eyes of a child of God."

Whenever an effort was made to ascertain how many were anxious to live more in harmony with a Christian profession, or to decide to follow Christ, a ready response was made from all parts of the hall. The inquiry room seemed to be the scene of more activity than on any of the earlier evenings. Men and women, both young and middle-aged, had a look of serious determination as they entered, which, before they left, had changed to one of happy satisfaction.

THE WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

As the mission has proceeded requests for prayer have been received in greatly increasing numbers, many of them have borne testimony to a deep spirit of inquiry, many have been of a sad nature, revealing the miseries of Christless homes. "For myself," wrote a lady, whose letter was read on Friday afternoon, "I do not understand what faith in Christ means, although my husband and I are nearing the end of life. Pray for us and for our children." Another writer said, "When I read in The Christian about your work I was broken down. Pray for my salvation." Such requests came from various parts of the country. "Pray for one longing to realize assurance of salvation." "Pray for an intemperate man left alone with five motherless children, and for the children." "Pray for a wife and mother who is a drunkard." After Mr. R. C. Morgan had gathered up these many needs in prayer, Mr. Alexander sang the favourite solo, "Yes, there's One, only One."

Dr. Torrey, continuing his addresses on the Holy Spirit, spoke from John xvi. 7-11, and showed that (1) His work is To convict men of sin. That is, to me, as a Christian worker, a most precious truth, for the heart of man is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, and to convict of sin is ever difficult. Men see the faults of others but not their own. It is others who are wicked; they themselves are righteous. Only the Holy Ghost can convict of sin, and in spite of prevalent carelessness and indifference among men, the Holy Ghost can and will work to-day, if we fulfil the conditions. "A lady said to me in Chicago, 'Why don't we see people stricken down with conviction, as in the days of C. G. Finney?' I replied, 'It is because we do not fulfil the conditions. We seek to do the work of the Holy Spirit.' Yes, if we want a revival we have an influential committee, a missioner from abroad, and wide-spread advertisement — a man-made affair, leaving out the Holy Ghost. I confess I like to see the old-fashioned conversions, with men weeping on account of sin.

(2) The sin of which the Holy Ghost convicts is Unbelief. Not because men get drunk or blaspheme; the sin of enormity is that of rejecting the Son of God. You can make a man ashamed of drunkenness, but the unbeliever is rather proud of his position, considering it a token rather of "intellectual superiority." (3) He will convict of Righteousness. Men will see their own sin, but the righteousness of God in Christ. (4) He will convict of Judgment. People say to-day, "Oh, leave the subject of punishment alone, preach about the love of God, and say nothing about the future penalty of sin. But when the Spirit of God teaches a man, he believes in the teaching of the Bible regarding future punishment. "I once believed in universal restoration; but one night I got such a vision of the Lord Jesus Christ, that I realized that those who reject such a Saviour must, indeed, deserve the penalty."

The Spirit, then, through the believer, convicts the world. This is one of the most solemn words in the Bible, for how great is our responsibility for allowing the Spirit to work unobstructedly, and convict men! "Do you want a revival in London? Then see to it that one person at least, and that person yourself, is in such dependence upon God, in such openness of soul, that the Holy Ghost may work through you for the salvation of the people."

A MEMORABLE GATHERING.

Friday evening's gathering was undoubtedly the crowning point of the week, not only in the matter of attendance; and the spirit of concern for the unsaved on the part of evangelists and workers was felt to be more intense. As the congregation were assembling a number of favourite hymns were sung and taken up with a zest and feeling that left no doubt as to the sincerity of the purpose which had drawn so great a company together.

The requests for special prayer included one from Edinburgh, and revealed the expectation with which Dr. Torrey's visit to the North is being anticipated. "We were glad to see by THE CHRISTIAN that you were having a day of fasting and prayer. It is only too much needed on the part of God's children. Several groups of Christians in our city are having a half-night of prayer." Among the more personal requests were those for an agnostic, who had shown much interest in the mission, but had not accepted Christ; for a father and mother given to intemperance; for a mother and sister who had attended several of the meetings, but had not been brought to a point of decision. These requests and many others were embodied in a petition by Dr. H. Grattan Guinness.

THE COST OF NOT BEING A CHRISTIAN.

Addressing himself to the unsaved, Dr. Torrey's appeal was based on Psa. cxix. 59, "I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto Thy testimonies." He recalled the circumstances of a young society lady who on being spoken to concerning her soul's salvation, confessed "I hate to think." How many (asked the speaker) go blindfold through life, blast their hopes in commercial and domestic life because they refuse to think? He went on to show that there is no place where the mistake of not thinking is made with such fatal results as in the matter of being or not being a Christian. With his wonted earnestness, Dr. Torrey proceeded to picture in graphic language what it costs not to be a Christian. Having shown that it costs the sacrifice of peace, joy, hope, manhood, God's favour, and Christ's acknowledgment in the world to come, the searching questions were put to the audience, "Are you willing to pay the cost of a Christless life? Do you say to-night, 'I will hold to my sin, to my godless companions and godless pleasures till death, and if Jesus Christ and heaven, peace, joy, hope, God's favour, Christ's acknowledgment, and eternal life slip, let them go?' That is what you say if you go away without accepting Christ."

Having requested the friends in the two front rows of the hall to vacate their seats to allow the converts who have been gathered in at previous meetings, Dr. Torrey asked any who had reached the moment of decision that night to come forward, and instead of two rows only being occupied no fewer than six were filled. Friday night will indeed be sacred to many as the turning point of their lives.

METHODS OF BIBLE STUDY.

The third week of the mission opened last Lord's Day morning with a largely attended meeting of Christians. From the numbers of young people present, and their close attention, it was apparent that the appetite for fuller instruction in Divine things had been whetted during the bygone fortnight. Young converts and believers of longer experience alike gave evidence that they were receiving help for the living of the Christian life.

The subject—"How to Study the Bible"—was one with a deep interest for all. The secret of victory in life and power for service was found in Joshua i. 8. Prosperity and success come from the proper study of the Word of God, for that involves obedience to its teaching. The points insisted on were that the Bible must be studied (1) with a surrendered will, John vii. 17; (2) obediently, James i. 21, 22; (3) daily, Acts xvii. 11; (4) as the Word of God, 1 Thessalonians, ii. 13 (a) believing everything it says, no matter how difficult for our finite reason to understand, (b) without discounting a single word, (c) as in God's presence; (5) prayerfully, Psalm cxix. 18; and (6) thoughtfully, Psalm i. 2.

While recognizing the value of the regular reading of fixed portions of the Word, Dr. Torrey expressed the belief that it is better to spend a stated time in this way than to fix the number of chapters to be read. One of the greatest faults with all kinds of reading is the habit of doing it too fast. We get through a book as a rocket goes through the air, and that is not the way to read any book. A book that is not worth reading slowly and thoughtfully is not worth reading at all.

The one book we cannot race through is the Bible, and sometimes we should not get through more than one verse in the time available. Marking was recommended, not so much for future reference as to concentrate attention at the time. Dr. Torrey said he marked phrases, sentences, or words every day; but he always kept one Bible unmarked, so that he might be able to read straight on without any distracting element. A vivid illustration was given of the matter for meditation and reflection to be found in such a universally familiar passages as Psalm xxiii. 1.

The intimations included open-air meetings at the close, for the purpose of inviting the people of the neighbourhood to the meetings.

POWER IN THE BLOOD.

Mr. Alexander's efforts on Sunday afternoon were mainly directed to instructing the congregation in several new hymns. One of these rapidly impressed itself upon the minds of those present—"There is power, wonder-working power, in the blood of the Lamb"—and will doubtless echo in the hearts of many for days to come. The truth contained in the verse was applied by the singer in a few fitting words.

So numerous were the requests for prayer that Dr. Torrey found himself unable to go through them all separately, but asked that the representations might be made the subject of solemn waiting upon God. Among the requests read by the speaker was one sent in by a man, himself a Christian for many years, whose wife and family of twelve were all unconverted; another was the case of prayer being asked by a wife for her husband, and another petition was on behalf of a man of eighty years of age, his son and five grandchildren living without God; but perhaps the most pathetic was that of a young man who feared that his day of grace had passed, and whose heart was filled with despair.

STUDYING THE WORD.

Rev. H. Elvet Lewis having led in prayer, Dr. TORREY announced that he intended prefacing his afternoon addresses during the ensuing week with a series of talks on "How to study the Bible." The best method, he said, was to be found in Luke xxiv. 27, and proceeded to give suggestions worthy of being adopted: (1) Begin at Genesis and Matthew, reading in the Old and New Testament at the same time; (2) do not hurry; (3) ask these five questions on each chapter—(a) What is the principal subject of this chapter? (b) Who are the principal persons in the chapter? (c) What is its leading lesson? (d) Which is the best verse? (e) What does this chapter teach about Jesus Christ?

THE TESTIMONY OF THE SPIRIT.

Turning then to John xv. 26 Dr. Torrey gave a luminous exposition of the office of the Holy Spirit in regard to His testifying of Christ. He showed that it is only through the testimony of the Holy Spirit that man can acquire a really living knowledge of Jesus Christ, and it is only the Spirit who can illuminate the Word. He had known a man read a Gospel over and over again, and see nothing in it; but when the same man has surrendered his will to God, in perusing the same Gospel he finds it an entirely new book. "It would be no use my preaching," said the speaker, "were I not sure of the Holy Spirit; and did not know that there is One in our midst who has the power to transform the life of the vilest sinner." At the close of his discourse Dr. Torrey asked any to rise who had friends they desired to see brought to Christ. Quite a number rose in response to the appeal, while others rose to signify a desire for prayer on their own behalf.

Lord's Day Evening.

For some time prior to the commencement of the meeting at night the hall was densely crowded in every part. Not only the attendance, but the glow and fervour manifested throughout the service, strikingly demonstrated the increased hold which the missioners have obtained upon the affection and interest of the people.

Such a congregation afforded Mr. Alexander a splendid field for his characteristic manipulation of "blocks" of the audience in chorus singing. With skill and restraint he led some remarkable congregational singing, particularly in the telling refrain :—

> Mercy there was great, and grace was free;
> Pardon there was multiplied to me;
> There my burdened soul found liberty,
> At Calvary.

Another impressive feature was the solo which became so popular in the Australian mission, "There is Power in the Blood." With apt transition, Mr. Alexander led on into "Rescue the Perishing," and the refrains were sung alternately with deep feeling.

It was amid solemn silence that Dr. Torrey read the requests for prayer. Nearly all of these directly asked intercession for conversion.

One, read at length, unveiled the inner life of the sender, who had sunk, through sin and degradation, into a terrible condition of spiritual darkness, but yet sought the petitions of God's people on his behalf. Dr. Warren led the congregation in prayer for these needy and erring ones.

PILATE'S QUESTION.

The subject of the address was described by Dr. Torrey as "the most important question ever put and answered." "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" (Matt. xxvii. 22). Things of the highest importance, which depend on the answer which we ourselves give to the question are—(1) Acceptance with God. In John iii. 18 we read that "he that believeth not is condemned already." Salvation depends not on our good works, nor the moral character we may have built up, but upon acceptance of Christ as our sin-bearer. (2) Peace of conscience. We cannot attain this by prayers and penances. How earnestly Martin Luther tried that way until the voice of God said to him, "the just shall live by faith," and he rested on the finished work of Christ. (3) Abiding joy. You cannot get joy through wealth or the honours and pleasures of the world. Millions have tried these ways, but not one has succeeded. Christ is the only way. (4) Eternal life. "He that hath the Son hath life." Some would say in their bondage, "Well, if a man leads a good life and fights against sin at the end of a career of victory he may obtain life." No, the moment you exercise saving faith in Christ you have it.

ACCEPTING OR REJECTING CHRIST.

A second line of thought is what we must do with the Lord Jesus Christ. (1) Either accept or reject Him. Men want to get rid of the responsibility, and do neither the one nor the other. Pilate sends Christ to Herod; Herod sends Him back to Pilate; then Pilate bids the Jews decide, "Christ or Barabbas." (2) Either confess or deny Him (Matt. x. 32, 33). There are but two great parties in the world, the Christ-confessors and the Christ-rejectors. (3) Let Him in or shut Him out. We have the power to open the door of the heart or keep it closed. "Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in." (4) Be for Christ or against Him (Matt. xii. 30). We take our stand with the band of those for Him, with Peter, and John and Paul, or with those against him, with Pilate and Herod, Annas and Caiaphas.

SAVIOUR AND KING.

A third line of thought is, "Who is Jesus?" He is the one appointed to be your Saviour and King. "But," says somebody, "in these advanced days we do not believe in the Son of God." In these superficial days a man who does not want to believe simply says "I do not believe," and thinks that ends the matter. Facts remain, however, despite denial. There are five Divine testimonies to the deity of Christ—the Divine life He lived; the Divine words He spoke; the Divine works he wrought; the resurrection from the dead; and His Divine influence upon subsequent history. To reject Him is to reject the Son of God.

At the conclusion of the address Mr. Alexander sang, "Would you believe and Jesus receive if He were standing here?" and at the repeated invitations of Dr. Torrey men and women rose in all parts of the hall to signify their acceptance of their Saviour.

ALDERSGATE NOON MEETING.

In an address given at the noon meeting, Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., on Monday last, Dr. Torrey based some telling words on Prayer, on John xiv. 12-14. At the outset he spoke of our Lord's words in verse 12 as "one of the most astonishing statements that ever fell from His lips." We hear workers say not only that they cannot get results, but that Christ did not get results. But the conditions differ. Christ, then in His humiliation, is now in His glory. And he tell us how results are to be attained—by Prayer.

It is necessary to examine His words and observe to whom these promises are made. To every professing Christian? No, for notice what follows, "Keep my commandments." The promise is to the obedient. The first epistle of John is an inspired exposition, written fifty years afterwards, of chapters xiv., xv., and xvi. of the Gospel, and in 1 John iii. 22 we read "Whatsoever we ask we receive of Him, because we keep His commandments."

Here, then, we trace one reason why so much prayer remains unanswered. It is because of disobedience. "I remember saying to a lady, 'You used to be a member of the church of which I am pastor, but to-day you are not a Christian, how is it?' Her reply was to the effect that she had tried the Bible and found it untrue. 'When my husband was sick,' she said, 'I prayed for his recovery, for does not the Bible say that what we ask we are to believe that we receive it, and we shall receive? Well, I prayed and believed, but failed.'

"It says something like that, I replied, but the words are, 'whatsoever ye.' Are you one of the 'yes?' She asked to be shown a definition. I pointed her to 1 John iii. 22, and asked her, 'At the time you prayed for your husband, were you keeping God's commandments, and studying to do His pleasure?' She saw the point, and returned to God."

Why do the obedient obtain answers to their prayers? Because they have the Holy Spirit to guide them in praying aright. Prayer is to be offered "in My name," to the Father, through the Son, in the Spirit. Here, then, is the whole doctrine of prayer, and here, too, is the purpose, that God may be glorified.

There is no approach unto God except through the precious blood of Christ. In My Name." "If I go to a bank here in London and present a cheque for a pound sterling to the order of R. A. Torrey, they will say, 'You have no claim or credit. We cannot pay you.' I should be asking in my own name. But if somebody with an account there writes, 'Pay R. A. Torrey £5,000," they will not ask me who I am or if I have got money in that or any other bank. They will honour the cheque, even if I have not a penny in the world, for it is not a question of myself at all." The Son of God puts His name to cheques on the bank of heaven. "In My Name."

"In Melbourne, I got a letter from a man who wrote me to the effect that he prayed, but got no answer. I said, in the meeting, 'This man thinks he has some sort of claim upon God, because he has been a faithful worker.' He came and heard me say so, and admitted it was true. No, the only way to have prayer answered is to pray to the Father, in the Spirit, by the Son, that the Father may be glorified."

Notices.

On Friday afternoon, January 30, at the meeting beginning at three o'clock, Dr. Torrey's address will be specially for evangelists and Christian workers. Subject—"How to Preach the Gospel." All are invited.

Arrangements have been made for a gathering of members of Circles of Prayer for World-wide Revival, to take place in Room No. 4 of the Mildmay Conference Hall, at 7 p.m., on Friday, 30th inst., to meet Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, when words of greeting, encouragement and exhortation will be spoken by these friends. Will those who have thus given themselves to prayer make a point as far as possible of being present, as the opportunity is likely to be very helpful to those engaged in the service of intercession for world-wide revival?

On Sunday Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander open their mission in Edinburgh, which they hope to carry on to the end of February. We propose continuing the record of their work, giving from week to week notes of the addresses, accompanied by personal impressions and incidents of the mission.

Mr. Henry Varley will conduct the services at Mildmay Conference Hall at 3.30 and 7 p.m. on Sundays, February 1 and 8.

Dublin Deaf and Dumb Association.—The annual meeting of the deaf and dumb and their friends was held on Monday last week in the hall of the Union Buildings. The deaf mutes also brought their children, as all were invited to the tea soireé, thanks to the kind support given by the merchants and traders of the city in response to Mr. Hewson's appeal.

MOTHERWELL.

FURTHER intelligence from Motherwell bears testimony to the far-reaching character of the mission recently concluded there by Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones. More than 3,000 pledges were taken.

LISBURN.

The mission at Lisburn, January 16-22, opened under encouraging circumstances. On the 16th there was a large and influential assembly of representatives of all the local temperance organizations in the town. The chair was taken by Rev. Joseph A. Stewart, who extended a hearty welcome to the visitors. Dr. Henry addressed the meeting in an eloquent and effective speech, in the course of which he said that during his fourteen months in Great Britain he has addressed about three-quarters of a million of people, while over 60,000 pledges have been taken. On the Lord's Day morning Dr. Henry occupied the pulpit in Railway Street Presbyterian Church. At four o'clock he addressed a very large assembly of men in the Orange Hall, and in the evening, in the same hall, delivered a powerful address to an audience which filled the commodious building to the doors. On the concluding night (says the Lisburn Herald), although the proceedings lasted for upwards of two and a half hours, the crowded audience showed no desire to part company with Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones. The greatest tribute that could be paid to them, is the fact that close on 600 pledges were taken. Several of the speakers expressed the hope that the missioners would be back again in Lisburn ere long, and this was heartily re-echoed by the audience.

A correspondent writes:—"The feeling is that no such mission has been held in Lisburn for many years. Roman Catholics were anxious to have it continued, and proposed to give liberally of time and money if the missioners could stay a week longer."

DUNGANNON, CO. TYRONE.

On Friday night, January 23, this town was favoured with a visit from Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and his singing colleague, Mr. T. Armon Jones. The First Presbyterian Church was filled with an audience of over 500 under the presidency of Rev. S. Lindsay.

After devotional exercises, led by Rev. Henry Shire, and the rendering of the sacred solo, "Count your blessings," in a very effective style by Mr. Jones, a powerful address brimful of facts, strange and startling, was delivered by Dr. Henry.

The address was frequently applauded and created a profound impression, and seventy-one signatures were subsequently appended to the total abstinence pledge. During the evening three additional solos were given by Mr. Jones to the evident delight of the audience.

LONDONDERRY.

The five days' mission in the Guildhall at Londonderry opened magnificently on Sabbath evening last. The fine building was crowded and hundreds were unable to gain entrance. Rev. Professor Henry, D.D., Moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly, presided, and great interest was manifested, no fewer than 115 new pledges being secured. In the afternoon Dr. Henry addressed the students at Magee College, and had a most profitable meeting. We hope to give further particulars of the mission next week.

Missing a Train.

(HYMN 380. SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS.)

ONE night, some years ago, when I was younger than I am now, I crossed by a night boat from Dublin to Holyhead on my way to London. My father was with me, and we had a rough passage, which made me very ill; so you may be sure I was glad enough when the steamer entered Holyhead harbour, and drew alongside the quay, so that I could get upon firm ground once more.

Our train was standing by, and taking our seats with our luggage, we soon steamed off to the town station. By this time, I began to feel hungry, and thought, as I had been giving out so much, I should like to put a little in; so when the train stopped I asked a porter how long we should wait; and as he replied, "Ten minutes," I adjourned to the refreshment-room, my father remaining in the carriage.

When I had satisfied myself, I returned to the platform, just in time to see the red lights at the end of the train disappearing out of the station! It almost made me feel sick again, especially as I found there would not be another for three hours—and it was just turned midnight! Not a very pleasant prospect, was it? However, there was nothing for it but to "keep smiling," and make the best of it; and in due course I reached London about breakfast time—once more a very hungry boy.

Let me tell you some of the lessons it taught me, especially in reference to the heavenly journey that we are all invited to undertake.

(1) The train was ready. The fires were lit in the engine, and the steam was up; the carriages were connected; guards and drivers were at their posts. But all this preparation was of no benefit to me, was it? God has done all that is possible for our salvation, by giving His only begotten Son; but unless we (each one for ourselves) make the start, and come to Him, we cannot have everlasting life (John iii. 16).

(2) I had my ticket, which my father had bought for me, and this gave me the right to travel; but I had not availed myself of it. Christ has paid the price for our salvation; we have the right to be saved; we must use it.

(3) My father was in the train; but that did not take me to London. Indeed, I wished he were not, for I should have been glad of his company while nursing my heels on a cold platform at that time of night. Most of you have Christian parents and teachers. You attend the House of God and the Sabbath-school. But valuable as these are, they cannot take you to heaven; you must yourself accept Christ as your personal Saviour.

(4) My luggage was in the train; but this brought me no comfort. Your life, I hope, is full of kindly words and thoughtful deeds, of which God takes note and records them in His book above; but your name must be written in the Lamb's Book of Life, if ever you are to follow them to the throne of the Most High. "Not everyone that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord! shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Many will say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name, and in Thy name done many wonderful works?" But the only answer they will receive is, "I never knew you. Depart!" What a dreadful thing to be shut out of heaven at the last!

(5) I had been wrongly informed by the porter of whom I had inquired. As you get on in life, in school or in business, you will meet companions and so-called friends, who will assure you that you need not hurry to decide for Christ. "Plenty of time," they will tell you, "to think about these things." But it is dangerous indeed to put off such an important matter as giving yourself to Him, and to neglect the invitation you have to become God's dear children. "Now is the accepted time" (2 Cor. vi. 2); "Boast not thyself of to-morrow" (Prov. xxvii. 1).

(6) For the sake of refreshments I had lost my train. Ah, how many there are, young and old, who for the sake of sins that do not satisfy, and pleasures that do not last, miss the eternal blessedness of God's best gift! Earth can give nothing worth losing heaven for. "What shall a man, or child, give in exchange for his soul" (Matt. xvi. 26)?

(7) But I had another train, and therefore another chance. But how much time I lost, and what discomfort I had to endure! Every day you live away from Christ, in the service of sin and Satan, is not only time and blessing lost; you run the risk of losing your own salvation, and miss numberless opportunities of working for Him.

Oh the years of sinning wasted—
Could I but recall them now!
I would give them to my Saviour;
To His will I'd gladly bow.

So sang a poor lad who had neglected God's great salvation till he was laid aside by a fatal illness. Then his greatest grief was that he had neither time nor opportunity left to lead others to Jesus. God promises a great many things to those who love Him, but He never promises another opportunity, even in this life, to those who reject His offer of mercy. Some of your young companions in Bible Searching have been called from earth by death within the last few months. Your turn may come any day. Dear boys and girls, I pray you, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh" (Matt. xxiv. 44); "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" (Heb. ii. 3).

And just a word to those of you who have come to Jesus, and know your sins are forgiven. Be true to Him day by day. Be like Andrew and Philip (John i. 41, 45), and bring brother, sister, or friend to Him. Pray that you may not have to sing, like the one I referred to above:—

Must I go, and empty-handed?
Must I meet my Saviour so?
Not one soul with which to greet Him—
Must I empty-handed go?

UNCLE TOM.

The Saviour's Pathway.

FROM Bethlehem to Calvary
The Saviour's pathway lay,
And little children heard His voice,
And saw Him day by day.

He saw them, too, with joy subdued,
He saw them and He smiled,
For He, though Lord of earth and heaven,
Was once a little child.

If any caused the children grief,
'Twas never caused by Him;
He loved them, for He came to die,
Their young hearts to redeem.

He knew that they were prone to sin,
And He their refuge proved;
And when their glad "Hosannas" rose,
Their song He greatly loved.

But Bethlehem's land, nor Calvary's height,
Retains His presence now,
To heaven He's gone, that children dear
Before Him there may bow.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

Sunday, February 1.

A Day of Decision (Acts ii. 12-21, 37-42).

IN 1823, Lieutenant Henry Havelock, afterwards baroneted for his gallant relief of Lucknow, but then in his twenty-eighth year, embarked for India in the General Kyd. On board he came in contact with a humble and unpretending man, James (afterwards Colonel) Gardiner. By his instrumentality Havelock was led to that decision for God which shaped his eternal destiny. He thus describes this great turning point in his history:—

"It was while I was sailing across the wide Atlantic towards Bengal that the Spirit of God came to me with His offer of peace, and mandate of love, which, though for some time resisted, at length prevailed. Then was wrought that great change in my soul which has been productive of unspeakable advantage in time, and, I trust, has secured my eternal happiness."

May such a change come to thousands, and tens of thousands through the world on this our Decision Day!

Does any one glance down these words who is not decided? No position is more unreasonable or unhappy. The undecided soul is open to every gust of the wind, to every heave of the tide. He cannot be happy in the world, yet he hesitates to throw in his lot with the people of God. In neither position is his soul at ease. If God is God, follow Him; if Baal, follow him; but don't attempt to please and follow both.

You are not asked to feel deeply; you need not wait till all your questions are answered; you cannot be expected to be a completely matured Christian at a bound; but you can and should resolve to take Christ's side. You can and should look into the Master's face, and tell Him that you accept His offer, and yield Him your life. You can, and you should, believe that at this moment He takes what you give, though you may have no quick-answering emotion. It may even be needful for you to go on through long days with the quiet affirmation, I am His.

If such cases are to take place in any numbers on our Decision Day we, active Endeavourers, must prepare for it by seeking a new infilling of the Holy Spirit. He is in us, but, by leakage or evaporation, His gracious indwelling may have become greatly reduced, and we need to go apart into some lonely place where we may realize that He is within (1 Cor. vi. 19), and re-affirm this blessed fact, and then turn to Him to repeat in us that infilling which is ours in the Risen Lord, but which awaits the repeating claiming of our faith.

That young men and women have a right to this is obvious from the prophecy of Joel, quoted by the Apostle Peter. Sons and daughters, young men and handmaidens, are emphatically mentioned.

When God is with us, as with Peter, we do not utter our own eloquent thoughts and words. In Peter's case, some two-thirds of the sermon on the day of Pentecost consisted of quotations of Scripture, and the remainder of the recital of facts. But there was an energy, a living force, an inspiration in his words which carried all before them, and acted as sparks on dry tinder. The mob soon became a congregation. Here a man suddenly cried out as though he were in anguish for an only son, and he was answered by another, as though he were in agony for his first-born.

Whenever there has been much previous prayer similar results will occur still. And how blessed is the after-meeting work! I don't wonder Mr. Moody used to hurry through his auditorium services that he might get to personal dealing.

Read Bunyan's sermon to "Jerusalem sinners," and see the marvellous use he makes of "Every One of You." "But I drove the nails into His hands." "Every one of you," said Peter. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

One of the first foreign countries to receive Christian Endeavour was China. In spite of the loss sustained during the Boxer massacres, when the North China Endeavour Union lost half its members, the country has now 148 societies.

President Roosevelt has sent the following message to Endeavourers for February 1 (the anniversary of the foundation of the movement:—"Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavour, I greet you and wish you well. Your body stands prominent among the organizations which strive towards a realization of interdenominational and international Christian fellowship, as well as among those which stand for ideals of true citizenship, that is, for the cultivation, not alone of a high standard of civic and social righteousness, but of the strength, courage, and common sense necessary for living up to such a standard."

International S.S. Lesson.

Sunday, February 8.

The Church at Corinth Founded (Acts xviii. 1-11).

Golden Text: 1 Cor. iii. 2.

ATHENS, the ancient capital of southern Greece, remained the home of intellectual, artistic, and educational interests. Corinth, the new capital under Roman rule, became the seat of political and commercial power; an important business city, centring the traffic between Europe, Asia, and Africa. The Isthmian games were celebrated there (1 Cor. ix. 24). A busy, wealthy, wicked city.

I.—From Athens to Corinth.

Paul left the city of "too superstitious" worshippers of beautiful vanities (nothings, 1 Cor. viii. 4), clever scientific religionists who made a great show of devotion (to what? Is. xli. 29; 1 Cor. x. 20), to go among a people whose whole heart and life were given to money-making, feasting, and pleasure-seeking.

Paul had left Athens smarting not under the stripes of the rod, as at Philippi, but the jeering laugh of the rabble in the market-place and the well-bred sneers and polite excuses of the Areopagites. His Master had been driven from Nazareth once by the mob and then by unbelief (Luke iv. 16-29; Matt. xiii. 58).

Paul entered Corinth alone, ailing in body, poor, and unwelcomed; but the God of Elijah and Jonah had prepared for him (1 Kings xviii. 4-19; Jonah iv. 6). "Careth for you" (Matt. vi. 32-34). A lodging, friends, and work. Aquila and Priscilla, fugitives from Rome, returned afterwards (Rom. xvi. 3-5). They may have grieved when driven thence; but God had His plan for them (Heb. xiii. 2). A small thing brought the three together; but how much came of it? (2 Tim. iv. 19). Apollos (Acts xviii. 24-26). Paul was as much an Apostle while tent-making and when preaching in public (2 Tim. iv. 2). The work-time was spent to spiritual as well as bodily profit (1 Cor. x. 31).

II.—From Jews to Gentiles.

The good report brought by Silas and Timothy from Thessalonica inspirited Paul; the fire of God's Word burned within him—Jer. xx. 8, 9. He testified more boldly for Christ. The opposition was bitter, united, and blasphemous (Matt. xii. 31). Paul had told them the way of Life. He was clear (Luke x. 16). The Jews rejected the One Foundation (1 Pet. ii. 4, 7, 8). Crispus came out (1 Cor. i. 14). The Lord opened another door (v. 7).

III.—From a Sad Entry to a Joyous Exit.

No wonder Paul was sad-hearted. Sick "in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling" (1 Cor. ii. 3). "Buffeted" (1 Cor. iv. 11). "In jeopardy every hour." His life aimed at. The people hard. Not tell them of Jesus any longer. Go elsewhere. Like Joshua just before the siege of Jericho. The captain of the Lord's hosts stood before him (Josh. v. 13-15). "This same Jesus"—Promise, Presence, Protection, Help

All Corinth could be no match for Christ. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" (Rom. viii. 31, 32; v. 10.) The Lord saw what Paul could not till his eyes were opened. Beautiful jewels among the hard stones of Corinth. Read names given (1 Cor. vi. 9, 10); "and such were some of you." The magnate of the "Cross of Jesus" drew out the jewels. Paul obeyed his Captain's orders, "Speak; hold not thy peace" (v. 9); and "by the Spirit of God" those very men and women were "washed, sanctified, justified, and made temples of the Holy Ghost" (1 Cor. vi. 11-20), "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." So

From Unlikely Ground a Rich Harvest.

The church at Corinth. From many a troublesome class the Lord draws out His brightest jewels. Teachers, take heart. "Speak a word for Jesus."

AN EVERYDAY RELIGION.

Some workmen at Doncaster were recently invited to attend a special church service arranged on their behalf. The men replied that the curate who had asked them had never himself worked manually as they had at the gasworks, and they challenged him to join them at their own task. The clergyman accepted the challenge, and for a whole day undertook the duty of stoking alongside the men. By doing the manual labour he was able to influence the workmen of the whole locality, and Paul, by joining other craftsmen, was able to point them to Christ Jesus in their daily occupations. While abiding with the tentmakers the Apostle was able also to reason in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuade both the Jews and the Greeks (vv. 3, 4). Our religion should be seen of all men at all times, and in business, home, and church surroundings we should be epistles, known and read of all men.

SPREADING THE GOSPEL.

When John Wycliffe was persecuted for preaching the Word of God, he retaliated by sending out "Poor Priests" in all directions. They were itinerant preachers and laymen, who sought to teach the Gospel to the common people, and they were able to supplement the defective ministry of the clergy of the day. The Poor Priests went barefooted, and wore long gowns of coarse cloth; and they held their meetings in churchyards and market places. So successful was their work that a critic of the time declared that every other man in England would soon be a Lollard if the followers of Wycliffe were allowed to travel through the length and breadth of the land. When Paul was opposed by the Jews, "he shook his raiment and said unto them, from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles" (v. 6), and from that day until now the Word of the Lord has been declared unto us who are of the Gentile races.

BY THIS CONQUER.

When Constantine first favoured Christianity, he was opposed by Maxentius, who championed the cause of paganism. Constantine at that time saw, either in a vision or as a natural phenomenon, a luminous cross in the sky, and heard in a dream the command, "By this conquer." The symbol of the cross was placed upon the standard of Constantine, and at Milvian Bridge he fought the battle of faith against the powers of paganism. The Lord spake to Paul in the night by a vision: "Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace; for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee" (vv. 9-10). To all who have the eyes and the ears of faith come both the vision and the word of God. When we fear and hold our peace, regarding not His voice, it is often because we are lacking in spiritual eyesight and hearing.

CHRIST AND HIM CRUCIFIED.

Soon after the Metropolitan Tabernacle was opened Mr. Spurgeon said, "I received some years ago orders from my Master to stand at the foot of the Cross until He came. He has not come yet; but I am to stand there till He does. If I should disobey His orders and leave those simple truths which have been the means of the conversion of souls, I know not how I could expect His blessing. Here, then, at the foot of the Cross I tell the Old, Old Story; stale though it may sound to itching ears, and worn threadbare as critics may deem it." In like manner Paul was determined, as he afterwards reminded the Corinthians, not to know anything among them save Jesus Christ and Him crucified, and in that spirit the Apostle continued at Corinth, teaching the Word of God among them (v. 11).

Personalia.

Mr. Thomas Payne, the well-known evangelist, while conducting a mission at Oak Hall, Caterham, last week, met with an accident. On Thursday night, while coming out of the hall, he caught his foot in an oil stove and fell, breaking his leg in two places. His address for the present is Mr. Lance, Barrossa, Upper Caterham, Surrey.

Mr. Philip Hurditch still lies in a precarious condition, in the tenth week of his serious illness, but he successfully passed through a dangerous operation last week which he had not strength enough to undergo before. The latest report is that he is progressing favourably, though slowly. Earnest prayer is still desired for his complete recovery.

Rev. J. C. Lawson, after spending a little time in this country, recently left for his sphere of labour in India. Writing on board ss. Oriental, Red Sea, January 1, he says: "As we passed Crete of course we were reminded of that noble man of God—Paul. We left Suez at seven this morning. Of course we had very profitable thoughts about that other noble man of God—Moses. The world stands sadly in need of such men to-day, and God is raising them up everywhere. Our loving Heavenly Father is very good to us. On this first day of the New Year my thoughts are in a very special sense directed to His great love and goodness. His Holy Word and Dr. Pierson's 'Life of George Müller' have been my special companions thus far on my journey."

Visiting Workhouse Inmates.—For some years a band of workers connected with the Chalk Hill Baptist Chapel have taken the Gospel to the old people of Watford Workhouse. From Sabbath to Sabbath some fifty or sixty of the oldest inmates have listened with eagerness to the Word faithfully preached. A few Sundays ago a number of them expressed their desire to possess a Marked Testament. Some thirty-five copies were distributed. But, unfortunately, the majority of the old men were unable to read owing to failing eyesight. In order that they may be able to study the Scriptures, the secretary, Mr. J. G. Alexander, will be glad to receive gifts of spectacles which friends may have to spare. He may be addressed, 47, Lower Paddock Road, New Bushey, Herts.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Gipsy Smith at Bolton.

GIPSY SMITH began a ten days' mission in the Victoria Hall, Bolton, on Saturday, January 17. The great building was packed in every part, and the evangelist had a grand time in speaking to Christian workers. It was a bright, and yet practical talk to all sorts of Christians on the best way to do the Lord's work in bringing sinners to Christ. The Sunday services were remarkable, for in the afternoon the hall was filled in every part, and the people listened to a heart-reaching sermon. In the evening the hall was filled at six o'clock, and an overflow meeting, addressed by Mr. James Atherton, of Wesley Mission, was held in the Lower Hall. This meeting was crowded, but hundreds of people were turned away disappointed. The inquiry-rooms were requisitioned by sincere seekers, over seventy men, women, and young people being helped by the workers.

Mr. James W. Moodie in Glasgow.

A fortnight's mission, with a good deal of interest and saving result attending it, has just been held in the Gordon Halls, Paisley Road, Glasgow, under the auspices of the South-west section of the Mizpah Band, of which ex-Bailie Jack is chairman. The mission was commenced on Sabbath evening, 11th inst., and from the first night encouraging results have appeared. Men and women of mature years, as well as younger people, have professedly been led to Christ, and the workers, as well as the evangelist, have been gladdened and cheered. Mr. JAMES W. MOODIE has preached with all his accustomed earnestness, and his plain incisive speech has been used to stir up the consciences of men. Sin has been tearfully confessed, wrong-doing humbly and penitently acknowledged, and in dependence on God's help a new life of faith in Christ has been entered on. J. C.

Rev. James Lyall at Invercargill.

Describing the mission lately held at Invercargill, New Zealand, by Rev. JAMES LYALL, the Outlook says: "For some time past prayer meetings, both public and private, have been made in this town for the success of the Mission meetings which were to be conducted by Rev. James Lyall, and a striking answer has been received now that the mission has come amongst us. Starting with a large audience, the preacher so thrilled the audience with his message and his simple but eloquent expression of it, that many were again in their seats at the subsequent evening meeting, and have continued to attend throughout the week. The audiences have been growing larger every evening in spite of very adverse weather conditions, and the impression made is clearly very deep. The most gratifying feature of the mission is the number of young people, men and women, who have been converted, and now openly acknowledge their acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour and King."

St. Margaret Hall, Dunfermline.

At the first of the services for the people held in the St. Margaret Hall, Dunfermline, by Rev. D. M. WALKER, on Lord's Day evenings, crowds were waiting in the street half an hour before the service began, and on the doors being opened the hall filled rapidly until, when the service was started, even standing room was not available. "A number of persons," says a local paper, "had to stand during the entire service, while the seats on the platform and the steps of the galleries were utilized. The audience was not only large, but most reverent, interested, and appreciative. The pieces rendered by the choir and orchestra were much enjoyed, while the singing of the hymns, which were from Sankey's popular book, was truly congregational and hearty. The reading of the portion of Scripture descriptive of the downfall of Jericho, which was the subject for the evening, was followed with the greatest interest. The text was chosen from Heb. xi. 30 and 31. The preacher chiefly directed the attention of his audience to the three references in the text—Jericho, Rahab, and Faith. The address was listened to with the utmost attention."

Mr. McLean at Liverpool.

Mr. R. MCLEAN has conducted a very fruitful mission at St. Peter's Church, Everton, Liverpool. This is the evangelist's second visit. Last January he had great blessing, but this mission has eclipsed the last in every way. The vicar, Rev. T. W. H. Copner, with Rev. A. G. Hopkins, and an earnest band of workers, had visited the parish, inviting the people to the mission, while the Boys' Brigade Band and Ash Grove Concertina Band paraded the streets and held open-air meetings. Children's services were held two nights during each week before the usual evangelistic service. These came to be so crowded that many were unable to gain admittance. Addresses were given at the Men's Union in the hall on two Sundays, and in the church on the third, when there was a very large gathering. Among those who decided were several Roman Catholics and a professed Atheist. Meetings held for women were well also crowded, and many decided for the Master. Bible readings were given on Sunday mornings to youths and girls; several out of these meetings have been led to Christ. The evangelistic meetings were well attended from the beginning, and continued to grow in interest and numbers until, on the last Sunday night, every available place was occupied. Throughout the mission the Holy Spirit worked mightily in convicting, converting, and strengthening. Night by night souls were led to Christ, and God's people have been greatly blessed. The vicar said on Saturday night that it was the most fruitful mission ever held in the parish to his knowledge. We give God all the glory.

W. D.

Shercock, Co. Cavan.

For some time past several young ladies, labouring under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. R. Todd, of Dublin, have been conducting Gospel meetings in this part of co. Cavan. Their work has been greatly owned and blessed of God in leading souls to decision. In some cases whole families have been brought to the Lord, and are now rejoicing in the Saviour's love. On the 6th inst. an all-day conference was held in the schoolhouse at Corglass. There was a large attendance, and many bright testimonies were given for the Lord as to His saving and keeping power. A. B.

A ten-days' Gospel Mission is being held at Silloth, Cumberland, by Rev. JESSE MAYO in connection with the Free Churches of the town. Much spiritual power has been felt throughout the Mission, all the meetings being well attended. Special attention has been given to the young people, a large number having offered themselves to Jesus. R. W. JOHNSON.
Sec. Silloth F.C. Council.

Mr. HENRY COLLINS, of the Evangelization Society, is conducting a fortnight's mission in the Town Hall, Feltham. Mr. H. C. Evans writes: "Already God's seal has been set upon the meetings, the hall being quite full for the first service on Lord's Day last. Mr. Collins' visit to Feltham some fourteen months since was greatly blessed, and some of those taking part in these services were converted on that occasion."

Mr. GERALD COULTAS writes:—"We have had some blessed seasons of late at the Tabernacle, Whyteleafe. At our Sunday and Monday night prayer-meetings many earnest souls meet to pray for a revival. A prayer-circle has been formed, who have agreed to pray each day at noon for the salvation of souls. At our yearly gathering of believers, on January 19, a helpful address was given by Mr. R. C. MORGAN on 'Abraham.'"

Mr. A. G. Cottrell, in the course of a description of a mission held in connection with the new Wesleyan chapel at Milford Haven, says:—"Mr. C. NOAKES, of the Evangelization Society, has conducted a fortnight's mission. Prayer for revival has been answered, and a large number of the unconverted have sought the Saviour. The sister churches have also benefited by the mission. The men's meetings each Sunday afternoon were a special feature."

At East Molesey Baptist Chapel an eight days' mission has been concluded by Rev. S. H. KEARSEY, of India. The weather was somewhat unfavourable to larger attendances; but the interest was well sustained throughout. Seldom have we listened to a more earnest advocate of total abstinence. The thrilling stories of Mr. Kearsey's thirty years' experience in India made a powerful impression on his hearers, and many were led to sign the pledge.

JOHN C. DALRYMPLE, Pastor.

Mr. THOMAS PAYNE has just held a most helpful four-days' special mission services in connection with St. Clement's Mission Hall, Liverpool. The power of the Spirit of God was very manifest in the meetings, and many of our people, including some of the very poorest of men, came right out to the penitent form and accepted the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour.

"Oh, for the showers on the thirsty land!
Oh, for a mighty revival!
Oh, for a sanctified, fearless hand,
Ready to hail its arrival!"

The Lord send a tidal-wave over our sin-stricken land!

MUSGRAVE BROWN, Vicar.

Mr. JAMES WHARTON, who is a lover of our coloured brethren, is again on an evangelistic tour in the Southern States. He has been holding series of meetings in different places, and with most encouraging results. After spending Christmas at the Lincoln Academy, King's Mountain, N.C., he proceeded to Talladega, Ala., and from thence to Atlanta, Ga. He is very much encouraged by the fact that so many of those who confessed Christ under his preaching on former occasions have turned out well. Some are doctors, some lawyers, others dentists, storekeepers, farmers, tradesmen, &c., all having a good standing as Christians.

About Books.

Mrs. Russell Gurney's Letters.

THOSE who have followed the progress of religious thought during the past thirty or forty years, will find much to interest in Letters of Emelia Russell Gurney, edited by her niece, Ellen Mary Gurney. (12s. 6d. Nisbet.) Not that the contents of the volume are adequately described by any such intimation. Rather, the letters represent the mental activities of a lady of refinement and intelligence, and record the experiences and observations of a life that was singularly beautiful and influential.

Among the correspondents of Mrs. Russell Gurney were—Thomas Erskine (of Linlathen), Julia Wedgwood, Rev. Andrew Jukes, Lady Mount-Temple, and Mrs. Pearsall Smith. In some cases both sides of the correspondence is given, and the reader finds himself in the confidence of cultured and earnest inquirers as to truth and godliness. The complexion of the dominant ideas may be judged from the personnel of the correspondents. There are deeply interesting references to the famous conferences at Broadlands, convened by the late Lord Mount-Temple, also notes of travel in Palestine and other lands.

The husband of the lady whose letters are presented in this handsome volume, was one of the Commissioners to Jamaica in 1866, appointed to investigate matters connected with the disturbances there under Governor Eyre. His wife accompanied him, and copious selections are given from her journal letters written to her mother. Two winters in America in the seventies, and a journey to Sicily in 1889, stimulated epistolary exercises which will yield much pleasure to thoughtful readers. There are highly-finished portraits of the writer and her distinguished husband.

Some very thoughtful articles on "Our Unhappy Divisions," which Rev. N. Dimock contributed recently to The Churchman have been issued in a substantial pamphlet by Mr. Elliot Stock, with the title Christian Unity (2s. 6d. net). When it is a case of bringing light from Scripture, or the fathers, reformers, or divines of more modern date, Mr. Dimock is a judicious and careful guide and teacher. Churchman that he is, he shows that episcopacy is by no means essential to the esse of a Christian church, and he quotes great ecclesiastics to prove that this view has from time to time had consideration among Episcopalians. He has studied the history of Nonconformity, which is more than can be said of some historians who have decried it. Far above ordinances as to Church government, he places the evangelization of the world, and he thus brings many a solemn thought into a very practical discussion.

Primitive Semitic Religion To-day. By Samuel Ives Curtiss, D.D., Professor of Old Testament Literature and Interpretation, Chicago Theological Seminary. (6s. net. Hodder & Stoughton.) Professor Curtiss gives us a record of researches, discoveries, and studies in Syria, Palestine, and the Sinaitic Peninsula; and in the title of his book he implies a proposition as to the meaning of the whole. We receive the facts without the inference, and we think many will be disposed to do the same. The observations and theories are not all new; and the "comparative religion" conclusion is too dominant. Many of the facts are agreeable to a generalization pointing in another direction. Nevertheless, the work is of profound interest, and we would single out for special attention the description of sacred groves as they are found to-day, and the account of the Nusairiyeh and their rites in North-Western Syria. There are plates and other illustrations.

The Bible is a book for all, and its treatment at the hands of critics is the concern of all. Is the book "cut to pieces," then unbelievers as well as believers are wronged. Is the book confirmed in its appeal to spiritual confidence, then there should be joy in the Church and a message of life for "them that are without." What unbelievers as well as believers have said and done to the Scriptures in recent years, is admirably outlined in Bible Criticism and the Average Man, by Howard Agnew Johnston, Ph.D., D.D., New York. (3s. 6d. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.) Those who wish to know the aims and claims of criticism will find them set forth in these pages. They will see more; they will find some of the aims criticised and set aside as of no value, and some of the claims disallowed after careful examination. Many will want to know no more about criticism than Dr. Johnston tells them; they will, for the most part, however, be the better for the explanations afforded by his book. The entire tendency of these pages is to support the conclusion that the Bible is the abiding Word of God, and this is done in a thoughtful and instructive way.

The Churches.

Church of England.

The old parish church of Newland, Hull, of which Canon Lambert is vicar, has been re-opened by the Archbishop of York in the presence of a large congregation which included a representative gathering of local clergy. The church has been enlarged and re-decorated at a cost of £2,500

Rev. E. K. Botwood, vicar of St. Mary, Spital Square, London, and at one time curate to the late Canon Green, vicar of Friezland, has been appointed by the trustees to the important living of St. Mark's, Victoria Park, London. St. Mark's has a population of nearly 20,000, with six daughter churches and mission halls and 2,000 children in the Sunday-schools.

Rev. W. J. Cole, the newly-appointed vicar of St. Mary's, Sheffield, has already commenced his work. On Sunday week he preached morning and evening to large congregations, and in the afternoon addressed the men's Bible class. At a social gathering, at which Archdeacon Eyre was present, a cordial welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Cole was given by the wardens, churchworkers, and other members of the congregation. Mr. Cole enters upon the work of a large and difficult parish with promise of much encouragement.

Congregational.

Shelley Church, Huddersfield (Rev. E. J. Sanderson), reports progress in every department, and a higher membership than in any previous year. The finances are all satisfactory.

A Congregational Union has just been formed at Chester, with the double object of drawing the churches more closely into line, and commencing a forward movement of Congregationalism in the city and surrounding district.

Montague Street Church, Blackburn (Rev. Fred Robinson), reports a most successful year. A debt of £430, which had rested on the buildings for fourteen years, has been swept away. The membership has increased, and more sittings are now let than for many years. The income for all purposes exceeded £900.

The authorities of Westminster Chapel have agreed to invite Rev. Dr. Samuel George Smith, of the People's Church, St. Paul's, Minnesota, to become its minister. The chapel was rebuilt in 1865, at a cost of £20,000, during the ministry of late Rev. Samuel Martin, whose preaching attracted large congregations, but the congregations have gradually fallen off to such an extent that the new pastor has an arduous task to face.

Baptist.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of South Street Church, Greenwich, S.E., has broken down in health. His resignation, which was to have taken place in the spring, has had to be anticipated by the deacons, who have relieved Mr. Spurgeon of further ministerial duty.

The annual church and congregational meeting at Junction Street, Derby, was largely attended. Rev. Philip A. Hudgell (pastor) presided. Interesting and satisfactory reports were presented by the secretary, treasurer, and representatives of eight different societies. The membership numbers 280, and the scholars in actual attendance 940.

In connection with the church at Epsom, the friends (who are at present holding their services in an hired hall) have decided to raise £1,000 towards the purchase of what is considered the finest site in the town for their own place of worship, this amount also including a small sum towards the commencement of building operations. Although the scheme was only brought forward in October, £250 has already been raised in cash.

At the New Year's social gathering of Bognor Baptist Church (Rev. Chas. Pittman), encouraging reports of the church life were given by the treasurer and pastor. The past year's work has been the most prosperous and encouraging yet attained. All are hopefully anticipating the erection of their new school-chapel this year, which is greatly needed. The pastor spoke of his appreciation of the loving sympathy and spirit of unity that prevails.

At Northcote Road Church, New Wandsworth, S.W., Rev. T. J. Hazzard determined a year ago to make a special effort to pay off the balance of the mortgage debt, £1,650, by the end of 1903, and to raise £1,000 of this amount by the end of 1902. At a meeting last week a report was presented showing that nearly £1,000 had been raised. A collection was taken which brought the total up to £1,001, while promises were received amounting to £89 toward the remaining £650.

A recent meeting of the Council of the Baptist Union was largely occupied with matters arising out of the allocation of the Century Fund of £250,000, of which up to date about £220,000 has been actually paid in. The Council nominated a strong and thoroughly representative committee to make recommendations regarding the distribution of the Fund, and also resolved that £25,000 out of the £30,000 allocated to the annuity fund should be immediately paid over. The Council adopted the scheme for the organization and enrolment of Baptist local preachers as a department of the Union. The scheme provides for examinations, and aims at securing greater efficiency.

Methodist.

Rev. Albert Clayton, secretary of the Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund, has received a cheque for £10,000 from Mr. Joseph Rank, of Hull, who when the fund closes will have given £28,000 towards it. The total receipts up to the present time are £942,000.

Southport Methodists are noted for their generosity, and last week afforded two additional striking instances of this fact. In the Mornington Road circuit an anonymous donor has promised that if the circuit will provide a site he will defray the cost of a new building for the accommodation of the congregation at present worshipping in London Street mission room. This generous offer has been enthusiastically received.

It has been arranged that the "Life" of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes shall be written by his eldest daughter. Miss Price Hughes will be greatly obliged if fellow-students of her father during his residence at Richmond College, and those who were associated with him in his earlier ministry, before the founding of the West London Mission, will send any reminiscences of general interest or any correspondence that they may possess to her at 8, Taviton Street, Gordon Square, W.C. Miss Price Hughes will also be glad to receive any letters written by her father at any period of his career.

The Ebenezer branch of the Sheffield Wesleyan Mission has celebrated its anniversary. Some twelve months or more ago the old Ebenezer Chapel, formerly the head of the circuit (now the Burngreave Road circuit), was constituted a single station and the centre of the special mission. Situated as it is in the midst of one of the poorest parts of the city, it has on all sides a class of people to whom appeal by mission work is an absolute necessity. From the first the mission has been a success and the centre of great blessing. The premises were renovated, adapted and beautified, and now form an almost ideal basis for mission work. Every week over 1,000 houses in the immediate neighbourhood of the chapel are visited by a band of voluntary workers.

Presbyterian.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the church at Wigan has been celebrated. The historic event awakened enthusiastic interest in the congregation and also in the community at large. The preacher was Rev. David Wilson, M.A., who based his discourse on the words, "The city shall be built unto the Lord" (Jer. xxxi. 33). This congregation has had a prosperous year.

The annual congregational meeting at Stamfordham Church was held recently. There was a good attendance of members and adherents. Rev. W. S. Nichol presided, and, after devotional exercises, gave a short account of the pastoral work of the congregation. The attendance at the Sabbath services has been regular, the membership has increased, and the interest taken in the various agencies of the church manifests a spirit of energy and vitality. The week-night services conducted in the outlying districts are being very largely attended this winter, and great interest is being taken in the meetings.

Society of Friends.

The deputation which the Society of Friends sent to South Africa with a view to relieve the sufferings which resulted from the war have presented a most valuable report, which the Committee have just issued, with their hearty endorsement, for general circulation. We believe, observe the Committee, that the visit of the deputation "has been recognised on all hands, irrespective of race and nationality, as a message of love and goodwill from the Society of Friends, and has been effective in promoting that appeasement which we have so earnestly at heart."

Fallen Asleep.

North Staffordshire Baptist churches have, in the death of Rev. F. Samuels, of Stoke-on-Trent, lost a beloved minister.—Balham Congregational Church has lost one of its founders by the death of Mr. Henry G. Astbury, a deacon for fifteen years, and an active worker.—At Cammony, Co. Antrim, Ven. G. C. Smythe, M.A., archdeacon of Connor and incumbent of Cammoney, aged eighty-two years.—At Moira, Rev. Samuel Graham, for over fifty years pastor of the Moira Presbyterian Church, and for several years also clerk of the Presbytery of Dromore.—At Belfast, Mr. John Campbell, for over thirty years a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church, and also a zealous Sunday-school worker.

The Things that Cannot be Shaken. One of the essays in the final volume of the new Encyclopædia Britannica forcibly brings to the mind the word of the Apostle contrasting "the things that are shaken" with "those things which cannot be shaken" (Heb. xii. 27). Professor Collins, who writes the article, reviews the changes which have come over theological terminology during the last half century, and shows the difference between men's labelling of the facts and the facts themselves. In the light of the past, Professor Collins declares that "the theologian has no need to face the future with apprehension." For all this we feel that certain qualifications are yet needed. Party cries, and the quibbles of schools may well pass—the nature of things demands that they should—but the rock truth of historical and vital Christianity cannot be moved by any change in men's methods or outlook. This is that which cannot be shaken. The efforts of some self-styled critics, however, have been directed, not towards the alteration of terminology, but towards the obliteration of the foundation truths of the Gospel. This is not "progress"—it is wanton destruction.

The Oracles of God. We earnestly commend the lectures now being given by Dr. Pierson at the Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, on Friday evenings, at eight o'clock. (See page 12.) As utterances on a great theme, they are striking from more than one point of view; they unveil the Divine mind lying behind some of the less mysterious pages of Holy Writ. Dr. Pierson shows how difficult it is to get rid of the Book; and this he shows in a manner that is easily within the comprehension of the ordinary reader, in whose mind his words should excite a profound interest for Divine things. It has often been said that the knowledge of the last day will be that of the first in explicit rehearsal. From year to year that conviction should take hold on those who gladly accept the revelation of God.

Constant Affirmation. They who imagine that congregations need a series of novelties, either of teaching or of method, in order to keep them together, omit from their reckoning the simple and radical fact that most men obtain deep impressions, not from rapid changes, but from continued wise repetition. "Line upon line, precept upon precept," is the rule which obtains as much among adults as with children. Yet this is frequently forgotten. The Apostle Paul exhorted Titus to "affirm constantly" the same truths, and the exhortation reveals a deep knowledge of human nature. It is remarkable how quickly people forget the few simple, fundamental principles of life—particularly of the Christian life. Constant affirmation of these is really demanded to deepen the message of the Word of God. It goes without saying that such repetition must be living and not parrot-like. Many men who are fatigued in the endeavour to discover new things would find surprising freshness and power in the constant living affirmation of central truths.

With the Heart Man believeth. Men who think at all about the greatest things of life frequently fall into the error of giving the chief place to the intellect. The mind becomes for them the measure of all things. No mistake could be greater than this. Holy Scripture gives the true order: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart . . . and mind." The heart occupies the first place. There is place for the intellect, but it is not the first place. Everywhere the Bible emphasizes this. "My son, give Me thy heart"—"With the heart man believeth"—"The pure in heart, shall see God." That this is the true order, is shown by revelation, reason, and experience. And yet it is the last lesson men either will learn or care to learn. In a recent lecture on the historic trustworthiness of the Gospels, the Bishop of Worcester instanced the case of an agnostic who became a believer, not through his intellect, but through his heart first. The opening up of his own heart had been the first step towards bringing him to God. We need to keep this elementary, but necessary, truth in mind, for it is the key to all human souls. The greatest soul-winners have known and fully availed themselves of it.

The Giving of the Soul. The most perfect Christian is he who receives his soul, gains his soul, and gives his soul. He receives it, the gift of his crucified and risen Lord. He gains it through patient following of his Master. "In your patience gain ye your souls." And he gives it, impelled by the love of Christ, to his fellowmen, for their salvation. The Apostle Paul declared he was ready not only to preach the Gospel, but to impart his own soul (1 Thess. ii. 8). Herein is a great secret of the Christian life. Too many give to men their words, their money, their advice, and that is all. We need, all of us who serve Christ, to feel that virtue has gone out of us to men, and that in helping them we have parted with something of our very selves. It is easy to be perfunctory and precise in the work of God—the danger threatens all—but it is not easy to give ourselves to men. Only an overwhelming love for God and men will help us to this.

The Anti-Licence Campaign. It is gratifying to observe from the daily press that the justices all over the country have grasped the fact that the time has come for a very large reduction in the number of publichouse licences, and that they are taking practical steps to enforce the view. In some districts of Liverpool the reduction will amount to at least 25 per cent., or one in every four drinking shops. The justices in that city are leading the way, however, and taking advantage of their powers to draw up regulations regarding transfers which will go far to check the traffic in public-houses and gin shops, and to make the tied houses less numerous. All this points to the inevitable result of a huge falling-off in crime and a decrease in lunacy, poverty, and vice. The only thing to be regretted is that the magistrates were so long misled by the warnings of members of the Government as to the right of the publican to compensation in case of disturbance.

The Craft in Danger. Paul's conflict with the silversmiths of Ephesus is continually repeated in the world—always, indeed, when the light of truth is flung upon the shame of men who are interested in bleeding their fellows. "The craft is in danger." We quite expected that the vigorous campaign against excessive licences would be resisted by the "Trade." Already the metropolitan publicans have issued their emphatic protest. But we hope that London will be as firm as many of the provinces, and simply do the right thing, no matter how the priests of Bacchus suffer in their silver-making. Some of the London papers print in parallel columns the resolution of the licensed victuallers and the report of the Lunacy Commissioners for 1902. They stand related to each other largely as cause and effect, for a large number of lunacy cases are described as due to intemperance. So far from relaxing efforts, temperance workers need to be increasingly active. The time is ripe for a forward movement. We cordially agree with the Bishop of Newcastle that the next thing must be Sunday closing—the hour is ready for it.

Aliens and the Distress. Mr. A. T. Williams, of the London County Council, who has made himself thoroughly familiar with the subject of alien immigration in all its bearings, recently stated that one district in London—Stepney—is literally being "wiped out" by the foreign immigrant:—

> Street after street filled a few years ago by English families is now crowded with aliens. At the time I prepared my statistics for the Royal Commission I knew of a house where every room and even every landing—and the lavatory—were let to mixed numbers of adults. The latter was actually let as a living room. . . . If war should come upon us with a powerful foreign nation, in place of the old sturdy English and Irish denizens of the East End, who, with all their faults, were loyal and patriotic to the backbone, we shall have in the heart of our city 200,000 of the dregs of Europe.

This undoubtedly is a startling outlook, but meanwhile this steady influx of half-starved immigrants, including many criminals—amounting to 81,402 last year alone, the number settling in London in December last being 5,525—is the cause of the greatest proportion of the distress which is now so painfully prevalent in London. The one person who benefits is the middleman who exploits the alien, and for whom the unhappy immigrant makes trousers at 7½d. per pair. The present condition of things certainly calls for legislation both prompt and drastic, from which mere sentiment must needs be excluded.

Experimenting in the Slums. There was a great deal of force and wisdom in the plea offered by Mr. John A. Stewart, the novelist, in his address to the Glasgow Presbyterial Temperance Union, that men of experience should be sent into the slums to understand their problems and to seek to solve them:—

> You do not trust your wildest horses to a novice in driving. The Church . . . must send into the slums men of proved ability and experience. Apprentices will not suffice. Our colleges do admirable work, but it is out of their power to impart knowledge of the world and human nature. For success with our slum populations the worker needs insight, the gift of interpreting mixed motives, a quick eye for character, an almost supernatural tact and sympathy.

This, from a sympathetic novelist, who himself has delineated slum life, is worthy of earnest perusal. The slum-dwellers are often sharp in wit and "deep" in character, and they need better attention than can be given by men whose work is necessarily limited to alleviating external distress. The body-servants of the Master were sent into the highways and hedges. We note that Sheffield has determined thoroughly to investigate its slum-life, a work in which the chief men of the city are to take part.

"The Dangers of Clericalism." The kind and faithful words spoken by the Bishop of Stepney last week at Sion College are worthy of perusal by all who hold the pastoral office—in whatever communion found. The majority of the English people would add their "Amen" to Dr. Lang's demand for straightforwardness in all matters pertaining to the clerical office. There is more than a "suspicion" abroad that many of the clergy are propagating a system which is alien alike to the Articles they have sworn to and the genius of the English people. Godly laymen will not have the priest introduced, either slyly or openly. There is little doubt, either, that the people dislike the "parson" as much as the priest. By "parson" we mean, with the Bishop of Stepney, the official minister, with a distinct "clerical manner and voice." No denomination is free from the danger of this official clericalism, but it is a terrible hindrance to the Gospel. The world wants men of God to speak to them, and never more so than now, but the men of God must be unmistakably men, and not mere officials.

Labour on the Rand. The question of supplying labourers for the Rand is already a thorny one, but if some of the administrators could have their way we should speedily see a system of thinly disguised slavery in full operation. Mr. Asquith has promptly spoken for his party against the abominable suggestions made for the establishment of practical slavery. But this is more than a party question, however. All parties must unite in repelling any such scheme. We hardly know which is the more brazen, the slavery scheme, or that suggested by Mr. Dormer, who would tempt the Kaffir to the mines by the offer of alcohol:—

> I have no hesitation in saying that he would work better, and would be far more likely to come to work without any species of compulsion, if his natural appetite were satisfied by a reasonable allowance of good and unadulterated stimulant.

It is difficult to understand the frame of mind which can seriously bring forward a scheme like this. The British people must not permit such snares to be forced upon the natives of South Africa. It is clear from many indications that the affairs of the Rand need narrowly watching. Some who aspire to rule them cannot be trusted.

The Origin of Evil. It is not unusual for superficial thinkers, both in the pulpit and out of it, to deal with the question of the origin of evil as though the fact is not evident that most of the disorder in the world is social, that it is directly opposed to the Divine order, and that the reason why there is so much of it is because men tolerate the gross materialism which abets it. The economic machinery which grinds out all this moral and physical misery cannot, as we have constantly insisted, be altered without a change in men's hearts, and the development of a righteous intolerance, not with the sinner, but with the sin. If it be true that humanity cannot be made good till the environments have been improved, it is equally true that you cannot improve the environments until you have made men good. "Our statute book is what it is because men are what they are, and some of the best of those Acts are a dead letter to-day because men are too selfish to enforce them."

Whosoever Cometh. Perhaps one of the highest tributes to the "Pilgrim's Progress" is to be found in the number of the efforts which have been made to make the wonderful volume subservient to the interests of sectarianism. The Romanist has endeavoured to render Bunyan's work more palatable to himself and his colleagues by the excision of the graphic description of Giant Pope; and one clerical "improver" has tried to make the pilgrim more suitable for perusal "in society." A contributor to the Church Times has recently put forth a noteworthy effort of the kind in narrating his conversation with a road-mender near Bedford. This labourer, it appears, had no knowledge of the name of Bunyan, but his wife was in the habit of reading the "Pilgrim's Progress" to him. The writer says:—

> He was evidently hazy about the pilgrim's itinerary. Better remained, however, for he volunteered the next remark. Fixing his eyes on the long stretch of road he said: "And that silly chap as turned off the main road and got lost; I often think of him. You see he had just to keep straight on the road to get to the heavenly city, but he must go trying other ways. I don't hold by no chapel nor nothing of that sort. I stick to the Church, and try to keep straight on, and He will help me in the end."

And from this the writer points the moral of "straight and patient orthodoxy!"

Pew and Pulpit. In a remarkable address on Hindrances to Revivals, given by Rev. Joseph Cook, LL.D., shortly before his death, and summarising the many hindrances which stand in the way of evangelistic work, Dr. Cook did not hesitate to place recent loss of faith in the doctrine of the new birth as the main one. Undoubtedly the third chapter of the Gospel by John must be a living force in all evangelical effort; and when such is not the case, and less important doctrines are given an undue prominence, the fault is as often to be looked for in the pew as in the pulpit. As Dr. Cook has said, "a really inoffensive courtliness is what some people expect of the preacher. Sappy wood in the pews is not easily set ablaze." The indifferent hearer is more of a hindrance than the overworked preacher. Great subjects cannot be dealt with satisfactorily unless time is given to them, and if the people in the pews insist upon brief "starveling sermonettes," it is probable they will weary the preacher into supplying them.

THE "MAN OF GOD."

JEHORAM, the man of the world; Jehoshaphat, the worldly child of God; Elisha, the man of God—these are the three types set before us in 2 Kings iii.* The last presents (to us) the highest form of Christian manhood. "Man of God" is his inspired designation, honoured of God, respected by man. To him all turned in their distress, whether mothers or students, servants or kings. He dwelt deep, in a life of piety and of power; his influence with men was the outcome of his communion with God. He was always to be found when wanted, because he was always where God directed him to be, obedient and faithful, thorough and staunch, ever placing God first, man second, himself last of all.

This is the Divine order, in the higher life to which every saint is called. Elisha lived a saint because he was a saint. The world could do well without many of us, because Elishas among us are so few; but "men of God" are always in demand.

> He that believeth on Me (our Lord declared) as the Scripture hath said (not as our own half-hearted notions dictate), out of him shall flow rivers of living water. This spake He of the Spirit which they that believe on Him should receive.

The prime object of spiritual life is that it may flow out. True, it must first flow in, but that is only the initial stage. With too many it stops there. We find among us

THREE IDEALS OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

The first (and far too prevalent) is that of receiving blessing, and imparting none. Man says, "Into;" God says, "Out of." Hence, the poverty of Christian influence around us; the half-empty churches, a hundred sinners without, for one saint within; the indifference, the declension, the scepticism, the godlessness, that we all deplore. It is not the fault of the world; it knows no better, because it is not taught. The fault lies with the Church (and with us, its individual members) in reversing God's plan, and directing the flow ever into itself. This produces a stagnant pool, teeming with evil germs—a Dead Sea, or a meagre trickling stream; in place of a healthy, abundant, flowing river. Trace the great rivers of the earth, and you find their course is marked by signs of activity, prosperity, and wealth. The lesson of Nature coincides with that of God. Stop the outflow; and you have barrenness, for plenty; sterility, for life.

The second (and higher) ideal is to be a channel. "Channels only!" we sometimes sing, and this is good so far as it goes. But a channel, after all, is only a medium of conveying blessing, and retaining none. Our heart is in our work; we long to see the pleasure of the Lord prosper in our hands. Active and earnest, we are at the beck and call of all manner of useful works; but we cannot always claim that "peace like a river attendeth our way." The irregularities and excrescences of the channel-bed — restlessness, impatience, worldliness—cause the stream to bubble and to foam, instead of running with an even flow. We may impart to others, but if we neglect set times of Bible-study and prayer, we lack the fulness of power we might otherwise enjoy.

Is not much Christian service represented thus? Human impulse, love of success, desire for praise, are potent factors; and if, indeed, we cherish the thought that we are "channels only," yet is there not, at times, in our very humility a tinge of pride?

'Tis not thy work the Master wants—but thee!

* See the last two Practical Papers

The third (and loftiest) ideal is found in Elisha—a "vessel, meet for the Master's use"—first filled, then overflowing from his own abundant fulness. Therein lay the prophet's secret; out of him perpetual blessing flowed. Here piety and power converge in one, and when this is so, the world will seek its share. Faint with a thirst they cannot slake (2 Kings iii. 9-11); burdened with debt they cannot pay (iv. 1-7); afflicted with bereavement they cannot remove (20, 21); alarmed at poison they cannot cure (40); smitten with disease they cannot heal (v.); perplexed with losses they cannot regain (vi.); stricken with hunger they cannot avert (vi. vii.)—then men appeal to the man of God and cry: "Is there not here a prophet of the Lord, that we may inquire of him?" "Alas, my master! How shall we do?" What a ministry for those who have the ear to hear, the heart to feel, the hand to aid! And it may be ours, if we seek

A heart at leisure from itself,
To soothe and sympathise.

Now, contrast the workings of these three ideals. In the first, the self-centred Christian does not want the "outsider," and certainly the outsider does not want him! In the second, the partly-filled worker goes forth, sincerely enough, to seek the lost, and marvels that so few respond. In the third, the man of God, Spirit-filled and overflowing, does not need to seek the sinner; the sinner seeks him! Here is the Divine ideal of human Christian life, emptied of self, filled with God. To him come young and old, rich and poor, and none go empty away. And when, as Scripture tersely says, "Elisha died, and they buried him"—is that all? Ah, no!

It came to pass, as they were burying a man, they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha, and when the man was let down, and touched the bones of Elisha, he revived, and stood up on his feet (2 Kings xiii. 21).

There was life to others even in his dead bones. His epitaph was carved, not in stone with glowing words, but in the hearts of those by whom he was survived. His influence lived on, and his memory is blessed for evermore.

In later days, the Apostle Paul told his "dearly beloved son, Timothy," that the "man of God must be perfect (i.e., symmetrical, evenly developed, an all-round Christian), throughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim. iii. 17). How is this to be? The preceding verses give the clue:—

From a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

This brings us back to the words of our Lord, already quoted, "He that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said." Furthermore, the Apostle adds:—

All Scripture is given by inspiration of God; and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness.

Wise unto salvation . . . instructed in righteousness—here are piety and power, faith and works, combined. To this end we must "know the Scriptures," if we would become robust men and women of God, "throughly furnished unto all good works." "Attic-Christians," many of us are, scantily furnished, or full of lumber, when we might be well-furnished, attractive, supplied with all that is needful to live lives of spiritual comfort ourselves, and to meet the needs of others—invited or uninvited guests, sad and sin-stained with hard journeying through the world. Oh, for more of the Elisha-spirit, the Elisha-grace, the Elisha-life; filled ourselves with the Spirit; able thus to offer spiritual hospitality to hungry, thirsty souls who clamour at our doors! G.

The Cost of a Great Revival.

AGAIN and again in these columns Christians have been urged to pray that the visit of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander may be the occasion of a great revival in this country, similar to that which the Australian Colonies have enjoyed.

Is a great revival costly? We do not mean in a financial sense. That part of the cost is the least difficult to meet. But events connected with the Australian Revival suggest the query.

That prayer accompanied and immediately preceded the work in every place, is known to all who read these pages. But the praying dates back to a much earlier period. The Geelong Band has been formed for years past; and in the days when the late John MacNeil was one of its most devoted members, the Band were praying for the "Great Revival."

What a splendid band of men they were! And how well fitted for dealing with such a great movement as they desired! The most venerable were "Father" Watsford, vigorous in spite of his great age, and Rev. S. C. Kent, a man beloved and trusted by all. But among all the band, the most prominent, and the most likely to be useful in connection with the great revival, were three men—John MacNeil, the successful evangelist; Samuel Chapman, the minister of Collins Street Baptist Church, as spiritually powerful as he was intellectually vigorous; and Allan Webb, of Geelong, my honoured and trusted neighbour during my brief ministry in Geelong. These were the men whom we should have chosen as eminently fitted for the work of the Great Revival.

But the cost of it? The first Convention I attended was in 1897; John MacNeil had already gone home. But I heard much of the "Great Revival" then. It was in the heart of every brother. It was sought with tearful earnestness in nearly every prayer. It was hoped for and expected. The prayers offered by John MacNeil before his translation were mentioned again and again. And at times the power of God in the meetings was such that it seemed as though the answer had come.

Two years later, I was at the Convention again. In the interval another member of the band had gone home. Samuel Chapman, whose prayers had been so constant and fervent, was not permitted to share in the Revival for which he had prayed. How weakened the band felt by the removal of two such men!

Last February, Allan Webb was my delightful companion in a brief journey from Melbourne to Geelong. He was full of the great simultaneous mission, and eagerly anticipated the big revival in connection with it. When the Mission began, he was appointed to work at South Yarra. He preached on Monday and Tuesday nights, and on Wednesday, while praying for the Mission, he stopped abruptly, his head fell forward, and he was gone! The third member of the band was removed before the "Great Revival" had fully come.

The prayer that preceded the Australian revival cost much. And all prayer means energy, patience, perseverance; it requires intensity, consecration, self-sacrifice. Just now the prayer that prevails must be especially costly. The Church has not for years been so hopelessly divided as now. The legislative work of last year has separated the bulk of Nonconformists from their brethren in the Church of England. The outlook is not hopeful, unless we look above the strife to Him who "makes the wrath of man to praise Him."

Lynching and Convict Camps.—An earnest appeal has been addressed by the Howard Association to the conductors of newspapers and public journals in the United States on the subject of the horrors associated with lynching and the system of convict camps. Having paid a high tribute to the help in penal reform received on this side of the Atlantic from America, the belief expressed that those in the Southern States to whom the profession of religion and the honour of God are heartfelt realities, will welcome any measure of encouragement which journalists are able to afford them.

"Thy Word is a Lamp."

By Rev. G. B. F. HALLOCK, D.D.

THERE are many kinds of lamps, all of them intended to give light. On this account the designation, lamp, as applied to the Bible, seems especially appropriate. "Thy word is a lamp" (Psa. cxix. 105). It is a lamp of many uses, always light-giving, and exactly suited to help us in many different places or circumstances of need.

The Bible is A HURRICANE LAMP. There is a kind of lamp so made that you might carry it in the wildest of storms and the wind could never blow it out. It is called a hurricane lamp. Now, the Word of God is such a lamp as that. How Satan and satanic men in all ages have tried to blow it out! But it shines on in the storm to-day brighter than ever. It will, in like manner, stand you in stead in the time when storms beat against you. It will light you in the midst of temptation and persecution, and every stress than can come.

The Bible is A BEACON LAMP. Out upon the coasts here and there are beacon lamps. At great cost these lamps are kept burning, but thousands of lives are saved, and property preserved thereby. As a ship nears a coast, the beacon lights tell the captain where he is, and how to steer his ship so as to get to the port of safety. God's Word is a beacon light. It shows men the true way, and keeps them from wreck and death.

LIGHTS OF THE ROAD.

The Bible is A SIGNAL LAMP. You have often noticed the signals at night when you have been riding along in a train. The meaning of each light is well understood. The white tells us that the way is clear, and encourages us on. Thus it is that the Bible speaks to us when we are in the right way and are going right. It invites us further in the way, reassures us, and encourages us forward.

But there are other signals. There is the green light of caution. It is this same message the beacon lamp of the Bible often brings us, in the midst of our haste to be rich, regarding our choice of companions, our selection of books or papers to read, the amusements in which we desire to indulge, the places to which we propose to go. It is a very kindly signal of caution the Bible often lifts in our path. Let us mind the signal.

But there is another very well understood signal—the red light. It means danger. It calls us to stop. The Bible has a mission as important as a danger signal as it has by way of invitation or caution. It is the same love that warns from the ill as that which woos to the good. If people would but heed the red light of the Scriptures we would have a great deal less of sin and sorrow in the world. When men are going wrong, in love the Bible flashes out its red signal of danger, "The wages of sin is death!" "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?"

TRAVAIL AND TOIL.

The Bible is AN INVALID'S LAMP. When people are ill and have to lie awake all night in pain they do not want to be left in the dark, and yet they do not want any glaring, nerve-trying, wearying light. They want a cheerful, mellow, soothing light. And just such a light does the Bible prove to be to those who are weak and weary and ill of mind or body. Many of its sweetest messages are especially suited to such. "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." "Let not your heart be troubled." "He forgiveth all thine iniquities and healeth all thy diseases." "Neither shall there be any more pain." Beautiful, blessed invalid's lamp—the Word of God.

The Bible is a WORKER'S LAMP. Like the little lamp in the front of the miner's cap, making it possible for him to labour even in the deepest darkness, so the Bible shines for God's workers. It is both an equipment for the work and a light upon the work. It also sheds its rays upon the worker himself, cheering him in his work.

Lastly, we will think of the Bible as THE PILGRIM'S LAMP. "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." It is such a lamp as our aged neighbour puts on the dashboard of his buggy to show him the road on his homeward way. Yes, the Bible is a lamp to guide us home.

EXPERIENCE VERSUS CRITICISM.

We have been told of a man of Christian purpose who went a distance of one or two miles into a neighbourhood where few could read, to spend an evening reading the Bible to a company who were assembled to listen. As he was about to return by a narrow way through the woods he was provided with a torch of light wood or pitch pine. "I objected," said he, "that it was too small, weighing not over half a pound. 'It will light you home,' answered my host. I said, 'The wind may blow it out.' He said, 'It will light you home.' 'But if it should rain?' I again objected. 'It will light you home,' he insisted. Contrary to my fears, it gave abundant light to my path all the way home."

Just so will it be with every one who will take the Bible torch to guide his feet along the narrow way. Does some one bring criticism of it? Answer, "It will light me home." Does another offer objections? Urge again, "It will light me home." To every argument of distrust or doubt let your persistent answer be, "It will light me home." The test of experience is the disarming of criticism. Each honest reader will come to say, "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."

"Thy Word is a lamp." Let us use it. We will find it exactly suited to our every need and that it will lighten our path every step of the way up to the gates of the Celestial City. It will guide us home."

True Greatness.

LOOKING back on life we find that the voice of God was the surest guide into paths of duty, which then became delight. The noiseless impression on the mind—that is the real word of command. It calls us to obey all His recorded will, and then it leads a chosen personality to fulfil the special plan for its life.

Our Divine Lord was glorified while He prayed, and, having diligently hearkened to the Father, He "ever liveth to make intercession for us." May we feel the joyous enthusiasm of success in God Almighty, believing in His answers. "Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." "The soul of man createth its own destiny of power" through the Holy Spirit's living energy. "To him that hath shall be given."

We know that selfish Dives begged for an utter trifle. But a faithful teacher stood transformed in glory, and, according to his ability, having the mind of Christ to discern the mysteries (Matthew iii. 11, 12; xxv. 29; Rev. xxii. 6-9), showed the glory of the Revelation to the beloved Apostle, who had already "testified the word of God." Each will be rewarded according to his own work, as he has worked out the Holy Spirit's fruit and talents, and will be revealed in his own transparent personality before the universe.

We lose a great blessing through not drinking into our minds more and more of the revelation that lifts us up to a nearer view of the Living One, in meekness glorified, the Lamb of God, who is our Life.

This moment is our own, to give it to the Lord. It is felt to be a real joy when we know that it pleases our Father and King. Moving into brighter and brighter light, let us enter into the open arms of the Father of our spirits, Creator and Ruler of the universe.

May the mind be sensitive to the voice of the beloved Son of God through every day—and who knows where we shall be at its close? Soon we learn with delight that God speaks to us every day. Just like a breath the call may come, guiding hands or feet; or saying, "Come to Me," it makes the spirit rejoice. Only a little thing—only a thought it seems to be. It was the Lord Jehovah speaking to Bible characters that made them great.

The Oracles of God.

THE third of the series of lectures by Dr. Pierson on "The Oracles of God" was given on Friday evening at Exeter Hall. Week by week the audience has grown in numbers, and the Committee of the Central Y.M.C.A. cannot but be gratified at the interest with which the course is being followed.

Dr. Pierson devoted the evening to a continuation of the study of the topic of the previous lecture, "The Consistency of the Bible with Modern Discovery." He drew attention to eight great discoveries of modern times which could not have been known to the writers of Scripture, and showed how the phraseology of the Bible corresponds with these discoveries.

(1) The vast number of the stars. In the first catalogues of the stars, the number did not much exceed 3,000, and no one had any idea that there were invisible stars. When Galileo turned his telescope to the heavens, for the first time it was known that there were stars hitherto unseen. As the telescope improved, discovery went forward, until now it is known that the number of stars is absolutely illimitable. What is our astonishment to find this discovery anticipated as far back as the time of Abraham! God told him that his seed should be as numerous as the atoms of dust, and as countless as the stars in the heavens. Again, in Jeremiah we read: "As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured." So we find the language of Scripture adapted to the facts as unfolded by the most recent discoveries (Gen. xxii. 17; Jer. xxxiii. 22).

Taking up his second point, Dr. Pierson brought forward conclusive arguments to show that the ancients had no idea of (2) the immensity of space. When it was discovered that the earth moved on its axis, it became known that the stars did not change their orbit, and were at an immense distance. Jeremiah uses the immensity of space as an argument for God's fidelity to His people. Again, in Isaiah, we read: "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts"; while the writer of Psa. ciii. brings in astronomical infinity to illustrate the love and grace of God (vv. 11, 12).

Passing to the consideration of another wonderful discovery of modern times—(3) the universal law of motion—the lecturer compared the vibrations per second of sound with those of electricity. This discovery also is anticipated, for in Job (xxxviii. 7) we read of the morning stars giving forth their vibrations like musical instruments, pealing into the ear of God.

(4) The refraction of light is also a comparatively modern discovery. It is the bending of the ray as it comes through different media of transition, as the fingers in taking hold of any object. Turning again to Job xxxviii. 12, 13, we find that this is another discovery which the Bible has anticipated. The idea is, "coming up to its post in time"; the diurnal rotation of the earth on its axis, which has not varied one-thousandth part of a second in the last 2,000 years. "That it might take hold of the ends of the earth."

(5) The weight of the atmosphere. The discovery of the law of gravitation is of recent date. When gravitation was suspected, it was supposed that certain substances were affected by it; but Newton demonstrated that the law was universal. Galileo had indicated that there was reason to believe that the atmosphere had weight, but no idea of such a thing had dawned on the ancient mind. Can this have been anticipated in the Bible? In Job xxviii. 25 we read: "To make the weight for the winds." The R.V. is more precise—"to make a weight," and balance the winds— as though they entered into the great scales of the universe, and their weight helped to make its equilibrium.

The discovery by William Hervey of (6) the circulation of the blood was one that had not entered into the minds of the ancients. In this connection Dr. Pierson pointed out that the human heart has two parts—(a) the auricles which receive the blood from the veins, and (b) the ventricles which pulse the blood out through the arteries. The one section of the heart is a fountain, and the other a cistern. These are facts referred to in Eccles. xii. 6—"Or ever the silver cord be loosed; or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern." Long before William Hervey dreamed of the circulation of the blood, God inspired the wise man, Solomon, to write about these facts, and to give to us a hint concerning the two sections of the heart.

7. The universal law of rotation.—It has long been known that the earth revolves on its axis, and that even the sun has its rotation and orbit; but it has been reserved for modern times to prove that the whole universe is in motion. Turning to Job xxxviii. 31 we find that the Bible has anticipated even this: "Canst thou bind the sweet influences (R.V. "cluster") of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion?" Here some have found the idea of a body suspended on a pivot, hinge, or axle, that moves itself and everything with it.

8. The properties and uses of lightning. For thousands of years it was only thought that lightning accompanied violent storms and did immense damage. It was for Benjamin Franklin to complete the discovery that lightning could be laid hold of and utilized. The idea of the lightning rod drawing down heaven's wrath, and turning it quietly into the earth, is a beautiful illustration of the work of the Atonement. Electrical science has made such progress that lightning in the twentieth century is used for the discovery of disease as well as for lighting purposes, and as a motive power. The ancients never conceived that it could be made a means of usefulness and service, a power that should not destroy but construct, not kill but make alive.

Reverting again to Job xxxviii., to find the anticipation of this discovery, Dr. Pierson quoted Mrs. Spurrell's suggestive translation of verse 35, "Canst thou command the lightnings that they come and say unto thee, Here are we? Canst thou inspire them with intelligence?" While men are speaking in unmeasured terms of what they call the absurdities of this Book, all the angelic hosts of God stand as one great orchestra pealing forth their anthem of praise to Him who gave such a revelation to the human race.

The Contemplative Orders.—The Roman Catholic journals have announced the rebuilding and the restoration to its ancient dignity of an old abbey in Devonshire, occupied by French Benedictines, and it is stated "the Abbot-General of the Cassiuese congregation of the Primitive Observance" has chosen a new abbot, Dom Boniface of Subiaco, a choice since approved by the Pope. All this sounds very imposing, and it is, therefore, somewhat disappointing to find that the monks are acting as a trading community, to use M. Loubet's designation, and that they are largely advertising pills, salves, and liniments, "all prepared by the Benedictine monks," and to be had "direct, with full directions from the Rev. Procurator."

Day of Prayer for Students.—The General Committee of the World's Student Christian Federation has set apart Sunday, February 8, 1903, as the Universal Day of Prayer for Students, and call upon all Christian organizations of students throughout the world, and upon the Christian Church in general, to observe the day as an occasion for special intercession and earnest spiritual effort on behalf of students. The committee which issues this call is composed of the official representatives of the Christian student movements of Australasia, Belgium, Canada, Ceylon, China, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Holland, India, Japan, Norway, South Africa, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United States, as well as of the movement in lands without national student organizations. These embrace Christian associations or unions in over 1,500 universities, colleges, and higher schools, and have a total membership of 82,000 students and professors. The day proposed, the second Sunday in February, is the only one on which, during the past five years, it has been found possible to unite the students of all nations. The proper observance of this day has helped greatly to make possible the wonderful spiritual developments of recent years in the world-wide student movement. The call is signed on behalf of the General Committee of the World's Student Christian Federation by Karl Fries, chairman, and John R. Mott, general secretary.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, February 8. 2 Chron. xii.

"WHEN he was strong . . . he forsook the law of the Lord." Rehoboam is not the only man of whom that sad record has been true. It may be that God keeps us from becoming strong, because He knows that we could not withstand the strong tide of success, drifting us away from Him. It is better to be weak, as regards self, as the trailing branches of the vine, which require the support of the trellis-work. Therefore we may, with the Apostle Paul, boast even of our infirmities, if only Divine strength may thereby be magnified the more in us.

Note the influence of a bad example, "all Israel with him." No man sins alone. As the position of every sand-grain on the ocean-shore affects the position of every other grain, so does each man affect his brother. If you will stand for God, your wife and children, or your friends, will; but if you fall away, so may they.

God did not abandon His people to Shishak, because He hateth putting away. He longs that men should turn from their sins, and therefore warns them before destroying. "I will dig about, and dung it, and if it bear fruit, well." How often God has given us chances of contrasting His service and the service of our own evil passions. (See the striking comparison in Deut. xxviii. 47, 48). What bondage, when we have thrown off the yoke of His blessed service! His service is "perfect freedom." To know and serve Jesus Christ, has been the gladdest thing that this sad world has known. He says Himself, My yoke is easy, and My burden is light.

Notice the remarkable statement, "He did that which was evil, because he set not himself to seek the Lord." It is so true. We cannot drift to heaven, but we may drift to hell. To be lost, needs only that we should fold our hands, and lie back in our boat—the noise of the rapids will soon be in our ears. The sluggard's garden is the result of doing nothing! Would you eschew and be freed from evil, set your heart God-ward.

This invasion of Shishak is recorded on hieroglyphic inscriptions which have been deciphered among the monuments of Egypt—a valuable corroboration of Scripture!

MONDAY, February 9. 2 Chron. xiii.

According to the custom of the times, King Abijah harangued the army of Israel. There were several striking points in his address, e.g., God's covenant is compared to salt because of its enduring and antiseptic qualities; nothing is said of Solomon's sins, which really caused the rending of the kingdom, but the whole emphasis is placed on Jeroboam's rebellion, and on Rehoboam's youth; the enforced exodus of the priests and Levites from the northern kingdom is contrasted with the ordered worship of the southern—and all are urged as arguments that Israel should not fight against the Lord God of their fathers.

While Abijah was speaking, Jeroboam's ambush was creeping round the hill on which the camp was situated, and the men of Judah found themselves surrounded; but when God was appealed to for help, He graciously succoured them. This battle of Zemaraim had a profound effect on the relations of the two kingdoms for many years, and prevented further molestations on the part of Israel (18, 20).

Reliance on God is all-important. However hardly tested we are, if we rely on God there is immediate deliverance and help. "With a breaking heart," one says, "I cried, 'Dear Jesus, canst Thou help me?' Never with mortal tongue can I describe that moment. Although up to that moment my soul had been filled with indescribable gloom, the glorious brightness of the sun seemed to shine into my heart. I felt that I was a free man. From that moment till now I have never even wanted to go back to my old sins."

TUESDAY, February 10. 2 Chron. xiv.

Asa's reign, at least in its earlier years, was characterized by a remarkable quiet, "because God gave him rest." More than once we are told this (6, 7, xv. 15). "When God giveth quietness, who can give trouble?" Let us ask God for the Spirit of His rest and quietness, for out of that our best work will certainly arise. "They built and prospered." "The churches had rest . . . and were built up" (Acts ix. 31).

But life cannot be all spent in quiet. Invasion and war have their part to play in the education of our souls. To us also Zerah the Ethiopian must come. But how little we need fear him when our hearts are right with God. Our inner tranquillity need not be ruffled or broken. As a land-locked lake may be protected from the rave of the storm by the giant mountains, in whose lap it lies, and not a tremor of the breeze shall ruffle its placid waters, so shall it be with the heart that relies on God.

When we are told that the enemy was destroyed before the Lord and before His host (13), we cannot but think that this host is the one of which the Lord spoke to Joshua: "As Captain of the Lord's host am I now come." There is ever a host of invisible angels, whose legions are within call, waiting to be marshalled in battle when the Lord's saints are in peril. Then it is that the mountain is full of horses and chariots of fire. This is what Jacob saw at Mahanaim (Gen. xxxii. 1, 2); and to this our Lord alluded when He was in the garden—"twelve legions of angels"!

WEDNESDAY, February 11. 2 Chron. xv.

It was surely very befitting that the prophet should meet Asa and his people when they were flushed with success, and laden with booty. The times of our greatest danger are those when our life is running smoothly and victoriously. Then we need the reminding voice that all is due to the Divine blessing, and will last only so far as we walk with God. If we try to live without the true God, and without law, we shall incur, sooner or later, great vexation, and inevitable breaking in pieces; but if we use every victory, as Asa did, as a stepping-stone and incentive to fresh inroads on the subtle and ubiquitous spirit of evil, and for a fresh entrance into covenant relations with God, there will be no limit or bound to the progress of our spiritual growth.

What a radiant festival that must have been, when the great congregation gathered at Jerusalem and entered into this sacred compact to be wholly the Lord's! There are no such times of rejoicing as those which arise from the perfect dedication of ourselves and all that we are and have to God. When we seek Him with all our heart, He is always found of us, and again He gives us rest (v. 15).

Asa was very drastic in his measures. Even Maachah was not spared. What an outcry there must have been against him! What criticisms were uttered! What strong things were said! Ah, there are times in every man's life, when he is called to stand alone with God, preferring Him to the solicitations of his own flesh and blood!

THURSDAY, February 12. 2 Chron. xvi.

More than once we have been told that there was a constant stream of people pouring across the frontier from the ten tribes to Judah (xv. 9, for instance). To check this immigration Baasha built Ramah. Then Asa made the great mistake of his life. Instead of relying upon Jehovah, he opened negotiations with Ben-hadad, and secured from him a hostile demonstration on the northern frontier, which forced Baasha to desist. But Hanani brought him the news that he had forfeited the one help that could have made his kingdom stable, while exposing himself and his people to the unrest and tribulations from which he had been hitherto sheltered (9).

The ninth verse is extraordinarily helpful. How often one has turned to it! How constantly one has proved its truth! If only the heart is perfect towards God, i.e., if it does not fear the power of man, does not rely on circumstances or human help, but relies simply on the Lord, how absolutely true it is that the Lord shows Himself strong on the behalf of such! And if God be for us, who can be against us? If God shows Himself strong on our behalf, why should we any more complain of our weakness or insufficiency? "O my soul, thou hast trodden down strength!"

The end of Asa's life was particularly sad. After all that he had experienced of God's saving health, it is almost incredible to find that he could so far relapse. Yes, it would be incredible, if we did not know the plague of our own hearts; but let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall!

FRIDAY, February 13. 2 Chron. xvii.

Note these repeated references to the work of God on the behalf of Jehoshaphat—"The Lord was with him" (3); "The Lord stablished the kingdom in his hand" (5); "The fear of the Lord fell" (10). And the response on the part of Jehoshaphat—"He sought to the God of his father, and walked in His commandments" (4); "His heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord" (6); "He took away the high places out of Judah, and sent his princes to teach" (6, 7).

It is not surprising to learn that he waxed great exceedingly, had many men of valour to serve him, and built castles and cities of store.

Why should not we arise into such fellowship with God, as would make us stable and great? The preliminary step would be to realize the purpose of God in the original constitution of our natures. We are not bodies, though we are in them for a time. We are not even, in the deepest significance, minds or souls. We are spirits. God is the Father of our spirits, and we are called on to live in God, and for God, and to let God live in us. This should make us strong, and wise, and attractive. The nature which is infilled with God's nature, because of the affinity between the two, and which lives in hourly contact with God, cannot help becoming what Jehoshaphat was, of whom it is recorded that the Lord was with him, because he sought to the Lord, and walked in His commandments. If only we would, as I have often said, be deaf to the electric bells that ring up from the lower parts of our nature, and alert to those that ring down from below, we should know the life which is life indeed. "Now, He that stablisheth us in Christ, and anointed us is God."

SATURDAY, February 14. 2 Chron. xviii.

If Jehoshaphat had riches and honour in abundance, why did he join affinity with Ahab? Why did he help the wicked, and love them that hated the Lord (xix. 2)? And why did he join himself afterwards with Ahaziah, who did very wickedly (xx. 35, 36)?* What is this fatal strain in our nature which deflects us from the living God? But the near risk he ran, in consequence, of forfeiting his life, is twice recorded in the Bible (for this chapter is a duplicate of the first part of 1 Kings xxii.), that we may know what an evil and bitter thing it is to forsake the Fountain for the cistern, and turn aside from Him who was, and is, and is to come.

What a contrast between Jehoshaphat in his robes, seated on his throne, and Micaiah, worn and wan with protracted imprisonment! Each was a true child of God, but the one was coquetting with the world, while the other was content to stand alone with God, though the whole world was in arms against him, and he was fed on the bread and water of affliction. But Micaiah saw the visions of God, not Jehoshaphat; and Micaiah, rather than Jehoshaphat, became God's chosen mouthpiece and spokesman.

The moral needs no words to enforce it. You cannot please God and men; you cannot have fellowship with the light, and with the unfruitful works of darkness. But even when, like Jehoshaphat, you are reaping the sad harvest of your backslidings, if you cry out to the Lord, you will find that He will interpose to help and deliver you (31). F. B. M.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

LISBURN.

FURTHER particulars of the temperance mission recently conducted at Lisburn by Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones are forwarded by an esteemed correspondent, who says:—"At the welcome meeting on January 16 Dr. Henry gave a most stimulating address, which did much to enthuse those who heard him, and thus to contribute to the success of the whole mission. On the Sabbath there was a meeting in the afternoon for men only, when about 500 were present; and in the evening, at eight o'clock, the hall was crowded.

"All are agreed that, while in connection with the Lisburn Temperance Union we have had many splendid missions during the past thirteen or fourteen years, this has been, so far as magnificent speaking and singing are concerned, the best of them all. Dr. Henry's intellectual power and culture, his oratorical gifts, his rich experience and mastery of every phase of the temperance question, and his whole-souled earnestness and consecration in the work, put him in the highest rank of temperance reformers. The singing of Mr. Armon Jones greatly contributed to the attraction and profit of the mission, being of an order that we seldom before had the privilege of hearing. As to the results of the mission we cannot tell. Over 500 pledges were taken, but these can be no gauge of the profit and blessing. Words of eternal truth were spoken and sung night after night to immense audiences, and manifestly the spirit of God was present in power. We cannot doubt but that very many will look back to this mission either as the turning point, or as a high-water mark in their lives. We bless God for having sent such capable and faithful servants our way, and we are grateful also to the London committee."

LONDONDERRY.

The campaign at Londonderry was in many respects a remarkable one. Following the opening meeting, referred to in our last issue, Dr. Henry spoke on January 26 in the Guildhall on the attitude of the Christian churches towards the drink traffic, and also dealt at length with the subject of "The Bible, in Relation to Strong Drink." The Mayor, Alderman Marshall Tilley, occupied the chair.

On the next evening Mr. T. J. Irvine, J.P., presided. Dr. Henry again spoke powerfully, contending that "the individual, the home, society, and the nation, all need deliverance from the ill that is working increasing havoc."

The Wednesday afternoon was devoted to a meeting for women, convened by the Irish Women's Temperance Union, with the special object of welcoming hearers from the rural districts. Mrs. Reed, president of the Union, occupied the chair, and Miss Mackillup, principal of Victoria High School, spoke some earnest and helpful words, calling for devotion and sacrifice in the interests of the temperance cause. Dr. Henry, in an impressive address, urged his hearers to labour for the enforcement and improvement of laws affecting the traffic. In the evening Dr. Henry gave, in the Guildhall, his popular lecture on "Public House Life in America."

The concluding meeting of the campaign was held on Thursday last in the Waterside Presbyterian church. The esteemed pastor, Rev. Dr. Stuart, presided, and the address, says the Derry Standard, was "the most convincing lecture of the week, basing its whole framework upon incontrovertible facts." Both the address and the powerful singing of Mr. Armon Jones were received with enthusiasm.

Aggressive Methodists.

THE Royal Aquarium, Westminster, S.W., was on Monday night the scene of remarkable activity. Methodists from all parts of the metropolis, and from the provinces, assembled in their thousands for an historic gathering. The occasion was a worthy one, and the proceedings were of a most enthusiastic character. As the outcome of the effort to raise the sum of one million guineas, the Wesleyan Methodist Church had allocated one quarter of that sum to be applied towards the purchase of a site and the erection of a Central Church House in the world's metropolis.

Monday evening was the time when the celebration took place of the acquisition of the Aquarium, and it marks an epoch in the annals of Methodism.

In his opening speech, Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., who presided, said it was only a fit and proper thing that the Methodist Church, representing the largest Protestant community in English-speaking countries, should have decided to put down on that magnificent site a Church House and a hall which should be the centre of the religious, educational, and philanthropic work of Methodism.

Professor J. S. Banks (President of the Wesleyan Conference) made touching reference to the late Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who had carried on work in the West of London with such wonderful vigour, and he urged that the leaders of this forward movement would "lead courageously and attempt great things for the kingdom of God."

Sir John McDougall, Chairman of the London County Council, followed, offering a hearty welcome to this progressive movement, and bidding God-speed to the church and its work, which would hasten on the day when (as our Lord taught His disciples to pray) the will of God will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

In a characteristic address Rev. Dr. J. Guinness Rogers, the next speaker, emphasized the truth that the great things of the Gospel are the only things worth working for, living for, fighting for, and dying for.

Invitations which had been extended to the presidents of the smaller Methodist bodies were acknowledged by them as an indication of the desire on the part of each for a closer union and federation, which it was hoped would be realized before the century had advanced very far.

Wesleyan ministers were ably represented by Revs. C. H. Kelly, F. W. Macdonald, and Dinsdale T. Young, each of whom gave an earnest and striking address.

The gathering remained unbroken for the space of three hours; the unanimous feeling of the vast audience was that the forward step taken had indeed been in the direction of a Providential leading, and many prayers were offered for the future of the great scheme to which they had now become committed.

City College, Colombo.

REV. MARSHALL HARTLEY, general secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, writes to us: "My attention has been called to an article in your issue of January 8, headed, 'City College, Colombo,' which contains a statement relating to our Wesleyan Methodist College in that city, 'with a ritualistic head-master, who virtually controlled the appointment of teachers and other affairs of the institution.' Permit me to say that this statement is untrue in two particulars. Mr. C. P. Dias, who has been head-master of Wesley College, Colombo, for many years, and whom I know personally, is not a ritualist, but a devout member of the Anglican Church, with absolutely no ritualistic sympathies; nor has he, or ever had, control of the appointment of the teachers or the general affairs of the institution. These have always been, and still are, in the hands of the Principal, who is invariably a Wesleyan Minister."

[We need hardly say that we much regret having been misinformed in the matter referred to.—Ed.]

Obituary.

LOUISA LADY ASHBURTON.

WE announce with deep regret the death of Louisa Lady Ashburton, at the age of seventy-six. For a number of years she had devoted time and energy to various forms of philanthropic effort, taking a particular interest in the welfare of seamen at the docks. We hope to give in an early issue further particulars of the life and work of her ladyship.

MRS. J. F. MORTON.

Many will hear with sorrow of the death of the wife of Colonel Morton, of Mildmay Conference Hall. Since the death, some months ago, of her daughter (the wife of Rev. S. Le Mesurier, of Westerham), Mrs. Morton has been in a very weak state. This sore bereavement of the superintendent of the Mildmay Institutions, will engage the prayerful sympathy of many Christian people.

MR. DONALD DORRINGTON.

Donald Dorrington—the remarkable sufferer and saint about whom I wrote under the heading of "A Living Miracle" in The Christian of the 22nd inst.—"crossed the bar" on Monday of last week. An old friend who was with him asked him the last question: "Is the Lord present with you?" "Oh, yes," replied Dorrington, with a smile. "Lo, I am with you—even unto the end," added the friend. "Yes, yes," whispered the dying sufferer. Just at the last, he made one final effort, and said, "Good-bye, all." It was, I am told, a "triumphant entry into glory."

Avary H. Forbes.

MRS. INGALLS, BURMAH.

A long life of faithful missionary service in Burmah has been closed by the death of Mrs. Marilla B. Ingalls. A native of the United States, she went out to the East when quite young in connection with the American Baptist Missionary Union, and had reached the age of seventy-four when the home-call came. Mrs. Ingalls had a great love for this country and the British people, one of her treasured possessions being a Bible sent by Queen Victoria, through her, to King Theebaw's Queen, and which eventually found its way back into her possession. She and her helpers have seen much of the goodness of the Lord in work among women and children. A striking feature of her career has been her personal influence for good over Buddhist priests, no fewer than sixty of these men having professed conversion through her instrumentality. In later years, the introduction of railways provided this alert steward of Divine things with a fresh avenue of usefulness, in which also God richly blessed her. Thonze was a centre from which many rays of Gospel light have shone forth.

SIR GEORGE STOKES, BART.

By the death of Sir George Gabriel Stokes, Bart., a distinguished scientist who was a humble disciple of Christ has passed from this scene of life. To name the posts and honours held by Sir George is much like making a catalogue of dignities and offices. Here are a few of them: Master of Pembroke College, Cambridge, Lucasian Professor of Mathematics, formerly President of the Royal Society, and M.P. for Cambridge University from 1887 to 1892. Sir George was one of the foremost mathematicians of the time, having been born at Skreen, County Sligo, in 1819. Oxford, Cambridge, Edinburgh, Dublin, Glasgow, and Aberdeen had recognised his high attainments and life-long services to mathematical science by conferring their honorary degrees upon him, and he was also a Knight of the Prussian Order Pour le Mérite.

The religious side of Sir George's life was consistent and intense. As president of the Victoria Institute, in whose proceedings he took the keenest interest, he was often present at the discussion of questions in which science and faith might seem to clash, and he maintained to the last a position that was boldly Christian and steadying to less stable minds.

Railway Mission Convalescent Homes.

THAT 439 railway men should have been killed and 14,607 injured in the United Kingdom during one year, is a record of accidents on the line, which must surprise and shock any sympathetic heart. And yet these are the terrible figures which appear in the Board of Trade return of railway accidents for 1901. From the same official source we learn that the figures for 1900 were even higher, the numbers in that year having been 631 killed and 15,698 injured.

It is a striking testimony to the care which the men exercise in the performance of their dangerous duties that in the year 1901 not a single passenger by rail was killed. It is not pleasant to think that the safety of the passengers has been secured at such cost of life and limb to the railway men any more than it is agreeable for the railway shareholder to feel that his dividend has been purchased at so great sacrifice on the part of those who help to earn it.

Many of the injured men have to undergo amputation of one or more limbs, and their condition when discharged from hospital is often very sad. A man returns weak and helpless to his home to find that the small allowance from the sick benefit fund is barely sufficient to obtain the necessaries of life for his wife and children. He needs nourishing food, for without this the period of convalescence will be long and tedious.

It was to help sick and injured railway men in their time of weakness and need that the Railway Mission established its two Convalescent Homes. The first Home was opened at Hastings in 1892, and contained accommodation for twelve patients. As the number of applications for admission increased, the need for a larger building became imperative. An appeal for funds was generously responded to, and in 1897 a fine building which accommodates forty patients was opened on West Hill, St. Leonards, in a magnificent position overlooking the sea.

RAILWAY MISSION CONVALESCENT HOME, WEST HILL, ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.

It was found that the journey to St. Leonards was too long and trying for convalescents from the north of England, and to meet the need of these men a Home was opened on the Promenade, Southport, in 1900. Under the capable management of Miss Dolby, honorary superintendent at St. Leonards, and of Miss Davidson at Southport, these Homes have proved an immense boon to the railway men, who are loud in their praises of the comforts enjoyed during a stay there.

Since the Homes were opened, 2,750 railway men have been admitted as patients. Not only have the men benefited physically, but the spiritual blessing has been remarkable. Hundreds of men have been won for Christ, 103 men professing to be converted during their stay last year.

Many touching letters of thanks are constantly received from men who have been patients. One writes:—"My wife could see a change in me before I had been home long from your place, and she went down on her knees and prayed as I had never known her to do in the same way before. I have told lots of my fellow workmates about my conversion. My God has been with me ever since I left you."

Another man writes:—"The time I spent with you was the happiest time in my life. Praise the Lord for sending me there! I almost bless my illness; without that I would never have come there, and that would mean still blundering on to Eternity, which is awful to think of."

In addition to the wounded railway men, a large number are constantly on the sick list through exposure to all sorts of weather by night and day. A letter of admission is given for every guinea contributed, which admits a patient for three weeks at a reduced charge of 5s. 6d. per week. At the present time funds are urgently needed for the maintenance of the Homes, and the committee are very anxious to build or purchase a suitable house for a Home at Southport, when the lease of the present house expires. The secretary of the Homes is Mr. R. Nixon, 1, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

Drift Work.

ON a recent Sunday afternoon, at the hour when most children are gathered into our Sunday-schools, Mr. Bray (of the Lamb and Flag Schools, Red Lion Street, Clerkenwell Green) went out into the neighbouring streets and courts, and gave the children he found playing about, who do not attend any schools, cards of invitation to attend a lantern service the following evening; 160 children responded to the invitation, and in this way many are gathered into their Sunday-schools. Mr. Bray, who has laboured as a city missionary in the same district for thirty-five years, says he has never known keener distress. Many good, steady men, teetotallers, are now out of work. One of the rules of the London City Mission has been that its missionaries should carry the Word of God into the homes of the poor without giving relief, but it has been impossible to see such distress without attempting to alleviate it. Will friends send the Mission the necessaries of life for distribution?

Precious Things.

The precious trial of our precious faith in the precious blood of the precious Saviour—the precious promise of our God.

Precious Promises (2 Pet. i. 4).

Exceeding great and precious are
The promises of God;
But greatest and the best by far
Is Christ the living Word.

Precious Saviour (1 Pet. ii. 4, 6, 7).

He is the chief—the corner stone,
Elect and precious He;
Chosen of God, 'tis He alone
Can our Deliverer be.

Precious Faith (1 Pet. i. 7; 2 Pet. i. 1).

A precious faith we have obtained,
Through righteousness of God;
And by its precious trial gained
The honour of His Word.

Precious Blood (1 Pet. i. 19).

The precious blood of Christ has made
Atonement full and free;
Not all the gold and silver paid
Could our redemption be.

City Workroom Girls.

AT Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., on Wednesday of last week, Mrs. Fisher welcomed a number of Christian friends interested in her work among the girls employed in factories in the City. After a time of friendly intercourse among the workers, Mr. M. H. Hodder occupied the chair. He rejoiced that the one who had inaugurated the movement was still able to be among them, to speak of the work so dear to her heart.

Mrs. Fisher was accorded a warm reception. She spoke of the circumstances which led to the inception of the work some thirty years ago, and sketched the chief features of the effort. The mid-day services for girls, held in Jewin Street Chapel, are not, it seems, so well attended as is desirable. At the monthly rallies, however, the girls are present in large numbers, and full advantage is taken of the opportunity of bringing them under the influence of the Gospel.

Among the workers who told of encouragement in their labours were Miss Barrington, Miss Green, Miss Newton, and Mr. Benson. Miss Seton Carr, who is responsible for a similar work, spoke of the readiness with which the girls welcome to the factories those who go to speak and sing the Gospel. Some instances of the good results which have followed this ministry were given; and Mr. A. Garstin and Mr. Wates, as employers, bore hearty testimony to what has been accomplished, and expressed their appreciation of the efforts of Mrs. Fisher and her band of helpers.

Emmanuel Creche and Mission, Lambeth.

IN connection with this Mission, a Crèche has been opened at Tooting, the house at Lambeth having been condemned by the authorities as insanitary. At an inaugural meeting, on January 21, Miss Reid, the hon. superintendent, and Mrs. Jupe, the treasurer, explained that this step had been rendered necessary, and that while arrangements had been made for continuing the work among the dust women of Lambeth, and receiving their little ones at the Day Nursery at Kennington, this new home would be devoted to the care of those who required the more permanent protection of the Mission, some of whom had been deserted by their parents. Women also would find a temporary home here, and would be instructed in laundry work.

The efforts of the Mission have been greatly blessed of God, and it is hoped that the new step, taken in faith, will largely increase the usefulness of the Mission. The work is entirely undenominational, and was heartily commended by Pastors Greenwood, Rumsey, and Hazzard, and Mr. Payne, of Christ Church (Rev. F. B. Meyer's). Miss Reid's address is 33, Keildon Road, Battersea Rise, London, S.W.

Rescue Work in Brighton.

THE annual statement of the Albion Hill Home, Brighton, reviews a year which, unfortunately, has not brought the amount of support merited by the institution. In the course of the twelve months dealt with in the forty-seventh report, fifty-seven girls were admitted—a larger number than in the four preceding years, bringing the total of cases taken since the establishment of the Home to 2,415. Of this number, 1,167 have been sent to domestic service. Many of the letters from girls who have been rescued from sin, trained in an atmosphere of love, and led back to lives of usefulness and honour, afford much encouragement to those who are responsible for the maintenance of the institution. The chaplain and secretary is Rev. R. C. Macdonald. Home Villa, Queen's Park, Brighton.

West London's Sick Poor.

THE exceptional distress which prevails among the poor at the present time necessarily increases the responsibilities of medical missions, since one of the first results of an increase of poverty is an increase of sickness. At the Marylebone Medical Mission, in the distressful district of Bell Street, Lisson Grove, W., Dr. Chambers has for many years ministered to the sick and suffering, and he is earnestly endeavouring to cope with the present difficult conditions.

The work is many sided; the chief features are of course the dispensary and the home visitation of patients, but the aim is, in all things, spiritual, and the impressions made during interviews and in the Gospel services held on dispensary days are deepened by the Sabbath meetings and the various gatherings for Bible study and spiritual encouragement.

The institution at 12, Bell Street, influences men and women who are far removed from the churches. They are the poorest of the poor, the people whose living, always of the scantiest, is quickly changed by adverse circumstances, by a frost or a lack of employment, into a state of absolute want.

Dr. Chambers has so won confidence that it is generally understood among the deserving poor that he will treat them both with skill and Christian brotherliness. Recently a young woman in great distress on account of the sudden and serious illness of her father was walking the streets wondering whither to turn for help, as they were complete strangers to London. Happily she got into who advised her, in terse language, "You go to the Medical Mission; there's a doctor for you!" She took the advice, and thereby found a friend in need.

It is no enviable task to visit these slum "homes." Of recent years, owing to clearances of certain districts, there has been a large displacement of population; and while it is true that many new blocks of dwellings have been erected, the rent of these is in many instances higher than can be paid by those who have been compelled to vacate their lodgings. The consequences of this are experienced by Dr. Chambers; he finds people living under terrible conditions, whole families existing in tiny garrets and cellar-like rooms. Sickness is rife, and the doctor has to perform duties that are often of an exacting character, in a suffocating atmosphere, with sad limitations as to light and space. And the demands upon his time and the mission funds do not cease when medicine has been given. The poor patients, wanting even the necessaries of life at a time when extra nourishment is required, must have suitable food and careful nursing, fire and sufficient clothing if they are to recover.

It is encouraging to find not only that deep gratitude is manifested, but that the words of admonition and exhortation which the doctor is able to speak to the sick ones bear good fruit. The printed texts left with the patients are treasured, and at the Mission Hall itself there are many signs of blessing. A deaconess actively pursues her duties, carrying on a women's meeting in addition to visitation, and by such agencies as a clothing club the people are confirmed in habits of thrift.

The attendance at the Sabbath meetings, and the evident sincerity and genuineness of those who have been led to decision, and who in their turn help to carry on the meetings, bear testimony to the fact that Dr. Chambers' long and arduous toil is owned and blessed of God.

Employment for the Blind.—The British and Foreign Blind Association has taken offices in the busiest part of the West End. By way of promoting the education and employment of the blind, it has inaugurated a bureau where blind workers and their patrons can be brought together. No fee will be charged, either to employer or employed. There are many things the blind can do, and do efficiently, and if applicants will specify forms of employment the Association will do its best to supply their needs. The secretary of the Association is Mr. William P. E. Barnes, and the offices are at 206, Great Portland Street, W.

The Late Sister Emma,

OF LITTLEHAMPTON.

AMONGST the readers of The Christian there are doubtless many who have been to Rev. W. Darlow Sargeant's Home of Rest at Littlehampton, and there came in touch with Sister Emma. To these her sudden home-call, on November 26 last, would come as a personal loss. This short sketch is written in the hope that it may deepen the influence of her life and teaching in those who knew her, and inspire others to a similar self-surrender and usefulness.

The first part of her life was spent at Greenwich, and there she showed herself specially adapted to govern, control, and instruct, in her position as head-mistress of the Board School. She was an earnest member of the Congregational Church, but was one of those who are never able to point to a definite moment of conversion. During Rev. Darlow Sargeant's ministry at the Wesleyan Church at Greenwich, she was taken by a friend to his society class, and through his instrumentality came into a bright consciousness of fellowship with God.

Her deepest interest had always been in the foreign mission-field, and about this time she offered herself for the work, but to to her great disappointment was refused on account of health. Her determination to devote her life to definite work for Christ remained unshaken, and she volunteered to take charge of "The Hillyers," Littlehampton, which was at that time in need of a lady-superintendent. The post offered great scope for definite work among the numbers constantly visiting the Home. She resigned her scholastic position, and at Easter, 1890, entered upon her work as head of the Home of Rest, becoming known thereafter as "Sister Emma."

She at once proved the call to be God-given, and from that time to the end of her thirteen years of service at Littlehampton all who visited the Home felt the power of the living Christ within her. She was a vessel so emptied of self and prepared by God that the more abundant life flowed through her to thousands. The following are a few extracts taken from numbers of letters found after her death, and which bear testimony to this:—

It is not possible to estimate the amount of blessing that our Divine Lord sends through you to his workers. None can dwell in your Home without returning to their work for the Master refreshed, strengthened, and stimulated.

I want so much to tell you that, though your Bible-classes and talks did help me very much, it was your life that helped me most of all, far more than I can ever tell you.

My heart is full of praise to God for the definite lessons He has taught me while at the Home, the chief one being the possibility and privilege of living in unbroken fellowship with God. . . . Your life, day by day, has served to send the lesson home in a practical way.

Her great wish was that everyone who received help should, in their turn, become helpful to others, and the majority of the visitors, when they returned to their various spheres, became fresh centres of light. Thus it is impossible to estimate how far-reaching her influence has been and still continues to be. A marked feature of her work was her Bible-readings, which were given every Sunday afternoon and Wednesday evening, and the morning and evening prayers. Her teaching was clear and Scriptural, and was driven home to many hearts by the power of the Holy Spirit.

In spite of the great pressure of her unceasing work in the Home, which taxed her physical energies to the utmost, she rarely refused any call to outside service, such as speaking at the village chapels around Littlehampton; and there she had the joy of winning souls for God, and building up Christians in their faith. Her sympathy with the difficulties and needs of those around her was unceasing; the "heart at leisure from itself, to soothe and sympathize," was given to her in fullest measure. It was her custom to have a personal interview, if possible, with every visitor who passed through the Home; this was a great strain, but she realized to the full the joy of self-sacrifice. Her life was poured out for the good of others and the extension of the Saviour's Kingdom.

For some time before the end it had been evident that the ceaseless work was wearing out her strength, but neither the entreaties of friends that she would spare herself, nor the doctor's warnings, could prevail upon her to rest. She worked on with failing strength, but unflagging energy. On the morning of Wednesday, November 26, she was busy in her loved work as usual; but during the day the tired heart began to fail, and in the evening about the hour of her weekly Bible-reading, she gently passed from her earthly service to the presence of the King.

It is greatly to be regretted that this good woman had not more effectually conserved her strength, so that she might, humanly speaking, have prolonged her valued life.

Country Towns Mission.

DURING the last few months some of the workers of the Country Towns Mission have visited several groups of villages in different parts of the country for temporary work. About 100 villages have been reached in this way. The districts were chosen on account of their exceptional spiritual need. The missionaries have systematically visited the people in these places, ensuring, as far as possible, that everyone should hear the way of salvation through the finished work of the Saviour. Suitable books and tracts have also been freely distributed.

Few of the Lord's people realize, it is feared, the spiritual lack in large numbers of our villages, and the committee of the Society are most thankful for what they have been enabled to do to meet the great need. By regular visitation in the homes, those who attend no place of worship have been reached, as well as the many who are unable to attend by reason of age or infirmity. In some instances, too, those who are regular worshippers have been helped to realize the meaning of words which hitherto had been used mechanically. One such, when asked whether he knew that his sins were forgiven, replied that he could not say, but told the missionary that he attended church regularly. The missionary then said, if that were so, he often had repeated the words, "I believe in the forgiveness of sins," and he asked him, "Whose sins do you mean?" The matter appeared thus in quite a new light to his hearer.

The forty-eight missionaries labouring in connection with this excellent Society supply a great lack in many country districts. The offices of the Society are at 12, Serjeants' Inn, Fleet Street, E.C., and the treasurer is Mr. Harry C. Nisbet

A Pioneer Among the Young.

THE LATE MR. QUINTIN HOGG.

PROBABLY no philanthropic organization in London is more widely known than the Polytechnic, and the sad death, on January 19, of its founder and president, Mr. Quintin Hogg, has left in the hearts of very many all over the world a sense of personal bereavement. To thousands who are now occupying useful and honoured positions in business life at home and abroad, he was guide, counsellor, and friend, at the critical period of life. Since Mr. Hogg was a youth himself, sympathy and practical help were ungrudgingly placed at the disposal of those to whom such stimulus and support meant giving them a chance in the battle of life. Born to a position of wealth and influence, he valued these privileges most for the opportunity they afforded for helping others. The son of a distinguished Anglo-Indian, the late Sir James Weir Hogg, M.P., the young man succeeded to a good position in business and social life; and all the advantages he enjoyed have been turned to good account.

Mr. Hogg has left it on record that his first experience of Christian work was the holding of a Bible-class among his school-fellows at Eton. He was laughed at, but he expected to be, and he was not to be turned aside in such fashion from his purpose. Two contemporaries who did much to encourage him and strengthen his hands were the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham and the present Lord Kinnaird. Leaving Eton in 1863, the following year saw him working among the boys of London.

Going right to the bottom of the social scale, he was painfully impressed, when he took up mission work, by the utter absence of any possible means of innocent recreation, not to mention instruction, for the young people of both sexes. Like every other pioneer in the slums he was also shocked to find the state of destitution existing in the city, out of sight of the comfortable classes. On one occasion, after visiting every room in a certain Pipemakers' Alley, off Bedfordbury — inhabited almost exclusively by natives of Ireland—he found that the whole court boasted only two bedsteads, the remainder of the population using such improvised substitutes as bundles of rags, &c. The furniture consisted mainly of boxes, the smaller ones serving as seats, and the larger ones doing duty as tables.

The enormity of the problem with which he was confronted took possession of Mr. Hogg's mind to such an extent that he said afterwards he felt almost as though he would go mad unless he were able to do something to alleviate the misery. He found relief in setting himself actually alongside some of the young people, beginning with two crossing-sweepers with whom he scraped an acquaintance in Trafalgar Square. That the proposal was a very remarkable one from their point of view goes without saying; and doubtless it also had a humorous side, for the advantages of education are seldom keenly realised by those to whom they have been denied.

It is to the meeting of this trio that we have to go back for the beginning of the Polytechnic movement. The neighbourhood of Charing Cross was very different from what it is now. The need was great, but the teacher had much to learn, and we are not surprised to find that Mr. Hogg did not regard this first effort as very successful. The gulf between him and the boys over whom he yearned was still too wide to be bridged without more drastic methods. Determined to leave no stone unturned for the accomplishment of his purpose, he went down to the New Cut, and bought what he afterwards described as "a second-hand shoeblack's suit," with box, brushes, and all other necessaries for the carrying on of such a business.

We give some of his experiences in his own words:—

> With this I used to go out two or three nights a week for about six months, blacking boots and sleeping out with the boys on barges, under tarpaulins, or in the so-called "Punch's Hole," on a ledge in the Adelphi Arches, and elsewhere. Of course, my father knew nothing about it, and sometimes, if I found my companions in these holes particularly full of vermin, I would go and roll myself up in a blanket on a table in our mission room, and sleep there. My real object, of course, was to learn how the boys lived, what they fed on, what it cost them to live, and how they could best be reached. Of course, I was not bootblacking all the time; sometimes I would go out about Covent Garden Market, holding horses, or doing any odd jobs which I saw boys doing. The following winter the ragged-school began in real earnest, at first only as a day school. The room—the rental of which was £12 a year—was situated in Of Alley (now York Place, a name which it was just beginning to bear), off the Strand.

A very earnest lady who was placed in charge of the ragged-school at once saw the field of usefulness opening out, and pressed for the opening of the room on every evening not otherwise required, for the purpose of teaching older lads. Mr. Hogg shrank from taking any personal share in this effort, but readily gave the required permission. On the opening evening he was in bed with a feverish cold; but a messenger arrived at his home in hot haste to say that a row was going on at the school, and that the police, who had interfered, were being pelted with slates. Dressing quickly, and rushing off to the scene of the mêlée, he found a free fight going on, gas-fittings having been wrenched off for use as weapons, and all handy movables used as missiles. The rapidity with which he was able to restore order amazed him, and revealed to him the fact that he had a capacity for the management of young people.

After that experience he entered with all his heart into the evening work. Till 1868, when he went abroad for the first time, Mr. Hogg scarcely missed the ragged-school for a single night. The class prospered amazingly, the little room, which was only 30ft. long by 12ft. wide, got so crammed that the school was divided into two sections of sixty each, the first detachment coming from 7 to 8.30, and the second from 8.30 to 10.0. There he sat between the two classes, perched on the back of a form, dining on "a pint of thick and two doorsteps," as the boys used to call coffee and bread and treacle, taking one class at reading and the other at writing or arithmetic. Each section closed with a ten minutes' service and prayer.

The effect of the work rapidly made itself apparent. Within six months the members of five gangs of young thieves were known to be working for a living. The Shoeblack Brigade was a useful channel for introducing boys into the paths of industry, and from it a number were apprenticed to trades. No ground was ever lost in the forward movement. The lads themselves were the best recommendation of the school, and their attitude towards it drew in their companions. Much was gained by the inculcation of a measure of self-respect, and a visitor in 1868 would have seen a very different picture from that presented four years earlier.

That the young people soon learned to appreciate the efforts made on their behalf may be gathered from an account of the establishment of a Twopenny Dosshouse.

> The intention was that boys who had been picked up in the street and started at the school, and who had no homes, should be kept from bad surroundings—such as thieves' kitchens and low lodging-houses—and housed under respectable and improving influences. The house was in a state of utter dilapidation when we took it over, but the boys and myself set to work as amateur painters, carpenters, and whitewashers, and we were very well pleased at the result, though even to this day I cannot think of the job we made of the doors, and, indeed, of our whole carpentering altogether, without laughing.

Mr. Hogg himself had a little room in the attic, which had been inhabited by a man who used it for the double purpose of a habitation and a place in which to dry fish. The smell of the latter clung about the walls in spite of all that could be done, and the boys declared that to come into the room made them hungry for supper! By this time a master had become necessary, in addition to the female teacher, and he ultimately took up his residence in the attic room Mr. Hogg at first occupied.

In 1869 the first great move was made to a house in Castle Street, off a portion of Endell Street, then known as Hanover Street, from whence was acquired the first distinctive title of Hanover Institute. Here it was found possible to fit up a good dormitory, with sleeping accommodation for forty boys; and again a small room was partitioned off for Mr. Hogg's own use, the master taking his place when he slept at home. Duty began early, for it was necessary to call the boys at half-past five o'clock, and to see that they went off to work in good time. During all these years regular mission services were maintained on the premises and in outlying rooms.

Success brought new problems. Some of the former ragamuffins had become respectable members of society, and had been joined by many of their new companions. There was a danger of their presence changing the character of the original institution, and on the other hand it was not fair to expect them to continue members of a ragged school. The accommodation admitted of division into two sections; and one of the most satisfactory results of the change was that those who had made most progress became themselves helpers in the rescue of others from the pit of degradation. That the movement had been established on right lines was proved by the difficulty continually experienced in finding room for those who applied for admission.

After seven years in Hanover Institute, larger premises were secured in Long Acre, where it was possible to increase the membership to 500, but even then names sometimes remained on the list of candidates for twelve months before they could be elected. The Polytechnic, as we know it, began now to be more distinctly foreshadowed. The educational range was widened, a connection established with the Science and Art Department, and Mr. Robert Mitchell consented to devote himself entirely to the furtherance of the work, proving by exceptional devotion and ability his special qualifications for the directorship he still holds. Another name, the memory of which is still lovingly cherished in connection with those days, is that of the late Mr. W. T. Paton.

Step by step Mr. Hogg had been led on in an untrodden path. Another scheme had, moreover, been forming in his mind; and when, in 1881, the Polytechnic came into the market he felt that this was exactly what was required. On Sunday, September 25, 1882, the first gatherings were held on the now familiar premises, and the hall was crowded morning and evening. On the first evening for receiving new members a thousand came. The intention to limit the membership to two thousand was speedily abandoned, and gradually the number rose to over 18,000.

On the last evening of his life, Mr. Hogg conducted the usual weekly religious service, and remained till the closing up of the premises. Shaking hands with all the members as they left, he observed one without an overcoat. Remarking that it was too cold a night to go without one, he detained the lad till he had sent out a man to buy one, and then put it on with his own hands. Deeds of kindness have abounded throughout this noble life. He did not pauperize any, but helped all who came within his influence to help themselves. Above all, his ideals were Christian; and, while touching life at many points, he felt that he had failed unless he had brought the heart into touch with God. His cordial support of the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and other evangelistic work is another grateful memory of his earnest career.

Open Doors in Alexandria.

FROM a communication recently received from Miss Johnson, Johnson House, Alexandria, Egypt, relating to her work among women and girls, there is evidently much cause for encouragement in the result of the efforts which are being made. The conditions under which many of the people live, however, are averse to physical progress and spiritual advancement. Miss Johnson tells of much starvation and suffering. "One morning women of all nationalities came to me, each with the same story, told in different ways. 'We are starving, but we are not beggars; we only ask for work.' In one week 3,000 people who could afford to employ women ran away panic-stricken from the cholera. Through the kindness of a few friends we have found twelve hours' work weekly for fifteen women; but what are fifteen when in one month 300 applied to me?" In asking for remembrance in prayer Miss Johnson requests that praise should be offered for the open doors on every side and for unexpected gifts towards the work.

The Qua Iboe Mission.

THIS Mission has now been in existence for fifteen years, evangelizing the tribes living on the banks of the Qua Iboe River in Southern Nigeria. During that time God has greatly blessed its labours.

The first station was opened at the mouth of the river, among the Ibuno people, by Mr. S. A. Bill, the pioneer and founder of the Mission, in 1887. In connection with this station there are now two churches, with native pastors, and over 600 members. There are five out-stations, at places where the Gospel is rapidly taking root, each in charge of a native teacher, and the good work has spread through the whole district occupied by the Ibuno tribe.

The second station was opened among the Ibibios, at Okat, by Mr. A. Bailie in 1893. The work at this place was strongly opposed by the secret societies, so common among the degraded Ibibios, and made little progress for a long time. Within the past two or three years, however, the attitude of the people towards the Gospel has changed, and many of them come long distances to hear God's Word.

At the third station, about fifty miles up the river, where the work began under Mr. Kirk in 1899, a large number of people have professed conversion, and many others are inquiring the way of salvation. The feature of the work at this station has been the desire of the people to learn to read God's Word. The little mud-school, erected by themselves, is crowded every day by a varied assemblage of men, women, and children industriously endeavouring to master the alphabet, with a view to learn to read.

The native Christians have carried their new faith into contact with the heathen in the outlying towns, with the result that there is now a widening fringe of people around each of our stations eager for the Gospel. Several of the towns have sent deputations to the missionaries requesting that work should be opened amongst them, requests which have had to be repeatedly refused for lack of workers.

The European missionaries, whilst looking to the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers into this dark and needy field, turn their eyes to God's children at home in the hope that there may be an additional co-operation in prayer and effort for the evangelization of the tribes of Qua Iboe lands. The hon. treasurer of the Mission is Mr. Wm. Strain, Windsor Park, Belfast. R. L. McKeown.

Bible Teachers' Training School.

THE second term of the Bible Teachers' Training Schools, New York, of which Dr. W. W. White is president, was opened on January 17 by a most interesting address by Dr. Robert W. Rogers, of Drew Theological Seminary, on "A Bundle of Letters Thirty Centuries Old." This address included a popular account of the discovery of Babylonian letters in Upper Egypt, with historical materials derived from them. The lecturers and instructors of the school announced for the term are Dr. White, Dr. R. W. Rogers, Dr. A. F. Schauffler, Rev. George Soltau (of England), Miss Jane de Groffe Thompson, Miss Caroline L. Palmer, and others.

Dr. White will continue the course which he has been conducting in the chapel of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church on Sunday evenings, which he calls "The Best Ten Chapter Course." He will also conduct in Calvary Baptist Church a popular Bible-class on Sunday mornings, and a teachers' training class on Monday evenings in connection with his dining-room Bible-class work. On Thursday evenings he will give a series of lectures on the Gospel by John in Hanson Place Baptist Church, Brooklyn.

The various classes of the school were largely attended during last term. The tuition is free, and visitors are welcome to all the exercises. Any desiring information should address, Bible Teachers' Training School, 1036, Sixth Avenue, corner 58th Street, New York.

Gospel Work in Normandy.

TO meet the needs of the Seine Inférieure Department there are only about twenty pastors and evangelists, giving over 300 miles to one labourer. Passing from village to village, satchel and pockets filled with Gospels and tracts from numerous societies and friends, I leave scarcely a home in any village I enter without the Word of Life. If readers could witness some of the scenes in these peasant homes of Normandy, I am sure they would feel constrained to do their utmost to assist. The three requisites are prayer, literature, and money. I should like, if the means are forthcoming, to have a helper, and I know of one highly suitable.

The eagerness with which the people receive the Word of God is delightful, as well as surprising to an Englishman. Seated at their looms, their attention is riveted whilst I read John iii., or Luke xv., and then add a few words. And when I sing, "Tell me the old, old story" in their own tongue, their joy is unbounded. Here truly is a rich harvest of golden grain!

One day, in entering a cottage, I ran right into the arms of the Curé, robed in the picturesque dress of his order. I offered him at once a copy of "The Epistles of St. Peter." He was astounded! Right under the very shadow of his own church, and here in the very midst of his flock! Explanations followed. Then the good man embraced me, with tears in his eyes, and made me take a seat, reading Luke xv. with me, in alternate verses. Afterwards he besought his flock to treasure the Gospels I had given them, and, giving me his blessing, promised to pray continually for me.

One day this week I spent some time with the poor cliff-dwellers at Dieppe, telling them of God's great love, and of the sin-cleansing power of the blood of Jesus, leaving each a Gospel. Afterwards in the market I was almost crushed, so eager were the people to get books and tracts. Samuel Levermore.

Distress in Brittany.

BY the failure of the sardine fishery, great distress has fallen upon the people of Brittany. The population of the coast has mainly depended upon this industry; but the fish having disappeared, privation and famine have settled upon the province.

From all parts of France help has been sent to the needy people; and the British consul has received many amounts from English sympathisers. Pasteur Lecoat, whose Evangelical Mission, with headquarters at Tremel, Cotes-du-Nord, engages the interest and support of many of our readers, writes to us: "During thirty-four years of labour I have often appealed for spiritual food for the people of Brittany. Now it is my sorrowful duty to ask for something wherewith to feed their bodies. It is a sad fact that about a hundred thousand people are perishing for want of food. We shall require all the aid we can get. Anyone acquainted with the Bretons knows how proud and patient they are; they will not parade their sufferings, but will rather shut their doors and starve in silence. I earnestly ask English Christians to aid my needy brethren in this hour of unparalleled distress."

"The Roman Catholic Church in Italy."

—Rev. Dr. Robertson, of Venice, having sent to King Victor Emanuel a copy of his new book bearing this title, recently published by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, has received the following reply:—"His Majesty has received, together with your letter, the copy, that you have offered him in homage, of your work, entitled "The Roman Catholic Church in Italy." I am gratified to be able to inform you that His Majesty has been pleased to accord to your kind gift a flattering reception, and to perceive in it a new proof of the sentiments of constant sympathy that you show for Italy and the Royal Family. His Majesty has, therefore, charged me to thank you particularly for your courteous gift, and, in discharging this duty, I take the opportunity of assuring you of my cordial esteem. —(Signed) E. Ponzio Vaglia, Minister of the Royal House."

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

THE LAST WEEK AT MILDMAY.

"PRAY for my husband, separated from his family through his sin"; "Pray for two young men, morally upright, but strangers to Christ"; "Pray for one at this meeting, a slave to strong drink"—these were typical of the requests read by Dr. Torrey on Monday evening last week, and spread before the Lord in prayer by Mr. J. Bennett Anderson.

A SAD SUBJECT.

This was the title announced by Dr. Torrey for the address, which was founded on John v. 40, "Ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life." No man needs to be lost; God has provided salvation for all. No man is lost by any plan or wish of God, who is not willing that any should perish. There are many things which hinder men from coming. (1) Sin. There are many who long for a Saviour, but they know that if they come to Him they must choose between Him and their sin. "One night in Chicago, Mr. Moody had preached on the Prodigal Son. A young man came to me afterwards and said, 'That was a powerful sermon. It pictured my case exactly.' 'And will you come home?' I asked. 'No, sir,' he replied; 'I will not.' He preferred his sin."

Then, there is (2) The love of money. Men choose a larger income and eternal death to a lesser one with eternal life. Two young ladies once said to Mrs. Torrey in a meeting, "We cannot come to Christ. Our employer requires us to misrepresent the goods we sell, and if we refused we should have to leave." They placed position higher than Christ.

LOVERS OF PLEASURE.

(3) The love of pleasure. Men say, "I'll have to give up the dance, the card-table, the theatre." A fashionable young lady in New York City, who was a great waltzer, once said to Dr. John Hall, "If I have to choose between my dancing and Jesus Christ, I'll hold on to my dancing." (4) The fear of man. How many in these very meetings would like to decide, but they ask, "My friends; what would they say?" Well might the wise man say, "The fear of man bringeth a snare." (5) An unforgiving spirit. People know they cannot find Christ and retain a heart full of bitterness. They cherish a grudge rather than yield to Him. (6) Self-will stands between many a soul and Christ. But to whom are we to surrender? Is it not to Him who is infinite wisdom and infinite love?

ONLY ONE WAY.

(7) Pride, manifesting itself in many ways and making men and women unwilling to confess that they are sinners. It makes them set themselves up "not to do" certain specific things. "We can be saved without going into the inquiry room," they say. True, it is belief on the Lord Jesus Christ that saves, but if they make a point of not doing a certain thing, in a spirit of rebellion, they will not be saved until they do do it. "Do you think your position is too exalted for you to be saved in the same way as common folks? If so, let me say you must humble yourself. Do so, and come to Christ."

There was an immediate response, nearly a score rising at once, and after Mr. Alexander had sung "Anywhere with Jesus," others followed, and the front seats were quickly filled with those who professed desire to take the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour.

MORE LESSONS ON THE HOLY SPIRIT.

On the Tuesday afternoon the congregation filled the area of the great hall. A number of heartfelt testimonies were interspersed with hymns and choruses, which, though familiar, have come with new force and light to many.

A few suggestions on Bible study were given by Dr. Torrey. On this occasion he emphasized the usefulness of topical methods, showing the advantage of going through the Bible to see what it teaches concerning any particular subject. He advised the use of a good text-book and concordance, but frankly added, "The work that counts is not that which someone does for you, but that which you do for yourselves."

Continuing his treatment of the work of the Holy Spirit, Dr. Torrey gave a thoughtful and practical exposition of Romans viii. 2-4. He showed how the Third Person of the Trinity gives us victory over the world, the flesh, and the devil, and pointed out that when we get rid of self and give up trying to overcome sin in our own strength, submitting our lives to the control of the Holy Spirit, it is our privilege to live in communion with Him.

INQUIRERS AND THEIR DIFFICULTIES.

Very few vacant seats were to be found in any part of the building at the meeting in the evening. Mr. Alexander, as usual, kept everybody happy by inducing them to sing such favourites as "Trust and Obey" and "When we all get to Heaven," the choruses of which were sung again and again with growing enthusiasm. The anxiety of converts for the salvation of relatives and friends was again demonstrated by the number of requests for prayer. "My parents, over seventy years of age;" "ten brothers and sisters whose father is a drunkard," are typical of the cases for which supplication was asked.

Dr. Baedeker having led in prayer, a portion of Scripture was read by Mr. W. R. Lane. Dr. Torrey announced that he had received a letter from a schoolgirl who was desirous of becoming a Christian, but hesitated to stand up, because many of the workers had regarded her as already converted. Dr. Torrey advised the young inquirer that nothing would cause her misery to give place to happiness but a bold confession. Standing up did not make anyone a Christian; yet, it was the token of a sincere desire for a change of heart.

Dr. Torrey's address was a practical application of the question asked of Saul of Tarsus, "Why tarriest thou?" (Acts xxii. 16), and was delivered with all the vigour and definiteness of statement of a preacher yearning for the salvation of souls. After reiterating the circumstances of Saul's rebellion against God, and his ultimate conversion, the speaker urged his hearers to put the questions to their own hearts, What am I waiting for? Why am I not a Christian? In response to the appeal all heads were bowed in silence, and a time of solemn heart-searching followed. After waiting a few moments. Dr. Torrey proceeded to deal with some of the answers which he knew would have arisen in many minds. Words of earnest exhortation were spoken to those who were procrastinating, or waiting for better feelings, and the profound impression made on the audience had far-reaching results.

FILLED WITH THE SPIRIT.

The meeting on Wednesday afternoon opened with several testimonies of blessing received during the previous evening, and Mr. Frederick Thomas, of Denver, Colorado, in two sentences, recalled days of power in America several years ago.

In a short talk, Dr. Torrey gave more advice on Bible-study by individual books, saying that there was no method more profitable in its results. The address of the afternoon was on "The Baptism of the Holy Ghost: What it is, what it does, its necessity, its possibility." Distinguishing between "baptism" and "filling," Dr. Torrey insisted upon the power of the Holy Spirit being at the command of believers. He led his hearers through passages in the Acts of the Apostles and elsewhere, to show that the blessing of the early days of the Church may be ours to-day—that we may have power for service by being filled with the Spirit of God.

EXCUSES.

One of the requests for prayer in the evening was from a man who had been seeking Christ for two years. "I hope he will speak to me to-night," said Dr. Torrey. "There is no need for anyone to seek Christ for two minutes." Another touching note was from one who had been spoken to in the hall, and was now feeling very happy, only regretting that he had not gone out to the front in response to Dr. Torrey's invitation. The address for the evening was devoted to the "Excuses" (Luke xiv. 18), made to-day as they were in the time of our Lord, and as special intercession was made for one who was trusting in confirmation as all that is necessary, a dangerous rock seemed to be touched. Another evidence of a spirit of inquiry was given in a letter asking the evangelist to explain what he meant by "the price we must be willing to pay for the baptism of the Holy Spirit."

A note of sternness not always evident in the preaching came into Dr. Torrey's voice, as he showed the absurdity of the excuses men make for remaining away from Christ; yet it was at the same time accompanied by a warmth and kindliness which drew men and women out to the Lord. After those who had professed their decision to follow Christ came out to the front, the Way of Life was explained to them. Then, feeling that confession is good for the soul, first one individual, and then the whole company were asked to stand out before the meeting and express in words their readiness to yield themselves to the Saviour.

THE WORK OF THE SPIRIT.

At the gathering on Thursday afternoon, Mr. Alexander announced that he had received a note of thanksgiving from a friend unable to attend the meetings who had been greatly blessed by reading in The Christian a verse of one of the hymns sung at the Mildmay mission.

In the course of a powerful address on "How to obtain the blessing of the Holy Ghost," Dr. Torrey spoke of the seven steps in the process of being filled with the Spirit, found in Acts ii. 38. (1) Repentance—a change of mind in regard to God, Christ, and sin. (2) Giving up sin—dealing with that which comes up in your thoughts when you are nearest God. (3) Open confession of Christ before the world. (4) Obedience, and absolute surrender to God. (5) Thirsting for the Holy Ghost? "I will pour water on him that is thirsty, and rivers upon the dry ground." (6) Asking definitely for the baptism of the Holy Ghost. (7) Believing faith. "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."

HEROES AND COWARDS.

The congregation that assembled for the evening session crowded the building from end to end, and the scene was one that will be long remembered. Mr. Alexander's admonitions to sing were willingly obeyed, and each successive hymn gathered force, preparing all hearts for the reception of the preacher's message. Dr. Torrey's subject was "Heroes and Cowards." Taking as his starting point Prov. xxix. 25, he showed how the fear of man has not only brought a snare, but led to the ruin of many lives. Proceeding to consider John xii. 42, 43, another type of coward was portrayed, and the speaker had much to say concerning those who do not confess Christ, and love the praise of man more than the praise of God. A contrast was found in 2 Cor. xii. 10, and the speaker pressed for the need of seeking that same spirit of heroism and courage which led the Apostle to "take pleasure in distresses, reproaches, and persecutions, for Christ's sake."

In emphasizing his appeal to the unsaved, Dr. Torrey related two stories which made a deep impression on the hearts of his hearers. A poor farmer in North Carolina had a boy of whom he was proud. He said: "My boy is going to have the best in the land." So he worked and toiled, and economized, and got enough to send his boy to the State University. One day, after the boy had been gone several months, the old man determined to go down and see how he was getting on. He fastened down the team, and, after a long, weary journey, reached the university town. He thought how proud and glad his son would be to see him, and as he journeyed through the town, who should he see coming down the sidewalk but his boy, with two smart college companions.

As he drew near, the old man jumped off the waggon, hurried up, and embraced his son. But the boy was ashamed that his companions should know what a poor man his father was; and addressing the old man, he said: "There must be some mistake; I don't know you; you are not my father." That boy had better driven a dagger into his father's heart than said those words. The old man went home and died with a broken heart.

The second story was a striking contrast. A poor widow had a bright boy whom she was determined should have the best possible education. With this in view she worked hard to keep him at school. The boy came through well, and graduated at the top of the class, taking the highest honours and winning the gold medal. On the day for graduating the boy came to her and said: "Mother, I graduate to-day; you have got to come and see me." She was poor, and did not want to go, but he insisted: "Mother, I owe everything in the world to you; I won't graduate unless you do go." At last the mother consented. She had nothing fine to wear; but the boy pinning the faded shawl around her, walked his mother through the town to the church, where the great exercises were to take place, and seated her among the grandest people of the town. His valedictory speech is made, his diploma conferred, and on receiving his gold medal, he walked down to where his poor mother was sitting, and pinned the prize to her shawl, declaring, "That, mother, belongs to you."

In graphic and convincing terms Dr. Torrey showed how every one in the audience was either playing the part of the contemptible, ungrateful son of the farmer, or acting like the dutiful son of the widow, in the matter of acknowledging or disowning Christ. "Which shall it be?" pleaded the speaker; and the sight which followed will not be soon forgotten. Anxious ones pressed to the front to find peace with God. Some seven or eight rows of seats were vacated, and quickly filled with inquirers, who were afterwards dealt with, and pointed to Him who alone could satisfy the longings of sin-stricken souls.

"HOW TO WIN SOULS."

NOTES OF AN ADDRESS TO WORKERS.

"It's the old-time religion, and it's good enough for me," sang Mr. Alexander at the opening of the Friday afternoon meeting, and this old refrain of the Jubilee Singers was the keynote of a gathering at which a large number of Christian workers came together to hear words of counsel on Soul-winning from Dr. Torrey.

Following his usual custom, Dr. Torrey first gave a brief Bible study. Taking for his basis Phil. iv. 4-19, he set forth "seven present and wonderful privileges of the believer": Constant joy (v. 4); Freedom from anxiety (v. 6); Abiding peace (v. 7); The ever-present friendship of God (v. 9); Never-failing content (v. 11); All-prevailing strength (v. 13); Supply for every need (v. 19).

Proceeding to the special topic of the afternoon, Dr. Torrey dwelt at the outset on two chief points: Every minister should be an evangelist in his church. "I started out in pastoral work with a theory of perpetual revival, and the theory has worked. In my church at Chicago, we look for and expect conversions all the time. Mr. Moody founded it on that line, and put his impress on it." Every church member should be an evangelist. All the Lord's people must work for the evangelization of the world.

INDISPENSABLE CONDITIONS.

In all evangelistic work there must be (1) dependence on God absolutely, not on men or measures. It is useless to work up a revival by machinery. A mission with much organisation in the place of the Holy Spirit's working may prove a perfect machine for obtaining professions of decision, but the professors will be only galvanised corpses, and the "revival" a man-made one. (2) There must be preparation. This is, in a sense, more important than the meetings themselves, and the first preparation is prayer. It is the greatest human factor in a revival. The American revival of 1857 was a revival of prayer. There was not much preaching, but at all hours, in streets, trains, stores, the chief topic of conversation was the Lord Jesus Christ and His work. That was the outcome of prayer, and it is for such a revival that we must look to-day. "If you are going to have services, insist that there shall be a thoroughly organized system of home prayer meetings. At Melbourne the revival had begun before we got there. Some people of God had been praying twelve years for the revival, and at this time there were from 1,600 to 2,000 home prayer-meetings being held weekly. The place was full of revival."

VISITATION AND LITERATURE.

Again, there should be house to house visitation. "If you are content simply to announce your mission, the people you want will not hear of it until it is over. Every house should be visited several times by men and women of God, and the invitations left should contain brief, telling words about the work and claims of Christ. All church affairs should be made subservient. Bazaars (though I believe we ought not at any time to turn the house of God into a kind of dime museum), and all else must give way to soul-winning. There should be too, a trained band of workers. One reason why so few converts are found after some missions is because there are so few Christian men and women able intelligently to point them to Christ. In my church at Chicago we have hundreds of workers, and the whole church is divided into sections and sub-sections, under superintendents, so that every newcomer is under the observation of some who are desirous of winning him or her for Christ. Every church should have a training class of this kind; then, though the preaching be poor, sinners will be converted." There must be judicious advertising. God's business is surely as important as man's. Money put into advertising is regarded as a necessity of success in commerce. It is a good investment in evangelistic work also. When we launched a Bible class in Chicago, we had not only a good teacher, but the biggest bills we could get. Chicago was red, white, and black with bigger posters than the theatres, and thousands were attracted to hear. And, there must be a union of Christians.

OUTSIDERS MUST BE REACHED.

(3) Where the meetings should be held.—In order to reach outsiders of all kinds, a public hall or popular building of some kind is preferable to a church or chapel. (4) Christians must be got to work. Until this is done you will probably see little result. You get encouraging letters, and some good is done, but more than this, the masses must be reached.

WHAT AND HOW TO PREACH.

(5) The Character of the Preaching.—First, there must be preaching to Christians that any who are wrong may get right and be led to soul winning. This may be done at the afternoon meetings, when fundamental doctrines should be dealt with. By this means, too, converts won in the evening meetings will be established in the faith. "Preaching to the unsaved must be unsparing regarding sin, driving the sword of God right home into the heart. And it is of the first importance to preach Christ, our Substitute. If the precious blood of Christ is not preached, you will have no revival. We must not compromise on the great truths of Christianity." Again, there should be preaching to men. We mostly preach to women and children, and so the converts we get are women and children. I do not underrate the value of these, but let it be remembered that men, too, have souls. Midday meetings for business men have good effects. In Sydney many of the leading men gave up their noon meal to attend. There were agnostics, Unitarians, indeed all kinds who were without faith in Christ, and many were converted. Sunday afternoon meetings for men are also important, and we ought to go to stores, factories, indeed wherever men congregate. Then, let there be preaching to children. If you win a man of seventy you win a soul, but if you convert a child of ten there is the soul plus years of service. Moreover, if the children go home and tell what they have found, and live it out, they win their parents.

DECISION AND CONFESSION.

6. After-meetings.—"I do not approve of the card systems, which mean little or nothing; 'I would like to be a Christian,' or 'I hope to go to heaven'—such things are of no practical value. Very many converts may be so won, but when the mission is done there will be nobody really saved. What means, then, should be adopted? (a) The inquiry room with trained workers. Do not press too much in the first meeting. Let the truth soak in. Be definite and thorough. (b) Further on, I would lead inquirers to open testimony (Rom. x. 10). Some may not testify, but those who do will probably be 'stickers.' Then, they should be followed up and shepherded. See to it that they are clear as to their grounds of acceptance in Christ, and instruct them how to read the Bible; how to pray; to confess the Lord, and to set to work for Him."

PRAYER FOR REVIVAL.

Not a few of God's people have of recent years gathered together to pray for revival, and since the reception of the news from Melbourne of the blessing which attended the many home prayer-meetings held as a preparation for Dr. Torrey's mission, there has been an increased desire in the homeland so to meet and pray.

On the Friday evening in Room No. 4 at Mildmay, Dr. Torrey met some hundreds of Christian people who regularly meet to pray for souls. After some words of welcome from Mr. Albert Head, Dr. Torrey spoke earnestly on the subject of prayer. "The tendency has too often been, in evangelistic missions, to exalt men. Thank God, in coming to the place of prayer, we come where He is glorified. There are many difficulties in the way of a revival. I quite realise this, and many people have told me of them since my arrival. But let us look away from the Anakim to God, remembering that what are giants to us are but grasshoppers in God's sight."

Dr. Torrey spoke of the value of enthusiasm. "It is easy to be enthusiastic in times of enthusiasm, but the need is for men and women who will pray on, whether there is enthusiasm or not. God is laying His hand upon His people. We have found bands of people gathering together to pray for revival in various countries, quite independently of one another. I believe we are going to see a world-wide revival; but it will come not through men, but by prayer. Every one of you will add to or detract from the victory by your devotion to, or neglect of, prayer."

THE FINAL MEETING.

At the final meeting of the mission, on Friday night, the Conference Hall was densely crowded even the stairs to the rostrum being fully occupied. Many well-known leaders in Christian work were present, including Gipsy Smith, who led in prayer that the mission should "help to make London a city of God."

Dr. Torrey's address was on "The Three Fires." First, we turn to Matt. iii. 11, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." What does this "baptism of fire" mean? We get the answer by asking, "What is the fire said to do according to the Bible?" It reveals (1 Cor. iii. 13) what we are as God sees us; refines or purifies (Malachi iii. 1-3); consumes evil (Ezekiel xxiv. 11-13); illuminates, imparts energy, and spreads rapidly.

Then there is the fire of judgment. There is a great deal in the churches and in the individual Christian that will never stand the fire test. Work done, not for God's glory, but that the doer may be applauded; work done with a good purpose, but in our own strength and not in demonstration of the Spirit and power, will not stand the test of the fire of judgment. The third fire is that of eternal doom (1 Thess. i. 7-9). "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed . . . in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

In response to Dr. Torrey's concluding invitation, many Christians rose to signify their realization of personal need and their intention to make an entire consecration. Added to these were a number who accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

Very few of the audience left when the opportunity was given, and Mr. Alexander sang very effectively, "Would you believe and Jesus receive, if He were standing here?" Dr. Torrey now reiterated his invitation, with pointed words of exhortation and counsel, and both in the waiting-room and in the front seats, which were cleared for their reception, there were many seekers pointed to Christ. Finally, a note of fervent praise concluded a mission which will live long in the memories of those privileged to attend it, and who will await with keen interest the return of the evangelists to the metropolis.

Opening of the Scottish Campaign.

[BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.]

Proceeding northward without delay after the close of the Mildmay Mission, Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander reached Edinburgh on Saturday evening, ready for the opening the next morning of the Scottish campaign, in which they expect to be engaged for the next two months at least. Stormy weather had prevailed in Scotland for a fortnight before they arrived, and morning broke on the Sabbath with snow falling heavily on a westerly wind.

The weather conditions were most unfavourable for walking, but nine o'clock saw a large company of Christian workers gathered in Carrubbers Close mission hall. Men and women came from all parts of the city to extend a cordial greeting and reception to the Lord's servants. As was to be expected, elderly people were not able to attend in great numbers; but observers of long experience found, in the purposeful spirit manifest throughout the audience, an augury full of promise for the coming weeks. The singing of hymns, old and new, was taken up with vim and enthusiasm, and the prayer in which the chairman (Professor A. R. SIMPSON) led was one in which the burdens of the trustful believer were spread out before the Lord in a truly child-like spirit.

THE ADVANTAGES OF PERSONAL WORK.

Addressing himself to those who were to be his fellow-labourers in the Gospel, Dr. TORREY explained that those who were already Christian workers were in his experience always glad to be stirred up a little on the subject of "The Advantages of Personal Work." The evangelists were dependent upon the personal effort of the ocal friends a great deal more than upon their own preaching and singing. "We preach," he said, to get you to work; and when you get to work there will be a revival, whether we come or go, or whatever we do. We preach and sing the best we know, but the result mostly lies with you."

1. Anybody, that is, any Child of God, can do Personal Work. We cannot all preach, or sing, or teach Sunday-school classes; but we can all do hand-to-hand work. The mother in the home can do it with the children, and the butcher, and the grocery man, and the servants. The invalid can do it. The servant-maid can do it.

2. You can do it Anywhere.—You cannot preach anywhere, but you can do this in every shop, store, factory, street, public-house, hotel, tramcar, fire-house, police station. You can do it at every street corner.

3. You can do it at Any Time.—A man can only preach two or three times even on a Sabbath, but there is no hour at which you cannot do personal work; and he did not think there was any time between one midnight and the next at which he himself had not been speaking to people about the Lord Jesus Christ.

4. It Reaches all Classes.—There are many whom we cannot reach by public preaching or special missions. They told him he was preaching to all Melbourne; but even if there were 8,000 people gathered together—and he very much doubted the figures—what nonsense that was, when one remembered that there were 500,000 people in the city. There are people who would not come if they could, and others who could not if they would. Many are sick, and more have not the slightest interest in these things; but there is no public-house keeper or bar-tender in Edinburgh with whom we cannot do personal work.

5. It Hits the Mark. You aim at the one individual. Too often we aim at nothing, and hit it. When you have a man face to face he knows you mean him, and does not apply it to anyone else.

6. It is Effective, and meets the Specific Need of the Individual.—Preaching has to be more or less general. When the talk is face to face, difficulties open up, and one by one you meet them from the Word of God, which has something in it for every case on earth.

THE PRINCIPLE ILLUSTRATED.

7. It Produces Abundant Results.—Take a moderate congregation, a pastor with 100 members. Suppose that man was very faithful, and that on an average there were fifty added to the church each year by conversion; that would be a good record. But suppose that man should train his hundred members to do personal work—which is what we ought all to do; and that only fifty would consent to be so trained. If these fifty did average work, it would be a small record to reach one person each a month; but that would be six hundred added to the congregation through conversion, instead of fifty.

You can do it (1) in your own home; (2) in the place of business; (3) in other people's homes; (4) on a journey; (5) in prison—in fact everywhere. If you want authority for doing it in the inquiry-meeting, after the public meeting, take the case of Aquila and Priscilla.

What we want is to see those who know God going into the streets, going everywhere, beseeching men to be reconciled to God. In Melbourne during the mission it was difficult to go where there was not such work being done. In every railway station people were being talked to about salvation.

PLAN TO BE FOLLOWED.

Explaining the methods which they had been led to adopt, Dr. Torrey went on to say that at the outset they did not push very much for decision in the public meeting. He was not criticizing those who did; but he liked to give a man a chance to know what he was doing, and to see the truth work down. Things have gone rather quietly at first in the missions. Recognising that there are many people already anxious about their souls, through the working of the churches, opportunities would be given from the very first to go into the inquiry-room. But it is the personal work that is expected to begin at once, and when it is deep and thorough people may be expected to confess openly.

Helpers must be thorough with each case in the inquiry-room; and if they were going to run from one to another they must not be surprised if they were asked to give up their workers' cards. It is often not so much a matter of those who have professed, but of those who will be shepherded.

THOROUGHNESS THRICE REPEATED.

The great motto all through would be thoroughness, thoroughness, THOROUGHNESS. A man may not have great experience, but the way to get that is to go to work. He asked workers not to be offended if leaders came round to see how they were getting on with individuals, and made suggestions: "What we are after is saving souls. We expect you to co-operate in everything. CAN WE COUNT ON YOU?"

SABBATH EVENING.

The deep spirit of expectation which had been aroused throughout the city became more evident later in the day. The meetings for special prayer since the engagement was made have been unusually large, the ministers of the city not only attending in large numbers, but pressing the subject on the attention of the people. The snow melted rapidly as the day advanced, and a clear, sharp afternoon favoured pedestrians. Among other attractions was the fact that the Fisk Jubilee Singers had promised to be present in the evening. Dr. Torrey was announced to preach in St. Cuthbert's Church at 6.30, and to share with Mr. Alexander a seven o'clock meeting in the Synod Hall. An audience of at least 3,000 crowded the great church, some 2,500 were accommodated in the Hall; thousands more sought admission.

Dr. Torrey seemed to be much at home in St. Cuthbert's, where he preached a searching sermon on "Ye have not because ye ask not" (James iv. 2). In the Hall the scene made the hearts of zealous workers sing for joy. During the hour before the regular service hearts and minds were prepared for the truth by the singing of the hymns; and Mr. Alexander won his way into the popular affections by his insistence that every one must take a share in the praise. The text was, "God is love" (1 John iv. 8).

PUBLIC WELCOME TO THE EVANGELISTS.

Monday afternoon was devoted to a public welcome to the evangelists, and the large company of ministers and other citizens testified to the fine spirit in which the invitation had been given. Professor SIMPSON recalled the goodness of the Lord in connection with past revivals, mentioning that in such a time of blessing the Carrubbers Close Mission was founded in the city.

As moderator of the Church of Scotland, Rev. Dr. JAMES C. RUSSELL assured the visitors of the cordial support of the Christian community, declaring that the platform on which they stood—the truth as it is in Jesus—was one which united all denominations, and that they would be regarded as having come to second the work of the stated ministers.

The United Free Church of Scotland was represented by Principal RAINY, who believed he spoke for all when he said there was room for a work of real revival. It was not easy to speak wisely of the religious condition of the community or of Christian churches at any particular time. We may speak hastily and pretend to have a knowledge that we do not possess; but all seemed to be conscious that the forces that make for unbelief and worldliness are very strong. They are operating continually, and believers would like to be sure that there is on the other side acting, or preparing itself for action, and ready to break forth, the strength which is perfected in weakness, and which is able to overcome all such adversaries and enemies. Principal HODGSON spoke for the Congregational churches.

An enthusiastic tone characterised the words of Dr. JOHN SMITH, who recalled personal experience of work with Dr. Torrey in Chicago. He declared that the work was coming in a good hour. The one feeling in all hearts was a profound sense of need. Despite all the religious activities, there has been a slackening of zeal, a growing secularity of tone, an impatience of religious restraint, and a boldness in casting off even the outward semblance of deference to religious institutions. Ex-Bailie W. S. BROWN represented the civic authorities.

With ringing voice Dr. Torrey thanked God for the spirit of expectation to which all had borne witness. As a reader of history, as a student of the signs of the times, as a close observer of indications all around, he declared his firm belief that God was about to bless Edinburgh and Great Britain, and that the effect would be felt to the uttermost parts of the earth. The ground of his faith was the knowledge that God answers prayer.

Mr. Alexander cordially greeted the friends assembled, and related some of his personal experience of the wondrous doings of the Lord during recent months.

Fern-Gathering.

(Hymn 416. Sacred Songs and Solos.)

ONCE I came across some rare and beautiful ferns which I thought I should like to transfer to my garden. So providing myself with a trowel, a basket, and thick gloves, I commenced the work of uprooting them.

But I found this more difficult than I had anticipated, for most of them were overgrown and interlaced with thick sprays of ivy, and an abundant collection of nettles. However, I went down on my knees and dug, and pulled, and perspired (for it was a very hot day), and felt very proud of myself when my basket was full and I had accomplished my purpose.

There are in our characters, if we are Christian children, many good qualities that are pleasing to our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, which He desires should flourish and increase for His glory. But He knows, and we know, too, that there are other things of a very different kind, which hinder and hamper our best motives and intentions.

(1) There are the Nettles. If you read the story of Nabal, in 1 Sam. xxv., you find that he was a nettle-man! He is called "churlish," and "such a man of Belial that a man cannot speak to him," without getting stung with his Bad Temper and cross, angry words. You do not like it when you get stung by a nettle; it is a painful, irritating feeling, and you very quickly look for a dock-leaf or some other means to cure it. Have you ever thought that your ill-temper, rudeness, or unkindness, produce the same sort of result on other people? There are some boys and girls to whom their parents, or nurse, or companions are almost afraid to speak for fear of getting stung!

Now, it is said that the way to take a nettle so that it may not sting, is to grasp it very firmly. I have never tried the experiment, as I have always preferred to use a big stick instead; but it is very certain that if you have a bad temper, you need to deal very firmly with it if you wish to overcome it.

Perhaps you may say, "I am not bad-tempered; I am only quick-tempered;" and you make that an excuse for an occasional outburst. But God says: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city" (Prov. xvi. 32). "Be slow to speak, slow to wrath" (Jas. i. 19). Do not grow up "nettle" boys and girls; never go to bed "out of friends" with anybody. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath . . . let all wrath, anger, and clamour be put away" (Eph. iv. 26, 31). Ask the forgiveness of those you have treated badly; or even if you think it was not your fault, remember Him who, "when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not" (1 Pet. ii 23).

(2) But there are other things besides these that prevent our growth in godliness, which are like the Ivy. Now ivy doesn't hurt or sting; it is quite harmless, and even pretty; but it nearly strangled my beautiful ferns. It had entwined its roots and branches so tightly around them, that it gave me actually more trouble than the nettles themselves.

So, too, there are qualities, harmless and good in themselves, which if allowed too free a growth will injure and hamper those that are still better. Take, for instance, Good-Nature. That is very much better than bad or quick temper. It gives people pleasure rather than pain. But even this may grow into a hindrance, and not a help, to our Christian character. In this way. A boy or girl may be so good-natured as to be afraid to say No, when asked to do something wrong; so "easy-going" as to drift into courses which lead to all manner of sin. I have known many who are so easily led by others, that all that is noblest and truest in their characters becomes dwarfed and cramped; and after a while they cause their parents even more anxiety than by outbursts of temper. Good nature is like fire—very useful and good if it is kept in the grate, but not when it gets beyond control and burns a house. In other words, it is a good servant, but a very bad master.

Be careful what companions you choose. "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not" (Prov. i. 10). Do not be led astray by those who tempt you to say or do wrong things, but ask God that you "be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good" (Rom. xii. 21).

(3) From the ferns themselves let us learn that God wants us to make the best possible of our life; not only to "cease to do evil," but to "learn to do well" (Isa. i. 16). We may think of heaven as a beautiful garden, into which He desires to transplant us from our earthly surroundings, so that we may bloom and grow in His presence for ever. But before we reach heaven, we have to do with earth. It is a solemn thing to die, but (have you ever thought of it?) it is a still more solemn thing to live.

Are you willing to live for Him who "died for you and rose again?" to put away whatever will grieve Him—evil habits and sin in every form—that you may "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ"? God help you to develop and strengthen everything in your character that will delight and please Him, and pray in the words of the hymn I have given you at the head of this talk—

Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee.

CHRIST, THE GREAT TEACHER (John iii. 1-10; vii. 45-53.)

"A TEACHER come from God." Yes, there was no doubt about that! Some teachers come evidently enough from man: they speak only of earthly things; their speeches are full of quotations; they imitate, in voice, manner, and method of stating truth, some commanding human teacher, at whose feet they have sat. But there was a freshness, a convincing force, a self-witnessing truthfulness, a depth, an authority in the words of the Master, which bore the mint-mark of Deity. No man could have spoken such words, or done such deeds, unless God had been with him. Nicodemus himself was a teacher. Our Lord addressed him as the teacher of Israel (10, R.V.). He knew what teaching meant. To him it was self-evident that Jesus had come from God.

He taught with authority (Matt. vii. 29). This was the verdict of the people. He needed not to quote Gamaliel or Hillel, because the conscience of his hearers said, He speaks the truth.

He taught with tenderness and sweetness (Luke iv. 22). To those who resisted His words, as the Pharisees did, His tongue was a sharp two-edged sword; but for the sinful, weary, and heavy laden, grace was poured on His lips.

He taught with plenty of illustrations (Mark iv. 34). From all quarters He gathered them, from the sky and the earth, from the vulture and the sparrow, from the lightning-flash and the sunrise, from the household candle and the temple-lamp, from the woman's dough and the ripened corn, from the children's games and the housewife's jewellery, from the feasts of the rich and the bare larder of the poor. How picturesque and beautiful His talk was! The apples of gold were in pictures of silver! His speech was full of windows, through which the light poured. What wonder that the people thronged around Him, and hung with absorbing interest on His words. Even for Nicodemus He drew an illustration from the wind, which was wafting in through the window (8).

He taught as men were able to bear it (John xvi. 12). There is a marked gradation in the teachings of Jesus. He began by teaching about earthly things, and led on His disciples to understand heavenly ones (12). He gave milk to babes, but to men of understanding hard and deep things, as strong meat. How differently, for instance, He spoke to the woman at Sychar's well, and to the gathering of the disciples in the upper room!

He taught with intensity. So much so that we are told that He stood and cried (John vii. 37). Perhaps He climbed up to stand on a pediment of the Temple, from which He could look down on the sea of upturned faces beneath, and expostulate with the people, that they would not come to Him to drink, that they would not let Him pour the rivers of living water through them, as Thirlmere pours its waters through the connecting mains to the City of Manchester.

In the crowd stood the officers who bore the commission of the Sanhedrim to arrest Him, and who found themselves absolutely powerless to touch Him. They came back to their employers, with the confession, "Never man so spake" (vii. 46).

He taught as God taught Him. Repeatedly He said: "These words are not Mine, but my Father's" (John xii. 49). It was as though His uncovered ear were morning by morning open to the least whisper of the Father's voice, and having heard in the secret place, He spoke as from the housetop (Isa. l. 4, 5).

The blessed Lord taught the Apostles after His resurrection (Acts. i. 2), and ever since He has been teaching those who have the anointed ear (Eph. iv. 21; Titus ii. 12).

But before we can listen to the Great Teacher, we must have been born again. In the first instance, we must not approach Him as Teacher, but as Saviour (John iii. 16). Before we can understand Him, we must be converted, and become as little children. As He said to Nicodemus, He says to us, "Ye must be born again." To accost Him as "Teacher" will not avail, until the soul has cast itself in the dust before Him, crying, "Have mercy on me"; "I am a sinful man, O Lord." F. B. M.

CHRISTIAN SELF-CONTROL (1 Cor. viii. 4-13). GOLDEN TEXT: Rom. xiv. 19.

AS Paul entered Corinth, the pleasure-loving people of that wealthy city would take scant notice of the lonely traveller; much less would they think the stranger in their market-place, looking for work, was the standard-bearer of a new and conquering force. But was his aim and purpose. "Faint yet pursuing," still, 1 Cor. ii. 2, 3. Single-file they entered, three soldiers of the Cross, but they quickly met (Acts. xviii. 1, 11). Busy work, hallowed converse, united prayer, added force, testimony in the synagogue, the Gospel preached in the house of Justus "with demonstration of the Spirit," and thus a strong and gifted church grew up, even in Corinth. The secret was revealed in Acts xviii. 9, 10. "The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation," even in the Sunday-schools of to-day (Mark ix. 23).

PAUL AT EPHESUS.

Three and a half years later he received and answered a letter from Corinth, asking advice on certain perplexing questions (1 Cor. vii. 1, viii. 1). Also tidings by Chloe (1 Cor. i. 11, v. 1) of dissensions and flagrant sins. (One letter and two visits recorded already. 1 Cor. v. 9; 2 Cor. xiii. 1).

QUESTION.

May a believer in Chist eat meat which had been offered to an idol? Corinth was a pagan city, the sacrifice of meat to idols went on continually, and more in quantity than the priests could consume. The overplus was sold on the shambles (1 Cor. x. 25), or returned to the offerers, who in their turn made public feasts in the temples therewith. It was difficult for Christian citizens of Corinth to avoid buying meat or attending the social, not necessarily idolatrous, feasts in the public places. The Jews were taught from childhood "to shun this meat like poison"; converts from Judaism would still loathe it from habit, though they had learned that "an idol is nothing."

ANSWERS.

1. "There is one God, the Father." Deut. vi. 4 was repeated in the public worship of the synagogue, written on the phylacteries, carried on the forehead and left arm, placed up on the door-post of the dwelling of every Jew. Paul went further,

2. "And one Lord Jesus Christ." The universe will acknowledge Him in the day when "at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow" (Phil. ii. 10, 11).

3. An idol is a god in name, and in the imagination of man, only, not in reality, or in the universe of the Deity; therefore meat offered to a "nothing at all" did not become sacrificial food.

4. This knowledge would give the Christians liberty to eat the meat without sin, but the example of some among them might lead others into temptation and sin.

EXAMPLE (vv. 9, 10).—Will my example lead further than I expect? Now the stumbling block was great.

It is not positively wicked, and I like it (Col. iii. 1, 2; 1 John ii. 15). 4. If I think it right, my choice is nobody's business (Rom. xiv. 16). 5. It is not my fault if another stumbles (Luke xvii. 1, 2). 6. I am strong, so there is no danger for me (Rom. xv. 1 only; Phil. iv. 13). 7. The Lord will keep me from going too far (Matt. iv. 7).

"In School and Playground"—Five-minute Talks with Young People. By G. E. Morgan, M.A. Writing of this work, Rev. Thos. Cook, the widely-known Wesleyan missioner, says:—"The addresses are models of suggestiveness and force. The illustrations are fresh and practical, just the sort to interest and impress. The book cannot fail to be of assistance to those who want material on which to build children's addresses." (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

HEROIC SELF-SACRIFICE.

Mr. John B. Gough once wrote that "the noblest work in which a human being could be engaged was for others; for all true heroism is the sacrifice of self for the good of others. It has," Mr. Gough added, "nothing to do with mere abilities. We do not speak of heroic talent, heroic genius, heroic intellectuality; but heroic daring, heroic sacrifice, heroic endurance. How many real heroes pass by unnoticed; modest, quiet, unattractive and unassuming." If we have a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, let us remember "there is not in every man that knowledge" (v. 7), and as true heroes may we have the grace to be self-sacrificing and be ready to be used of God in leading others to the Saviour.

AN INFLUENCE FOR GOOD.

It is said that when the German Crown Prince went to Bonn University, he invoked the displeasure of his colleagues, because he would not participate in their drinking habits. The Crown Prince saw his father, the Kaiser, on the subject, and, as a result, the Emperor made it known that in his opinion the students were seriously injuring their health by excessive beer drinking; and he denounced the practice in unmistakable terms. In his temperance the prince was using his influence aright, and he displayed a spirit akin to that of the Apostle, who declared if meat should make his brother to offend, he would eat no flesh. To sin against a brother, added Paul, and to wound a weak conscience, is to sin against Christ (vv. 11 and 12).

USING GOOD MATERIALS.

For some time past Christ's Hospital has been in the hands of housebreakers, and day by day the bricks and masonry from the demolished building are carted away in all directions. In some quarters of London the sound bricks are being used for the construction of houses, now in course of erection, and builders declare that, so good is the quality of the old material from Christ's Hospital, that the bricks are a real source of strength to the walls into which they are built. Present-day materials are not by any means so substantial, and the houses in which the old stuff is utilized gain by the addition. The Golden Text urges us to follow things wherewith one may edify or build up another; and it behoves those who have the truth within them, and are built upon the Rock Christ Jesus, to use their influence to edify and strengthen the weaker brethren around them.

WHAT LOVE WILL DO.

A notable instance of self-sacrifice has been reported from Australia. Recently a little girl was badly burnt through her clothes catching alight. The doctor declared that only by the grafting of new skin on the burnt part could the life of the little one be spared. The girl's brother, a boy of twelve, at once offered and underwent an operation for the removal of the necessary skin, and, so extensive was the burn, that a second operation was necessary to obtain sufficient of the cuticle. Though the plucky boy was confined to bed for a whole month, his noble self-sacrifice saved the life of his poor little sister. As the Australian lad has exhibited a rare love, so, in the spiritual world, we should be willing to place our strength, our faith, ourselves, at the disposal of those who are weaker, that, through our self-sacrifice, they may be saved and built up in their Christian life.

Missionary Rest Homes in India.—On arriving in India last month, after a visit to Australia, Miss Orlebar wrote, gratefully thanking our readers for help towards the maintenance of Missionary Rest Homes, in which she has been used to do so much gracious service. Railway traffic to Coonoor being interrupted for some weeks, the way opened up for the opening of a large house in Madras, in which a much appreciated "family" gathering of missionaries took place during the Christmas season, and which it was also hoped would form a central place of meeting for young converts for a time.

Protestant Martyrs of Bury St. Edmund's.—No fewer than nineteen martyrs suffered for the faith in the sixteenth century at Bury St. Edmund's; and a Committee has in hand the erection of a memorial to their fidelity. The cost will be about £150, towards which between £70 and £80 has been given or promised. Owing, however, to various local circumstances, one of which is, no doubt, the strong ritualistic tendency in the neighbourhood, some difficulty is found in raising the whole amount. Doubtless Christians in other parts of the country, who have read in Foxe's "Martyrs" of Roger Bernard, Adam Foster, Robert Lawson, Philip Humfrey, and John and Henry David, and other worthies, will welcome an opportunity of helping the undertaking. The secretary of the Committee is Mr. A. Hallam, Oakdene, Queen's Road, Bury, Suffolk.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Rev. John Jameson at The Shildons.

ENCOURAGED by the success of the United Mission last year the Nonconformist churches have again joined their forces for another effort to reach the working men. God has signally owned the effort. An earnest of the blessing in store was given at the young people's service on the first Sunday. Not much visible result was witnessed the first six days; but we held on in prayer, faith, and work, and on the second Sunday and two last days there were showers of blessing, the effects of which will be reaped by all the churches. Mr. Jameson during the ten days addressed twenty-three meetings, three being delivered at the large dining-room of the N.E. Railway Works. Bible readings, men's and women's meetings, and an extra gathering for the children were among the number. Those who answered the roll-call were forty-three adults and over 120 young people under sixteen years of age. J. Richardson.

Mr. W. H. Jude at Luton.

A ten days' mission has been held at Wellington Street Baptist Chapel, Luton, by Mr. W. H. Jude, the preacher-musician. Large congregations gathered each evening, attracted by the personality of the missioner, and by the clear, sweet Gospel message that rang out in speech and song. Mr. Jude is greatly used by God in awakening religious interest among a class of people rarely, if ever, reached by ordinary evangelistic services. Some little time was spent each evening in rehearsing hymns and choruses, and when the rehearsal was over the congregation was fully prepared to take part in the services of praise. It was a delight to see the joyful enthusiasm with which the people sang "The crowning day is coming" and "Onward Christian Soldiers." The addresses were characterized by a beautiful simplicity, and by many touching personal references to all that the grace of God had wrought for the speaker. Many were deeply affected. In every way this unique mission of Mr. Jude's has proved a blessing to the church and the town. H.

Barnsbury Chapel, N.

God's blessing is resting in a marked degree on the services at Barnsbury Chapel, N., by Mr. L. Weaver. This is evidenced by the decisions for Christ at each service, some of which are remarkable instances of answers to prayer. It is very encouraging to notice the earnestness manifested by old and young alike at all of the services, and it will soon be necessary to make arrangements for an overflow service, judging from the growing attendance especially on Sunday evenings. All those who have for years deplored the dearth of interest in the services at Barnsbury (even almost to the closing of the doors) now most heartily rejoice in the great work God has opened up afresh, and call upon the Lord's people everywhere to share their joy and gratitude at the transformation He has wrought. Associated with Mr. L. Weaver during the last few days have been Mr. Henry Varley, Mr. Ned Wright, and Mr. Bennett Anderson.

J. O. Horne.

Rev. J. McNeill at Huddersfield.

There has just been concluded at Huddersfield a remarkable mission conducted by Rev. John McNeill, under the auspices of the Free Church Council. The majority of the meetings were held in Brunswick Street, U.M.F. Church, one of the largest in the town; but on two of the three Sundays the Town Hall was engaged. This hall was not available for all the meetings, or else the Council might have been justified in securing it for the fortnight; but on each Sunday it was crowded with hundreds of people, who listened to the "old, old story" as told by the well-known preacher. Afternoon services were held during the second week, and these, together with the evening service, enabled the missioner to reach about 2,000 people with the Gospel daily. All the Free Church ministers of the town were regular in attendance at the meetings, and the interest grew and deepened as the time went on. Mr. McNeill held very few after-meetings, but those he did hold were full of Divine power and gracious influence. Very many persons voluntarily testified to having been helped, and many more intimated that they had been brought to decision for Christ. The whole town has been stirred and blessed. J. F. P.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Devonport.

Mr. W. R. Lane has just concluded a mission in Devonport under the auspices of the Free Church Council. The meetings were held in the Public Hall—the largest in the town—and as they progressed it was taxed to its utmost capacity. It was estimated that on the last night of the mission there were not fewer than 1,600 people present. Mr. Lane came straight from the train, after a long railway journey, into a prayer meeting of workers and others, and gave one of the most practical and searching addresses to workers it has been the privilege of any of us to listen to. Indeed, his addresses all through were of that kind—searching, conscience-stirring, compelling one to examine oneself. Strong and manly in appearance, without affectation or "side," he is equally so in his dealing with men and women. His religion is as robust as himself, and his utterances ring true, and his appeals go home. His addresses caught the men rather than the women, and they became more and more conspicuous in his audiences, and constituted eighty per cent. of the enquirers. On Sunday afternoon he spoke to 800 men in a plain but very tactful and guarded way on the purity question. It was a much needed and much appreciated message, that is already bearing fruit. The readiness of the men to be helped and guided, and their desire to stand for cleanness of speech and life, was shown by the repeated applause with which they greeted the appeals to the best in them. There were many conversions, but the work was rather the basis for a continuing effort than a finished task. The Bible-readings were most helpful. C.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Wandsworth, S.W.

A sixteen days' mission conducted by Mrs. Baeyertz has just been concluded at the Earlsfield Congregational Church with very blessed results. The neighbourhood is exceedingly cold and apathetic, and consequently one of the most difficult of London districts to move; but without noise or outward show a grand work has been done, and such an awakening as has not before been experienced in this suburb.

The chief characteristic was not the singing, for there was very little of it, nor the crowds; but the unmistakable unseen Presence, and at times the consciousness of the Divine Person, as the solemn hush fell upon the meetings, was so real that we knew that He was making His power felt in a never-to-be-forgotten way, revealing to many their formalism, their worldliness, their neglect of secret prayer and study of His Word. Such deep heart-searching led to tears of genuine repentance for the past lukewarm life, and to definite entrance into the life lived with Jesus as Lord and King.

Several times we conversed with people who had come half across London to be present at these Bible-readings. Whole families have been converted, and despite the weather, which was very uncongenial, the meetings were well attended; on the Sunday evening, although a dense fog prevailed, the church was filled, and nearly forty inquirers were helped in the after-meeting. God's wonderful working has been as manifest amongst believers as unbelievers, and many are profoundly thankful that Mrs. Baeyertz "contends earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered to the saints," and for the messages of God through His servant upon the subjects of prayer, holiness, the Atonement, and the Deity of Christ, &c.

A. E. Rowlinson, Pastor.

Mr. Henry Varley was at Stratford Conference Hall last Lord's Day. The power of God was present in many hearts, and a goodly number confessed Christ and their reception of the Word of Life.

Mr. George Clarke has concluded a very fruitful mission at Larbert and Stenhousemuir, Stirling. The attendances were very large, and the results of so remarkable a character as to encourage those who are praying for Dr. Torrey's work in Scotland, as an earnest of coming revival.

Mr. A. W. Smart, of the Evangelization Society, has just concluded a very encouraging twenty-one days' mission at the Wonersh Congregational Church and Blackheath Mission-room (both under the Guildford Church). The missioner's careful and powerful declaration of the Gospel Message has, under the power of the Holy Spirit, been blessed to many souls, among them several young men. Church members have been quickened, and the work of grace deepened in the hearts of all.

Rev. F. C. Spurr, the missioner of the Baptist Union, has conducted a nine days' mission to the Whitley Bay (Northumberland) Baptist Church. Each evening he has delivered powerful discourses to crowded congregations. On Sunday evening, the concluding night of the mission, a large number of persons were unable to gain admission. Mr. Spurr has made a marked impression in Whitley Bay, and regrets were freely expressed that his visit could not be extended over another week. Geo. S. Rowell.

The Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,

Is now writing a Series of Deeply Interesting and Suggestive Articles on Religion in the Family. These articles treat of the bearing of Christianity upon all the Domestic Relationships of Life, and are really more helpful than anything yet written upon this important subject. The articles are appearing monthly in

"THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE."

Get the current number (February) and read what Mr. Meyer says about Sunday Observance. In some matters connected therewith he strikes out an entirely new line.

Welsh Notes.

Of the 403 houses in Swansea licensed for the sale of drink, 176 are owned by four breweries. These facts are sufficient to account for the prevalence of intemperance and its attendant evils in the town. The condition of things is so grave that, in response to the appeal of some of the leading citizens, the Mayor has called a public conference to discuss the question of promoting some means and measures of reform.

The work of the Free Church Girls' Guild at Cardiff continues to prosper. Although founded only a year ago it has a membership of over 360. In the eastern valleys of Monmouthshire seven branches have been formed within a short period.

A drastic resolution was submitted to the Arfon Calvinistic Methodist monthly meeting at its last assembly. It is to the effect that every church member shall be a total abstainer. A committee was appointed to deal with the matter, and report to the next Presbytery.

An important conference has been held at Carnarvon to draw attention to the serious moral condition of the town and neighbourhood, and to devise means of reform. Some plain truths were uttered, and in some cases the speakers laid the blame at the door of the churches. As a result of the discussion, a strong and influential committee was appointed to consider how best to bring about the amelioration so much needed and desired.

The village of Ystradmynach, in Glamorganshire, has been the scene, during the last twelve months, of a striking temperance revival. As a result of an address by Rev. J. R. Hughes, of Abercynon, every member in one of the local churches became a pledged total abstainer. The movement has since then spread through the village, until to-day there are four times more abstainers than there are church members. Meetings are held weekly, and are well attended, while the public-houses are reported to be empty.

Rev. J. Pugh, D.D., of Cardiff, superintendent of the Welsh Forward Movement, has received an offer from a Christian lady in North Wales to contribute a substantial sum towards establishing a mission centre in Morriston. Through the generosity of the same donor a centre was opened a few years ago at Penydarren, Merthyr. Morriston presents favourable opportunities for evangelistic work, and its suitability at the present time is all the more marked by reason of the fact that it is possible to purchase for one-fourth of its cost the theatre which was erected less than seven years ago.

The absence of the clergy from the deputations appearing before the magistrates in favour of licensing reform is a matter of real regret to all broad-minded temperance workers. At the recent meetings of the East Denbigh Temperance Association a resolution was passed appealing to the Bishop of St. Asaph to co-operate with the Association on behalf of temperance, and also asking the clergy to accompany the deputations appointed to appear at the next Licensing Sessions.

At the annual meetings of the Pembrokeshire Congregational Union at Fishguard, the chief feature of the programme was an open conference, at which the subject of "The Influence of Meditation upon the Religious Life" was considered. Several ministers took part, and the discussion was felt to be of real value. In this connection it may be noted, with satisfaction, that the various religious bodies in the Principality are awakening to the danger of subordinating the spiritual to the secular in the programme of their conferences and assemblies, and are giving increased prominence to the discussion of directly religious topics.

Lydd Soldiers' Home.—Mr. F. E. Wootton, who has for some years carried on the Lydd Soldiers' Home, is leaving the district in the spring. He will be glad to hear from any friend willing to take charge of a work which is much appreciated by the troops, and has been the means of bringing so many of our soldiers under Christian influences. Mr. Wootton's address is North View, Lydd, Kent.

Some Helpful Thoughts.—"To check repining at those above me, I always looked at those below me. . . . I have ever thought the right way to dye well was to live well. And the way to live well in the world was to dye betimes to the world. . . . It is Christ's saying, If he sleepe he shall doe well. . . . The bodye itselfe if you set too high a price upon it will make a cheape soule. A man may be as happie in Russet as in Tissue, and he is an unhappie man whose outside is his best side. . . . I desire to have my part here in the first resurrection, which is from sin to grace, that so I may enjoy the second resurrection which is from dust to glory." From Manchester Al Mondo, a Contemplation of Death and Immortality, by Sir Henry Montague, First Earl of Manchester, Lord Treasurer of England, 1638.

Oxford Notes.

The Oxford Temperance Society has lost its veteran pioneer and worker, Mr. Joseph Howard, at the age of seventy-nine. For nearly thirty years by voice and instrument he had served the temperance cause in Oxford.

Seldom has Oxford to mourn the loss of so veteran a member as the aged warden of New College, Dr. Sewell. Born on Christmas Day, 1810, for forty-two years he has held the wardenship of New College.

The University of Oxford this week honoured itself in honouring Dr. A. M. Fairbairn with the honorary degree of Doctor of Literature. The principal of Mansfield College is known everywhere as one of the most learned of Nonconformist divines.

Primitive Methodism prospers in the city of Oxford. This week the foundation-stone of the third Primitive Methodist chapel was laid by Lieut. Hermon Hodge, of the Grenadier Guards. Towards the total cost of £250 the sum of £60 was promised and given on the stone-laying day.

The list of preachers for this term at Mansfield College Chapel includes many of the most brilliant Free Church ministers, among whom are Principal Forsyth, Professor George Adam Smith, Rev. Silvester Horne, Dr. Hope Moulton, Dr. Guinness Rogers, and Rev. Ambrose Shepherd.

At the annual meeting of the Wesleyan Home Missions held during the week at New Inn Hall Street Chapel, Rev. Arthur Hoyle stated that £35,831 had been collected during the year, being an increase of £1,304 on the previous year's account. Towards this amount the Oxford Wesleyan Church had contributed £41 18s. 1d.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson hopes to leave England for America in the spring. He has booked his passage on the ss. Lucania, which sails May 2.

Friends of Mr. Thomas Payne, the evangelist, will be glad to learn that he is progressing favourably towards recovery from the recent accident by which his leg was broken.

Mr. T. Swanston Smith's numerous friends will hear with pleasure that after a critical operation he is slowly recovering. He asks that prayer may continue to be made for his complete restoration, in order that he may be able to resume his Christian activities.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn in staying longer than he intended in the famine districts of Finland. After returning to Kajana from the north, both he and his son, who is travelling with him, have been ill. He is able to get about again, but his son is still confined to bed.

Contrary to the expectations of medical men and others, Mr. Philip Hurditch is happily showing signs of recovery. A decided improvement is reported, and the patient is able to leave his room. We bespeak for Mr. Hurditch the sustained interest of our readers, both in giving thanks to God and continuing in prayer on his behalf.

Rev. D. H. Ritchie Snaddon, minister and director of the Standburn Congregational Church and Forward Home Mission and Temperance Movement, has decided to sever his connection with that work. Mr. Snaddon, who will be accompanied by his wife, purposes going on an evangelizing tour through Scotland. The neglected condition of some of its country towns and villages is sad in the extreme, and it is their intention to devote their time to this work.

The following announcement in the Gazette will interest our readers: "The King has been graciously pleased to confer the decoration of the Royal Red Cross on Mrs. Osborn Howe, in recognition of services rendered by her in attending to sick and wounded soldiers during the late war in South Africa." Mr. and Mrs. Osborn Howe are hoping to return to South Africa this year for further mission work. They will conduct independent missions, but will work in sympathy with the S.A.G.M. and kindred missions. Mr. and Mrs. Osborn Howe have a threefold call so far—the Jews, the soldiers, and an industrial school for the blind.

Church of England.

St. John's Hall, Highbury, has made an excellent start with the New Year. There are now fifty-two men in residence.

The Church Pastoral Aid Society has just received a donation of £5,000 from a friend who wishes to be anonymous. This is not to be applied to the ordinary purposes of the Society, but is intended to develop the scheme for augmenting small benefices in towns, and for assisting poor country clergy of evangelical views.

Congregational.

At the Annual Conference of Latimer Church, East London, at which the pastor, Rev. J. W. Atkinson presided for the thirty-fourth time, the secretary, Mr. F. Clark reported that the total annual income, including the Pastors' East London Mission and Relief Fund was £7,043 3s. 9d. All the varied organizations of the Church were reported to be in a healthy and flourishing condition.

Baptist.

Under the pastorate of Rev. George Wainwright, the Church at Crewkerne, Somerset, is giving evidence of much spiritual progress. Last week the church meeting adopted unanimously a request for the prayer-meeting to be prolonged at least a quarter of an hour.

On Thursday, January 22, at Boundary Road Church, Walthamstow, leave was taken of Mr. E. T. Lowe, of the Pastors' College, who is undertaking missionary service in Shansi, China. Mr. Josiah Baynes, of the Baptist Missionary Society, occupied the chair. Dr. McCaig delivered the valedictory address, at the close of which Professor Hackney offered up prayer tenderly and earnestly, commending the young missionary and his labour to the Father's care. The meeting throughout was most inspiring, and created a deep impression in all. Mr. Lowe sailed for China on January 28.

About 400 members and friends of Devonshire Square Baptist Church, Stoke Newington, N., attended the New Year's social gathering on Thursday last week, the pastor, Rev. Geo. P. McKay, presiding. The proceedings were of more than ordinary interest. An illuminated address was presented to Mr. E. Savage, who, having been an elected deacon for twenty-one years, is now made an honorary deacon. Mr. W. Turner (for twenty years a deacon, during thirteen of which he was chief secretary), who has also been promoted to the position of honorary deacon, had been the recipient of a similar token of regard in his own home, failing health preventing his attendance. The new church secretary (Mr. H. Jerrard) submitted the new Year Book, which showed the membership to have been maintained at 777, in spite of the large number of people leaving the neighbourhood.

Methodist.

At the Wesleyan Home Mission Sub-Committee meeting, held last Thursday to consider the subject of pensions to lay agents, some interesting statistics relating to that useful body of men were presented. It appears that there are 221 lay agents employed throughout the Connexion. Of these, 146 are married men, and seventy-five are single.

The Wesleyans of Barrow-in-Furness have decided to embark on a great extension scheme which comprises the building of a mission-hall in the Hindpool portion of the town to seat 1,200 people, a permanent church in Greengate to seat 400, and a new church at Vickerstown, Walney Island, the cost of the three-fold scheme being about £10,000. In a circular appealing for funds it is pointed out that the Wesleyans at present have only sitting accommodation for 2,000 worshippers, and that nothing was being done by them to reach the masses by way of popular mission work.

At the Central Hall, Leytonstone, three lectures on "Palestine Life" are arranged for Thursday evenings, at eight o'clock, on February 12, 19, 26, by Rev. James Neil, M.A., and it is expected many in this part of London will avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing Mr. Neil on these occasions. The regular work, conducted by Messrs. Borton Bros., continues to be much blessed. On Sunday evenings the hall is usually crowded, and conversions are constantly witnessed. The new hall has now been opened nearly two years.

The Gospel Mission Hall, Farnborough, Hants, was built by a few poor people in 1896 for religious services, and from the date of its opening until now God has set His seal upon the undenominational independent effort made to reach the hundreds of untouched people who live in this neighbourhood. Blessing has been given and the work has made good progress under the direction of Mr. Rawlings and Mr. Marshall. The mission is crippled by a debt of £100, which the members who are poor people, are making strenuous efforts to clear.

Fallen Asleep.

The Baptist Church at City Road, Winchester, has sustained a loss through the death of Mr. John Heath, its oldest member, in his eighty-third year.—Rev. H. Knott, vicar of Totland, Isle of Wight. He was formerly an Association Secretary of the C.M.S., and many were the friends that he made as he worked in this calling in the North and West of England.—Suddenly, from heart failure, Rev. Christopher Moffat, LL.D., vicar of Blackburn. Dr. Moffat held distinct Evangelical principles.—The Baptist Church, West Malling has been plunged into deep sorrow by the death of their beloved deacon, Mr. Thomas Thomson, at the early age of thirty-nine.—At Belfast, Rev. Canon Hallam, late Rector of Camolin, diocese of Ferns, aged ninety-three years.—At Dungannon, Mr. Jas. Irwin, Sunday-school superintendent and circuit steward in connection with the local Methodist church.—Congregationalism at St. Leonards has lost a valued helper in the death of Mr. W. H. Lee, of Warrior Square, who passed away suddenly on Saturday last. Mr. Lee was a deacon of the London Road Congregational Church, and honorary secretary of the Balverhythe Mission. He was well known in North-East London, having been for twenty-five years a trustee, deacon, and treasurer of the Victoria Park Tabernacle, of which the late Rev. G. Snashall, B.A., was pastor.

The Christian.

Eight-Day Missions. The noteworthy mission held last week at Brighton by Gipsy Smith is another indication, among many, of the apparent unwisdom of limiting to a single week the visit of a missioner. In a spiritually "live" town, it takes the first week to induce the Christians who throng to the meetings to make room for "outsiders"; in a dead one, it takes as long to awaken a living interest, and to do foundation work. We are sure it is a common experience of evangelists that the results would be both deeper and broader if missions lasted for a month instead of a week. The number of applications naturally makes this a difficult matter, but it is a serious question whether fewer missions, with more far-reaching results would not, in the end, yield more lasting fruit.

Daily Conversions. The remark of Dr. Torrey, at the final meeting of his series in Mildmay, concerning daily conversions has evoked some surprise. Yet it is very rare for a minister to allege that, for the space of a few years, conversions are witnessed daily in his church. But if rare now, it was the common thing in Apostolic days. "The Lord added to the Church daily those that were being saved." And this remains the ideal for the Church of all times. A few per annum added to the Church is the general rule now, and, unhappily, too many are content to have it so. A true revival will mean the revival of the Apostolic ideal and practice, in which evangelization shall obtain the first place—Sundays and week days alike. This does not necessarily mean daily preaching, but it does mean daily seeking on the part of the whole Church.

Sin and Criticism. A correspondent, writing to the Daily News in reference to the Torrey-Alexander mission at Edinburgh, speaks of the remarkable hold that the meetings are taking on all classes in the northern capital. Referring to the fear which existed that Dr. Torrey's faithful testimonies to the supreme authority of the Bible would bring opposition from those who have sympathized with the "Higher Criticism," the writer says that the serious increase of drunkenness, crime, and open ungodliness which has taken place in Scotland has aroused the ministers and Christian workers to recognise the imperative need for a Divine revival in order to cope with the abounding evils which exist.

The Dawn of a New Day. A year ago the most ardent temperance workers would not have dared to forecast such a change as that which has actually come to pass in the history of the country. The first Brewster Sessions under the New Licensing Act has proved a revelation in possibilities of reform. Fifty licences in Birmingham are to be surrendered. All over the country, magistrates announce their intention of reducing licences. The movement is spreading with great rapidity, and by the next sessions a great transformation will have been effected. Let us thank God for this dawn of a new day. It is only the dawn, but the dawn prophesies noon. The most influential newspaper out of London, the Manchester Guardian, is adding its great weight to the work of reform. In a leading article it sums up the case thus:—

> It should, then, rest with the administrative unit to determine what its standard of living and morality shall be within its own borders, without external interference. This is the pure doctrine of Local Veto. The next step in temperance reform seems likely to be in the direction of enforcing this salutary principle of direct local responsibility. . . . When once we begin to travel along that road, we shall probably find it impossible to rest for long at any point short of it.

Parliament and Drink. A somewhat lurid light has recently been thrown upon the attitude of the House of Commons in regard to the drink trade, by the manager of the National Trade Defence Association. Mr. Newton stated definitely that 470 members of Parliament "are pledged to the principle of compensation," an unpleasant fact for the ratepayers, to whom the licensed victuallers are still looking for compensation funds. Mr. Newton explained that, in omitting from the Licensing Act any clause bearing upon the point, the Government "did not wish to raise a thorny question." The question has, however, already been raised at Farnham and elsewhere, and the decision of the highest Courts of Law has been directly opposed to Mr. Ritchie's idea of "the equitable and proper claims of those who have carried on the business."

Women and Delirium Tremens. Mrs. Fenwick Miller, a thoughtful writer whose contributions to sociology are always full of interest, has recently shown that although drunkenness is increasing among women, her sex is still the most sober. She points out that, in 1896, the deaths from alcoholic causes were—males 91 per million, females only 52; and that in 1898, the arrests of drunk and disorderly, or drunk and incapable, totalled 91,845 males and 39,477 females. Unhappily, however, as regards this drunkards' death-rate, that of women has recently gone up at least a third. That the figures, dreadful as they are, can be considered thoroughly exhaustive is, however, open to doubt, for the alcoholic cause of death is frequently concealed for the sake of the family. Meanwhile, the deaths of women from delirium tremens have increased over 50 per cent. during the last twenty years—a fact which even Mr. Ritchie might meditate upon with advantage, as illustrating one result of the labours of the supporters of those who "carry on the business."

An Ambiguous Opinion. Writing of Dr. Alexander Robertson's book, THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH IN ITALY, the Catholic Times denounces the author in picturesque style, and then concludes by saying: "Mr. Robertson's book on Italy is just such as was to be expected. He could write it in no other way." We quite agree, albeit our interpretation of the words differs from that of the writer. With the plain facts unmistakably before him day by day, any honest man "could write in no other way" than Dr. Robertson has done.

Convent Horrors in France. It is encouraging to note the determination shown by the French Government in dealing with the "Good Shepherd" nuns. A trial before the Nancy Court of Appeal has brought some horrible facts to light. Girls were taken into the convent only to be worked to death, and were denied any communication with relatives and friends. In some cases they were cast adrift without mercy or money, and driven to swell the ranks of the fallen, or to end their lives by suicide. It is noteworthy that an episcopal inquiry into the proceedings of the Order yielded a report in which it was affirmed:—

> It is the work of the girls that enriches the Order. There is not to be found in the whole country an employer, even an atheist, who sweats his people so abominably as these nuns, who pretend to take the girls out of charity.

Such a disclosure of convent horrors makes the blood boil as we think that such atrocious wickedness is possible. Here is a vast Roman Catholic institution, connected with which it is proved that 48,000 of the girls and young women of France have for many years been the subjects of inhuman cruelty, oppression, and slavery. The Mother Superior and her partners in this hateful institution have acted more like demons than women. Forgery of letters, denial to friends of the presence and actual condition of the poor girls kept for years within the walls of this living prison, are among the frightful facts now brought to light. It has been calculated that the Order made £2,000 a day out of its sweated victims, or an aggregate profit of £600,000 a year! No wonder the "Good Shepherds" made extensive investments in real estate! Their relatives in the monastic life are now doing the like in Great Britain. How long are we going to look on and say nothing?

Off to Rome. Recent incidents at the Church of St. Michael, Shoreditch, more than justify all that has been said by Protestants regarding the spirit and methods of the Romanizing party in the Church of England. The disciplinary action of the Bishop of London will be regarded by not a few earnest Evangelicals as tardy; but, at any rate, it brought about the resignation of the vicar, Rev. H. M. M. Evans. Subsequent events clearly demonstrated the character of Mr. Evans' influence. Many of the Sunday-school teachers took their scholars to the nearest Romanist church, the building, though in an unfinished state, being hastily prepared for their reception, and a large number of the congregation followed. The new curate-in-charge has an arduous task before him, but for this he can only blame the dilatoriness of those who allowed false doctrine to be taught for so long. It is to be hoped that the Bishop of Exeter will follow the lead of Dr. Winnington Ingram, for the condition of affairs at Plymouth, as brought out by Sir Henry Howorth's letters in The Times, is nothing short of a scandal.

The Revolt from Rome. The Roman Catholic Rector of Ealing, Father O'Halloran, has published a letter which he sent to the Cardinal Prefect of Propaganda at Rome. It throws a strong light upon the revolt from Rome, and upon the strained relations between Cardinal Vaughan and a section of the ecclesiastics in the Westminster diocese. Here, as in France, there is a strong feeling on the part of the "secular clergy" against the intrusion of the monks who are being forced upon "canonically-established parishes, with church, presbytery, schools, certified teachers, and rector." Certainly the indictment of "the despotism of the Cardinal and the aggression of the Benedictine monks" is a strong one, and it should go far to disabuse the public mind in regard to the claim to exclusive peace and union which is so strenuously urged by Rome. She may keep the gates closed, but there is much fighting within the walls.

A Great Scientist. The passing of Sir George Stokes demands more than the brief obituary notice we were enabled to give last week. His great age removed him from the observation of the multitude. Younger men are to the front in the scientific world, but they are indebted to the Christian scientist who has just left us for very much of their knowledge. Younger men to-day hardly appreciate all the scientific world owes to Sir George Stokes. And with all his researches he remained to the end a simple and devout Christian. Mr. David Howard, speaking of him at the Victoria Institute, well said: "All his studies were made with profound consciousness of the realities of eternity. Though a man of the highest intellect, he was one of the humblest men that ever lived." We may well contrast this gentleman, at once so learned, so humble, and so devout, with the noisy materialists, whose pseudo-science is being paraded in cheap form by the rationalistic press just now. There is a wide gulf, as to manner and spirit, between the two types of men. The one, of highest renown, traced his knowledge to God, and employed it to help his fellows; the others abuse their knowledge, in disparaging God and misleading men.

Tennyson's Creed. The biography of Tennyson just published from the pen of one of his nieces, Miss Grace Weld, is a valuable contribution to the life-history of a man who regarded his gift of poetry as bestowed on him "by his Heavenly Father, as a great trust in which he was permitted to convey to his fellow-men the message he had received from his Master." Much has been written from time to time in regard to Tennyson's attitude towards religious thought and life, some of his references to "honest doubt" having given rise to a feeling that he himself stood upon shifting sands. The idea is an utterly fallacious one, and Miss Weld's testimony, after years of close family intimacy, should set the matter finally at rest.

The School and the Home. Mr. J. Lewis Paton, M.A., the Headmaster of University College School, lecturing before the College of Preceptors, referred to parents as "A Neglected Factor," but the neglect is mostly self-neglect. Forgetting that the responsibility of training their children can be shared but never shifted, they create in their children's minds a pernicious contrast between school, as a place of discipline, and home, as the abode of love. Only by the co-operation of the two is real training possible.

"Wanted, Parents!" A Countess told Napoleon that what France wanted was "Mothers, sir, mothers!" and what England wants, says Mr. Paton, is "Parents, sir, parents!" He is able to do without the rod at his school because he has not to do without the parents, who co-operate in a system of reports sent from the school by countersigning and returning them. Experience has taught him that if either master or parent may be the sleeping partner, it certainly ought not to be the latter.

Disaster in the South Seas. The devastation which has been wrought in the Society Islands and the Tuamotu group, in the Southern Pacific, by the recent tidal wave and hurricane, reminds us, in its wide-spread havoc, of the Martinique disaster. The storm, which raged for days, was evidently of an unparalleled character; every wave was higher than its predecessor, until finally a wall of water forty feet in height rushed across the islands, covering them for miles. Such cataclysms of nature should bring solemn reflections to the mind. We read of a European who committed suicide through sheer affright at the approaching wave. There is a call to help the survivors, and to pray that of those who are the Lord's it may be true that "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee; because he trusteth in Thee" (Isa. xxvi. 3).

Bulgaria. If the terrible evidence which is being published in the Press proves authentic, the fearful drama of 1876 is once more being played in that hapless country. The evidence presented to the Embassies at Constantinople, and that laid before the British public by the Daily News, is identical. It is one shocking story of rapine, torture, persecution and murder. The sycophants at Yildiz Kiosk have been ordered to deny to Europe the truth of these stories. Those ready to believe in the kindness of the Turk have believed the official lie, and Europe has not interfered. But prompt action is required, and if the governments will not move, let the people do as they did in 1876, and compel interference. If the papers, both Christian and secular, inform the people as to the true state of affairs, they will then know what to do.

The Vision of the Throne. To every prophet who is called upon to deal with the life of his time there come moments of depression. The history of the prophets of Israel and Judah, in which the sad note so often is heard, repeats itself in every generation. They have to cry "Woe!" because of the crime, self-seeking, drunkenness, and oppression which prevail. For all such the grand corrective and sustenance is the vision of the Divine Throne. Isaiah beheld it, and from him it was the recommencement of a new career. We might well despair, if we were abandoned to ourselves, but we dare not despair in presence of the Eternal Throne which rules over all and makes even evil serve its purposes. And He who sits on the throne says, "Behold I make all things new." Many say that in our day, but only One can say it with effect, for the Throne is His, and with it all power.

"Count Your Blessings."

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with every spiritual blessing in the heavenlies [heavenly things in heavenly places] in Christ" (Eph. i. 3).

Count your blessings; name them one by one;
And it will surprise you what the Lord hath done.

WHEN this suggestive and Scriptural hymn is sung, probably the first blessings counted are temporal ones—life, health, food, clothing, shelter, preservation, protection, love of kindred, and the like. But the previous Scripture teaches us to count our spiritual blessings, and to bless the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ from whom they come. Let us enumerate some of them. We cannot count them; they are more than can be numbered. Let us name some of them one by one.

We were chosen of God before the foundation of the world, in Him who was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blemish before Him in love. It was in Him as crucified and risen that we were chosen, as He said, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth by itself alone; but if it die it beareth much fruit" (Eph. i.; Rev. xiii.; John xii. 24, R.V.).

The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ fore-ordained us unto adoption of sons through Jesus Christ unto Himself. Yet not as men adopt children who are not their own; we are made partakers of the Divine nature—that the Firstborn from the dead might be the Firstborn among many brethren—begotten again of incorruptible seed by the word of God, who liveth and abideth (Eph. i.; 2 Pet. 1; Col. i.; 1 Pet. i.).

To the praise of the glory of His grace our God has accepted us, graced us, in the Beloved. As Pharaoh accepted Jacob and his sons, one as well as another, from Reuben to Benjamin, and gave them the best of the land, solely for the sake of the beloved Joseph who had saved the kingdom and magnified the King: so hath God accepted and graced us in the Son of His love, who glorified Him on the earth, and finished the work which He had given Him to do.

We are forgiven sinners. We remember the relief, the joy, the love that succeeded the fear of judgment, when the arrows of conviction had pierced our soul, and we had no rest in our bones because of our sin. But He forgave the iniquity of our sin, and like the woman who was a sinner, we would have washed the feet of Jesus with our tears.

Love I much? I've much forgiven;
I'm a miracle of grace.

But forgiveness would have been a useless gift had it been alone. The sinner would have sinned again. Forgiveness was the fruit of REDEMPTION THROUGH HIS BLOOD.

We were not fictitiously treated as though we had never sinned; we were redeemed by Him who poured out His soul unto death, from the world, the flesh, and the devil; and truthfully treated as those in whom sin abounded, but over whom grace did more exceedingly abound.

Not only are we redeemed and forgiven, but justified. Justified freely by His grace, justified by the blood of Christ, justified by faith in God, who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, justified by works which are the fruit and evidence of faith—good works which God hath fore-ordained that we should walk in them.

Being justified, we were sanctified, set apart as vessels meet for the Master's use, like the golden and silver vessels of the Temple, set apart for the service of God. As our Lord said: "For their sakes I sanctify Myself"—set Myself apart to die, obedient unto the death of the cross—"that they may be truly sanctified"—set apart to a like obedience, going forth to Him without the camp, bearing His reproach; bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus may be made manifest in their mortal flesh.

We are made members of the Church which is His Bride and His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all.

A cluster of five of our spiritual blessings in Christ is this: "Whom He foreknew He also fore-ordained; and whom He fore-ordained, them He also called; and whom He called, them He also justified; and whom He justified, them He also glorified" (Rom. viii.).

Another cluster has been called the Seven Togethers. We were crucified together with Christ, buried together, quickened together, raised up together, made to sit together with Him in the heavenly places, if we suffer together with Him, that we may be also glorified together (Eph. ii.).

In a word, God has given us Himself in giving us His Son, who is the brightness of His glory, and the express image of His Person, so that "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." "I and the Father are one."

And He has given us His Holy Spirit, who was the promise of the ages until Jesus came and suffered and was glorified. That blessed and Divine Spirit is the earnest of our inheritance in God, unto the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of His glory.

But as a casket of jewels given to a child might be neglected or rejected, so the spiritual blessings contained in the only begotten Son, whom God gave to the world which He "so loved," is neglected or rejected by all who have not received Him, and thereby become children of God, born again by the regenerating power of the Holy Ghost.

And as, even when received, the name and quality and value of the jewels needs to be explained to the receiver, so the treasures of wisdom and knowledge in our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ, in whom is the fulness of the God-head bodily, need to be revealed and interpreted to us by One intimately and thoroughly acquainted with them. Therefore the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ has given His Holy Spirit to His Church, and to every member of His Church, to reveal the glories of Christ to us, as Jesus said, "He shall take of Mine, and shall show it unto you. He shall show you things to come. He shall bring to your remembrance all things whatsoever I have said unto you."

It is in the Scriptures of truth that this revelation of Christ has been made by the Spirit of truth, through Spirit-inspired men in the Old Testament and in the New; as Jesus showed unto His disciples, "all that is written in Moses, and the Prophets, and the Psalms, concerning Himself." It must in like manner be revealed and interpreted to us by the same Spirit, that we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. He will always thus speak to those who are willing to hear; and he that willeth to do God's will shall understand the teaching.

Therefore, "hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people and thy father's house; so shall the King greatly desire thy beauty; for He is thy Lord, and worship thou Him." "Yea, and for this very cause, adding on your part all diligence, in your faith supply virtue, and in your virtue knowledge, and in your knowledge temperance, and in your temperance patience, and in your patience godliness, and in your godliness love of the brethren, and in your love of the brethren, LOVE. For if these things are yours and abound, they make you to be not idle nor unfruitful unto the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, for thus shall richly be supplied unto you the entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Babel and Bible.

BY PASTOR JULIUS ROHRBACH, BERLIN.

WHEN, some three years ago, Professor HARNACK, of Berlin University, delivered a series of lectures on "The Essence of Christianity" ("Das Wesen des Christentums"), and cleverly substituted a Christianity of his own devising for the Christianity of the New Testament, strong opposition was roused at once, and many able theologians delivered lectures on the fundamental truths of Christianity, proving the Divine origin of the Founder of our faith, and the Divine character of the Book which reveals Him. Then believers in the Lord Jesus Christ rejoiced in this restatement of the fundamental truths of their faith, because, after all the attacks of modern infidelity and Higher Criticism, the Lord had gotten Himself the victory, and made His Word to stand out in its Divine authority as grandly as ever.

A somewhat similar conflict has been going on here quite lately, caused by a lecture, entitled, "Babel and Bible," which Professor FRIEDRICH DELITZSCH, the son of the well-known theologian, recently delivered, in the presence of the German Emperor, and before many of the highest in Church and State, at Berlin. Already a year ago the Professor, who for years has been an able Assyriologist, delivered a lecture, with splendid limelight illustrations, on the subject of his excavations from the ruins of Babylon, and gave it as his conviction that most of the facts and institutions mentioned in the Old Testament Scriptures were derived from Babylonian sources. Last summer Professor Delitzsch visited Babylon for a few months, and continued his researches of the clay tablets and their cuneiform inscriptions.

In his second lecture he boldly asserted that he believed he had found the origin of the worship of the Biblical Jehovah-God in the monotheism of the Babylonians! He traced the names of El and Jahve to Assyrian origin; and many Old Testament ceremonies and institutions, such as the Jewish Sabbath, sacrifices, accounts of the creation, of the flood, and of the origin of nations he believes to be derived from what he has found in the cuneiform inscriptions. Thus, perfectly enchanted by his new discoveries, the Professor disparaged the Old Testament, denied its specific character as a Divine Revelation—yea, went so far as to express his conviction that "there is no greater mistake of the human mind than the belief that the Bible is a personal revelation of God."

By such a statement as this, the Professor leaves the domain of his Assyrian researches, and steps forward asserting an obsolete rationalism, which his own father, by years of careful Biblical studies, had helped to overcome. His statement at once called forth the strongest opposition on the part of all who maintain the Divine authority and authenticity of the Old Testament Scriptures. If faith in Divine Revelation "is the greatest mistake of the human mind," then infidels like Voltaire and Nietzsche would be right to proclaim it as the most important task of civilization to erase this great mistake from the human mind. If there is no revelation of God to man, then there is no relation of man to God, and an end is put to religion.

Like the old rationalists, Professor Delitzsch makes his own inner consciousness the judge of what is Divine, and seeks a further development of religion as the product of human intellect; by denying the fact of Divine Revelation he deprives religion of its very life.

While unbelieving modern critics rejoiced rather too early in the Professor's statements, as if the Divine authority of the Bible was once for all to be given up, Dr. HILDESHEIMER, the chief Rabbi of Berlin, declared:—

Professor Delitzsch has attacked that which is held most sacred by every Jew, the Bible, and has done so on the ground of a few stone tablets, the inscriptions of which are differently interpreted by different scholars; the Jewish religion is being denied the right to be considered the mother of pure monotheism; and the idea of one God, the institution of the Sabbath, the ten commandments, and other fundamental truths and institutions are said to be derived from Babylon, and thereby the gravest offence is given to the whole Jewish nation.

Happily, a few days after Professor Delitzsch's lecture, Professor HILPRECHT, from Philadelphia, who for fourteen years had made the Assyrian inscriptions his special study, and several times superintended the excavations at Babylon, arrived in Berlin, and under the auspices of the Anthropological Society, delivered a lecture in which he declared his profound and unshaken belief in the Old Testament as a Divine Revelation. He showed the vast difference that exists between the idolatrous worship of Babylon and the revelation of the one true God among the children of Israel; and affirmed that in the many thousands of clay tablets which he had excavated from the ruins of Babylon he had found no trace of any monotheistic worship.

He had been able to trace about twenty-one different layers of civilisation one above the other—whole libraries—treasuries, with some 50,000 clay tablets to a depth of about 100 feet. The sight of the grandeur of buildings even in their ruins gives some idea of the high spirit, vast power, and wealth of their former inhabitants. Several large libraries, one alone with some 23,000 texts, dating from about 2,500 years before Christ, have been discovered; also interesting business letters in their clay envelopes, &c.

But with all this, Professor Hilprecht says, Babylon is the land of the dead, of ruins, of graves, of silence. Everywhere witness is borne to the fulfilment of the words of Isaiah xiii. 19-22: "And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited; but wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; their houses shall be full of doleful creatures, and owls shall dwell there." By careful study of these ruins, the truth of the Word of God is again gloriously established, and the too hasty rejoicing of the infidel put to confusion. It is only a renewal of the old conflict between man's science and God's Revelation, and, whilst we thankfully receive all that human research can find out, we humbly bow before the Lord our God who has spoken to us in the Old Testament Scriptures.

Let Me Believe.

LET me believe! I will—I must believe.
Until God's veto falls, I must have faith:
Hope is more strong than fear, and love than death.
The gift He gave me shall I not receive?
If in the end His will be to bereave
My life, I shall reply, with anguished breath,
"Thy will be done"—as now, to all He saith;
But let me not before that moment grieve

Let me believe! God is so truly kind:
He blesses others, and might bless me too.
Let me expect the best that He can do;
Is not all other expectation blind?
Yea, I believe. And passing through the fire
E'en now I thank Him for my heart's desire.

John Kensit Memorial.—The London Council of the United Protestant Societies has received generous subscriptions towards an obelisk to be placed on the grave of the late Mr. Kensit at Hampstead, and some similar memorial at Birkenhead. They set before themselves the additional object of offering a public gift to Mrs. Kensit, so suddenly and grievously deprived of her husband. A first appeal for funds has been issued, copies of which may be had from Mr. Henry Miller, 14, Buckingham Street, Strand, London, W.C.

"Saved so as by Fire."

SISTER PARDOE is one of the most earnest workers in one of our South London churches. To look at her, you would never imagine that she is a woman with a past, and is nothing less than a miracle of Divine grace.

There are still lingering traces of early youthful beauty in her comely and happy face. It is with something of the sense of a horrible nightmare that she looks back on her past, and praises God for His grace manifested in her.

Mrs. Pardoe lived in one of the dreariest parts of South London. Like so many more, her husband had been allured to the big city from his native village by the hope of more remunerative employment. It was the worst day's work he ever did.

If anybody ought to have been happy it was Mr. and Mrs. Pardoe; blessed with good health, and a fair share of worldly prosperity, the world wore for them its most inviting smile. But, somehow, Mrs. Pardoe began to slip down the social scale. She took to drink, and mixed up with an undesirable set of female companions; and almost before her husband could realize the fact, she had become a confirmed dipsomaniac. It was enough to drive a man of less moral strength to the bad, but he himself retained his sobriety,

The factory bell at Greenwood's, the big builders, where Pardoe worked, was just ringing the men out to dinner, and he, with the rest of the stream, turned his face in the direction of his house. Arrived at his home, he found the breakfast things lying on the table as he had left them; but there was no sign of his wife.

Presently, while he stood sick at heart, looking upon the general appearance of neglect, a loud shout of derision greeted his ears, and looking out of the window, he saw his wife rolling along in bestial drunkenness, followed by a jeering pack of children. It was the last straw; love turned to loathing, and Pardoe's mind was made up.

That afternoon the wretched man, who loved his wife as he loved his own life, went to the emigration office and arranged to leave for one of our colonies, abandoning his wife to her fate. They had no family to bind him, and so he decided upon this drastic course. When he went home he found his wife had slept off her drunken stupor; but he was not to be moved from his purpose, and he revealed his intentions to her.

Days passed, and he was busy making arrangements for his departure. Mrs. Pardoe took fright, for it was evident that his threats were earnest. To the wretched woman it now seemed that her case was hopeless; she had lost all. She loathed herself, and yet she felt powerless. She was conscious that she had sinned away her will power.

It was in this condition that one of our workers found her, and the poor, wretched woman, in the desperation of her need and misery, poured into the ear of our lady friend all the story of her shame. She saw the pit into which she had sunk, and also the height of happiness from which she had fallen. What should she do to be saved?

But the greatest sense of her evil condition was that she had forfeited her husband's love, rather than that she had abused God's mercy.

"My sister," said our lady visitor, as she listened to the sobbing woman, and laying her hand gently on her shoulder, "there is hope for you. Will you do as I ask you? If you will, your case is not hopeless. God will not only pardon you, but He will restore your will power to you.

"I want you to kneel down with me in prayer, here and now; confess your sin, trust in Christ's death for pardon; but especially I want you to entreat God for power to keep you. You know you have signed the pledge many times; but that of itself has not kept you. You feel it to be useless; but now ask God for the power."

There and then the two women knelt side by side, and if ever a distressed and helpless soul did really pray, that poor drink-sodden woman prayed to be delivered from her burning chains. It was one of the holiest sights under heaven. It was the awful conflict with the powers of darkness. Angel and devil were locked together in mortal combat. Which should win?

At length the poor woman rose from her knees, and somehow there crept into her heart a feeling of sacred confidence she had never known before. It seemed as if new power had really been given her. No longer confident of herself, she was confident that Christ could keep her.

"I will see your husband," said her lady friend, "and see whether we can persuade him, even now, not to leave you." She found the unhappy man was willing to give his wife another trial under the new conditions.

Thank God, a dozen happy years have justified his decision. The power of God has kept his wife. She is a new creature in Christ Jesus. Few know about her unhappy past; and only recently she said to the writer, as her face glowed with rapture, "God has completely taken away from me the desire for the thing that nearly ruined me." To Evangelists.

BY AN EVANGELIST.

"Faithful are the wounds of a friend."

IT was once said by a wise servant of God, "You may tell the spirit of a man by the way he takes a reproof"; and anything calculated to help us to become better soul-winners should surely be welcomed.

When George Müller found his colleague at Bristol was being used more than himself, he never rested till he found the reason; and seeking grace to humble himself before God, soon found the Spirit of God began to work through him more mightily.

If a foe have kenn'd,
Or worse than foe, an alienated friend,
Some rib of dry-rot in thy ship's stout side,
Count it God's message; and with humble pride,
With heart of oak replace it: thine the gains;
Give him the rotten timber for his pains.

Said a well-known worker in Scotland to me recently, "The temptations to us as evangelists to are many, and we need to be awake to our danger. I know one beloved brother whom I honour for the great use God has made of him, but whose time is spent in a way which is altogether unworthy of his high calling."

Brethren, are we not in this danger—we who travel from town to town? Our addresses, maybe, are those we think most calculated to be of use; we repeat them month after month, until perhaps there is the danger of repeating words only; and as we have no particular need of studying the Word for fresh matter, we possibly give out stale bread to hungry souls; and travel over a limited area of the measureless fields of Revelation, whilst the time that were better spent over the Bible may be frittered away in mere recreation, or be given to lighter reading.

"Dear me," said a lady to me, "I went four times to hear Mr. So-and-so in different parts of London, and each time he gave the same address, the same points, and the same anecdotes, till I knew just where the people would smile, and exactly when I should hear the same well-worn story. Evidently ministers are not the only folks that use "travellers!"

How much also we need to study the Scriptures for the culture of our own souls, as well as to get the message for the particular service, for we may even be diligent in gathering manna for others and our own souls be famishing for food!

Dr. Torrey says, "If you do not feed on the Word of God and get filled, there is nothing for the Spirit of God to use." I presume this may be true of us, though our subject may be intelligently comprehended, well arranged, suitably divided, and eloquently delivered. "Which is the best way to prepare for preaching?" asked a young minister of a quaint old preacher. The reply was: "Fill the barrel to the top, and you can tap it where you like."

One of the old divines says: "Study yourself to death, and pray yourself to life again." Brethren, if this in some measure were our experience, and we were all "filled with the Spirit," we should be different men.

A MAN WITH A MESSAGE!

This is what the world is waiting for—an evangelist leaving the presence of God to stand before men with a message God-given, anointed with fresh oil for every service. Alas! so many of us are mere professionals; just so many addresses and so many meetings, and we are perhaps more careful about catching our train than about watching for souls. Let us not be content with giving out that which we have not diligently sought from the Lord.

Said an intimate friend to Dr. Stalker, when they were fellow-students together: "I have been perishing through sheer sloth." Oh for abandonment of ourselves to God to win our fellow-men to Christ! not entangling ourselves "with the affairs of this life"—looking not, nor being over careful, for the remuneration we shall receive for our services; letting not success (if God shall grant it) puff us up, nor the comforts of life, with all their enervating influences, pull us down; but letting our light so shine, our lives so speak, that in the places we visit there may be no mistaking our object and our motive; that the office of an evangelist may be honoured, and the God of the evangel glorified.

LET BROTHERLY LOVE CONTINUE.

Whoever may speak unkindly of the Lord's servants, let us be careful not to do so. If God is pleased to use a brother more than ourselves, let us not be envious, nor question his success. Prejudice is hard to remove, and if we speak ill of a brother he may suffer from it for years. The Lord loves His enemies; surely we should love each other. "Speak evil of no man," much less of those who are chosen to be His ambassadors.

One who was given to scandal was commanded by his King to take a bag of feathers on a windy day and scatter them through the city. Returning to tell of the completion of his task, the King now said, "Go and gather up all the feathers which you have scattered."

"That were impossible!" he replied.

"So is it impossible to undo the evil you have done by your tongue."

John Wesley wisely said, "I am determined to run nobody down but the devil, and nobody up but Christ." My brethren, we do well to imitate him.

"The Outpoured Spirit."

DEAR SIR,—May I suggest that from the rendering of Titus iii. 6, in the Revised Version, it appears that those words "poured out" refer to "the washing of regeneration which He"—the Holy Spirit—"poured out on us richly through Jesus Christ our Saviour"? Verse 7 amplifies the passage according to our Lord's own words, "Born of water and the Spirit."

This rendering makes plain the distinction between the action of the Holy Spirit in the present dispensation, and that which was, and will be again after the present. Rightly to divide the Word of Truth will ever be gain to the people of God, while its suppression must result in loss. The present exercise will lead us all into fuller realization of the Person of our precious Comforter, and remove the undefined and wrong apprehension of His glorious Person, which must be grievous to Him whom we would honour with deepest reverence.

We can always remember that He who searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, so that though some of God's dear children may not express themselves intelligently, His intercessions are according to God (Rom. viii. 27). H. C. P.

Union in Prayer.—With reference to the suggestion made in our columns by "An Old Disciple" that readers of The Christian might unite in prayer for the blessing of God to rest continually upon the paper in its ministry of "comforting and strengthening believers and attracting wanderers to the fold," several correspondents have kindly written us to the effect that this course is being followed in their family circles.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, February 15. 2 Chron. xix.

He returned in peace. He had forfeited all right to peace, but the Lord dealt not with him according to his sins, nor rewarded him according to his iniquities. This is very comforting. We make mistakes in allying ourselves with the worldly, and adopting the maxims of men around us. In Jehoshaphat's case, God did not hesitate to fix the blame on what was blameworthy, but there was glad recognition of the "good things" which by His grace were found in him. So with us.

What marvellous talents are given us in position, privilege, and opportunity. In Jehoshaphat's life they gave him unusual influence in bringing back his people unto the God of their fathers. Let us do what we can to bring back the lost sheep; and let us, like Jehoshaphat, send pulsations of high and noble moral influence throughout the community. The state was well organized, but though the king was a deeply religious man, he had need to be careful of everything that would promote the material well-being of the commonwealth.

It is deplorable when good people withdraw their interest and influence from public life. John Stuart Mill said truly: "All that bad men need, to accomplish their bad purpose in society, is that good men should simply look on and do nothing." We remember that the one appeal of the demons to the Lord was, "Leave us alone." It is simply heart-breaking when Christian people refuse to take public office, or even to record their votes, leaving public affairs to men of low morals and selfish ends. Let us keep out of party politics, if you will, but let us concern ourselves in Municipal Councils, Boards of Guardians, and School Management Boards, with a single eye to do the will of God.

MONDAY, February 16. 2 Chron. xx.

How inimitably Jehoshaphat marshalled his arguments in prayer. God's mighty power, His gift of Canaan to Israel, the friendship which subsisted between Abraham and Jehovah, Solomon's prayer that God had pledged Himself to answer, the original prohibition against the invasion of Moab, Ammon, and Mount Seir, his people's utter inability to do aught to help themselves—these were arguments to which God could not but respond.

And the answer filled the king with thankfulness and hope. All that he and his people had to do was to stand still and see the salvation of God. The thought of God filled the whole horizon, and they could hardly see their enemies. It was like looking at a landscape through a reversed telescope. If only we would fix our minds on God for five minutes a day; if we would print on cardboard, or hang in our rooms such words as God is with me, God will deliver me, God is working out His loving purpose in me and for me; if only we would look upward and not downward, Godward and not manward, heavenward and not earthward—how strong and restful our lives would be! We should go into our battles praising the beauty of holiness; we should not need to fight; and we should fill the valley of Berachah with songs. (v. 26).

How much more blessed our lives would be if we ceased to trust in our judgment and expediency, and relied more absolutely on the ever-present and never-ceasing help of God. Yet even after all our lessons, we are liable, like Jehoshaphat, to join ourselves with the King of Israel (35). What infatuation! How could he do it a third time (xix. 2, 3; 2 Kings iii. 6, 7)? Our own hearts will spell out the answer! God help us!

TUESDAY, February 17. 2 Chron. xxi.

Wickedness always means disintegration! Under Jehoram (not the King of Israel, but Jehoshaphat's son), the kingdom threatened to break up. Edom revolted, a plague was on the people, the Philistines and Arabians made incursions into the country, and finally a terrible disease brought the king's life to a close.

So when the flesh rules us, when we answer the electric bells that ring up in our soul from below, when we pander to the promptings of the body, acting as though our essential nature were only physical—disintegration at once begins to work through all our being, our life is invaded with anxieties and annoyances, our sleep is broken, our peace has fled.

Thank God, all this may be reversed. Put the right monarch on the throne of your being; not self, but your spirit, indwelt and energized by the Spirit of Christ. Be deaf to the bells that ring from below, and listen quietly and patiently till they ring from above. Give the body only what it needs, to enable it to do its best work in the world. Remember that you are a spirit come from the Father of spirits, to do His bidding amongst men, and return to Him. Then the foes which have invaded your life will flee, as Jehoshaphat's foes before him. Love will shine on your face, and be reflected in your actions, and those who know you but casually will love you. There will be no fear of this terrible epitaph being engraven on your tombstone, "He departed without being desired" (v. 20). But take care, young people, whom you marry, for marriage makes or mars (v. 6).

WEDNESDAY, February 18. 2 Chron. xxii.

There are some striking sentences in this chapter! We must, of course, take the reading of the Book of Kings for Ahaziah's age; an error seems to have crept into the text here through the mistake of some copyist. It would hardly be possible for Jehoram to have had a son of forty-two—he was probably twenty-two, as in 2 Kings viii. 26. But notice: They (i.e. the house of Ahab) were his counsellors to his destruction. Let us beware of evil counsellors. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly!" One of the sacred names of our Lord is Counsellor—and what He counsels He enables to perform—"Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God." He ever counsels us to our salvation and blessedness. "Thou shalt guide me by Thy counsel, and afterward . . ."

Jehu, whom the Lord had anointed to cut off the house of Ahab. Can we doubt that men like Napoleon have had a distinct mission in the world as executioners of God's anger? Let us never forget that there is great "severity" in God, and that if a man will not turn He whets His sword. But let not the sword boast itself, and let it not take delight in its terrible mission!

The house of Ahaziah had no power to hold the kingdom. A deeply interesting phrase, going back on the lesson we learnt yesterday, that evil is always a cause of impotence and disintegration. A genius may suddenly collect an audience, but only a really good man has power to hold it.

Notice how the children of a good man profit by his goodness. They buried Jehoshaphat's son with reverent care, because his father had sought the Lord "with all his heart."

THURSDAY, February 19. 2 Chron. xxiii.

Jehoiada proceeded with great wisdom. He first entrusted the secret, that the young prince was alive, to the leading men of the kingdom, and secured their alliance; then at one of the great festivals he took the priests and Levites into his confidence, and disposed them in their places—one-third at the gates, one-third with the king, and one-third in a line from the right to the left of the Court. Then followed the coronation of the young king—the crown was placed on his head, a copy of the law in his hand, and the oath administered of loyalty to the sacred institutions of the kingdom.

The unusual sounds, especially the blast of trumpets, seem to have startled Athaliah, and she hastened across the bridge that connected the palace and temple. As soon as she saw what had taken place, she endeavoured to summon help by the cry, "Treason—treason!" But there were none to help her, none to avert her doom. Her execution was followed by the destruction of Baal's temple and the death of Mattan, the priest, and the final establishment of Joash in the venerable palace of David.

It is impossible to read this chapter without turning to the spiritual counterpart of its incidents. We cannot doubt that the principle of the Divine Life is literally within us. It may be as deeply hidden as Joash was, in the heart of the Temple; but it is there. Too long has the Athaliah of self reigned in our life, with her evil and idolatrous practices. But day by day the Divine Life within has been acquiring strength; and the moment is at hand, if not already come, when suddenly the Christ-life shall assert itself, filling our whole being with its regal beauty and glory, to the absolute overthrow of the evil past.

FRIDAY, February 20. 2 Chron. xxiv.

The new reign began well, under the wise guidance of Jehoiada. But the king was deeply disappointed at the carelessness of the priests in furthering the repair of the temple. It has been thought that this even alienated him from religious worship, and prepared for that terrible lapse of character and morals which took place later in his reign. How careful we should be to do nothing by our speech and behaviour that should induce a distaste for religion in those who observe our conduct. We who profess godliness should see to it that ethically and morally we go at least a mile in advance of men of the world. We must go one mile with them, but religion bids us go "twain," and it is the second mile that tells.

When the fervent piety, practical wisdom, and inflexible will of the aged patriot, Jehoiada, were removed from the helm, the feebler hands of the young king were not able to guide the ship of state, and she began to roll in the breakers. The king gave licence to his chief princes to erect high places in their immediate neighbourhoods, and this was the signal for the whole nation forsaking Jehovah, and turning to the idols and the groves. But the crowning sin was the stoning of Jehoiada's son, with the connivance of the king. It was a disgraceful crime. For base ingratitude and blind rage against purity of motive and loftiness of patriotism, it could not have been exceeded, and it was followed by condign punishment.

> Though the mills of God grind slowly,
> Yet they grind exceeding small.

SATURDAY, February 21. 2 Chron. xxv.

Amaziah ordered Judah "according to their father's houses," i.e., he arranged that members of the same family, or men from the same quarter, should fight side by side—this was a great inducemnt to steadiness in the ranks.

For £50,000, a very paltry sum in these days, the king of Judah hired 100,000 fully-equipped soldiers from the northern realm, but it must be remembered that soldiers looked for their reward to the plunder on which, in those days, they were allowed freely to lay their hands—and it was the loss of this expectation that made the dismissed warriors so angry, and determined them to indemnify themselves by raiding the country through which they passed to their homes.

O, tempted soul, God has power to help; He can give much more than the hundred talents; He can do much more for thee than that worldly alliance can; He can make all grace abound towards thee, so that thou shalt have a sufficiency and abound to every good work. What precious words these are! Great as thy perplexities, mighty as thine enemies, God hath power to help. Better to forfeit all money given to secure worldly alliance, and to bear the worst sufferings at the hands of men, than to forfeit that Divine help and succour.

The insensate worship of the sun-god, which Amaziah set up in Jerusalem, notwithstanding its inability to protect its votaries against his arms, was astounding; and in his forsaking of the true God, pride grew up unrebuked in his heart, and hurried him to destruction. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it?"

The Oracles of God.

LECTURE BY DR. A. T. PIERSON.

ON Friday evening Dr. Pierson delivered another striking and informing lecture at Exeter Hall on the subject he is treating week by week—"The Oracles of God." There was again a large attendance, and the lecturer demonstrated once more the intensity of his conviction that the Bible and the Bible alone is God's message to man. At the outset he solemnly affirmed that the first questions of great importance that every man should ask himself and answer intelligently were, Is there a God? Has God spoken to me? Is the Bible God's Book? No questions can transcend these in importance, for they lie at the basis of all spiritual thought and religious inquiry. Other books have posed as the production of the Divine mind. The presumption is that the Bible is not a Divine book. However, the burden of proof lies in the Bible itself; it challenges investigation, and confronts honest doubt with a confidence that ought to satisfy all candid questioning.

When a Royal message is given to a people, it is of importance that it should be accompanied by the Royal signature and seal, that everyone who has to do with it may know that it is from the King. The Bible claims to be God's Royal message to His subjects, and it is necessary that its vindication should be beyond all reasonable doubt. A supernatural book must be accompanied by supernatural attestation. The work must show the workman, and we have a right to demand that the work shall be worthy of the workman. The Bible is not a tissue of absurdities, but is infinitely worthy of its great Author.

PROPHECY AND MIRACLE.

There are two methods of attestation that are supernatural—prophecy and miracle. Each of these reveals God. The predictions of the Bible reveal omniscience, its miracles disclose omnipotence. Prophecy is particularly valuable as an attestation to Scripture, since it is permanent in its witness. Miracles belong to a distant age. Were they repeated in all ages, their very frequency would mean a diminution of their force, because the power of a miracle lies in the fact that it is an interruption in the ordinary natural process.

Having shown that prophecy is a perpetual miracle, the lecturer claimed that it is utterly impossible for any rational, candid man to examine the evidences from prophecy and cast away the Bible as a merely human book. The question is always being asked: Why is there so much doubt? To this he would reply: Because there is so much wilful ignorance. Most men spend far more time on the newspaper than their Bible, and the returns of public libraries show the trend of modern reading. There would not be a sceptic in the world if the Bible were read as other literature. It is a remarkable fact that out of the mouth of the enemy of the Word have come some of the most convincing attestations to prophecy. Among other infidel historians Gibbon contributed unconsciously and unmeaningly hundreds of pages attesting to the Word and its predictions.

Concerning the prophecies of the Bible which have been fulfilled, as well as those relating to future ages, Dr. Pierson drew attention to five characteristics of these predictions. (1) Remoteness of time, in order that there could be no attempt on the part of the one who predicted the event to bring about its fulfilment; (2) minuteness of detail, so that there would be no possibility of the fulfilment being at variance with the prophecy; (3) novelty of combination—nothing in previous history that made it possible to conjecture a like event following in the future; (4) mystery of contradiction—such apparent contradictions that it is impossible to understand the prophecy until events have brought light to the mystery; (5) perspicuous statement—clear in its general statement, so that when the event occurs there will be no ambiguity.

Dr. Pierson then recapitulated numerous prophecies concerning Israel, and showed how in subsequent history everyone, excepting those relating to future ages, have been fulfilled.

NO SIN, NO DOUBT.

How was it, he asked, that in the face of all this evidence men are sceptical regarding the Scriptures? It is because of the moral ruin of the race. Men deny the Bible because they cannot believe it, and continue comfortably in sin. Were there no sin in the world there would be no doubt. But the time of the great assize of the universe will come, and the question will be asked, "What hast thou to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon thee?" If men would but cherish the Book of God, and search its pages, they would see that every prediction has its counterpart in current events; that the prophecy and the decree came from the same mind, and the two are brought together in eternal harmony.

The Audacity of Missions.

Rev. W. R. HUNT, Nanking, China.

THE challenge of modern missions is in the straight line of its original commission. Nor are the purpose and audacity of its programme any the less urgent to-day than it was in the beginnings of its unique and daring enterprise. Until Christianity entered the arena, most religions contented themselves with a mere passive existence. The missionary spirit is the creation of the faith that has become, by universal consent, the miracle of the ages. Civilization, learning, and goodness have been invested with a new meaning by the heralds of the Cross. There is nothing strange in the fact that Christianity should claim and assert such a prerogative. Power behind any cause means force, but when this dynamic charge has behind it all the Divine omnipotence, it should be expected to do exploits.

This audacity surprised the leaders of the religious activities of the day when Jesus taught and wrought in Palestine. It followed the work and propaganda of the faith into all Asia. It has reconstructed the life and civilization of the world, and made those countries that are Christian in name and life both superior and more influential than those that are by common consent classed "heathen."

In the greatest mission fields in Asia to-day the conviction is that in a few years there will scarcely be a man of any education that will dare to be recognised among the devotees of heathenism. Japan is being re-created; China is in the refiner's pot. Her way is fraught with wonderful possibilities. Via crucis, via lucis. Edicts from the Imperial throne, calls from the high officials, reforms instituted by the governors, the new and best of all aggressive body of young men forming the "New China"—all indicate strong hopefulness as to the outcome.

The audacity of Christianity has not made it less respectful to the powers that be. Missions do not advocate rebellion. It is true in China, as in Europe, in the early days of Christianity, that the contesting faiths and forces sometimes seem to clash; but this is not outside of its programme, for it is set to dethrone injustice, exalt liberty, acclaim the truth and declaim error; and its challenge in this respect is in keeping with its charter, strength and aims.

A Promising Work in India.—Some years ago a few devoted Christians determined to make endeavours to reach the soldiers at Wellington, Nilgiris, in the hope of bringing them under the influence of the Gospel. Numbers of the troops were invited to the houses of several of those whose interest had been aroused in the effort, and as time passed on it was soon found that a permanent Home for soldiers was required. It was not until Mrs. Moore and her faithful helper Miss Fahurton arrived in India that a house was rented for this purpose. The house was used until 1900, when Miss Moore, with the help of some Christian friends, military and civilian, opened the Soldiers' Home at Wellington, close to the barracks. It affords many facilities for the improvement of the life of the soldiers when off duty; but the need for extension is already felt. It is desirable that a larger room and kitchen for refreshments should be added, as well as a house for the caretaker.

Public Morals.

THE deep-seated moral canker, to the ravages of which among all classes of society it would be folly to close our eyes, even if it were possible to do so, has been too long and too often avoided by wise speakers and writers. The retort that much harm has been wrought by indiscreet criticism is just; but in no other direction would the plea that some enthusiasts have gone too far be permitted to prevent the taking of proper action. Children soon learn that nettles must not be played with, but a great step forward from mere avoidance is made when they are shown that if the leaf be grasped firmly it is harmless. To arouse prurient curiosity may be productive of the direst results, and a grave responsibility attaches to the informing of a youthful mind on the sins of the Seventh Commandment. Yet the subject must be dealt with. The Old Testament has much indeed to say about it, and the New Testament is far from being silent. There are difficulties in the way, but they must be faced. Year by year impurity is claiming its thousands from among our fairest and brightest, and well is it that heroic men and women have risen up who will not be hushed into silence.

Two years ago, the name of Mr. James Marchant became known as the prime mover of a moral crusade in Chatham; and, through the experience gained then and subsequently, he has been led, step by step, into devoting his whole energy to the stamping out of the moral plague, from which no town or district is exempt. For some months he has been travelling up and down the country, promoting a National Purity Crusade under the auspices of the National Vigilance Association. Public feeling has been raised to a higher level in several quarters, and it is believed that the issue of a volume of papers on the subject—Public Morals (1s. Morgan & Scott)—will do much to sustain this, and to spread the movement where the voices of the special speakers cannot be heard.

In the preface, the Bishop of Rochester speaks in the highest terms of the various writers who have been enlisted, and of the book as "one which all who care for the morality of our nation would wish to read, which every reputable critic must respect, and which would be a strong reinforcement and resource to those who give thought and toil to the bettering of their country, its children, and its youth."

Different aspects of the subject are dealt with by those specially qualified to do so; and the broad catholic platform from which it is viewed gives the book claims on all. We commend it especially to those on whose souls the sin of the world presses heavily. It will put new zeal into any who have been growing weary in the battle; better, it will lead to renewed faith in God, and prayer to Him as the backbone of every effort. We believe we have only to give the names of the leading contributors—Bishop Barry, Rev. Dr. Townsend, Mr. W. A. Coote, Mr. P. W. Bunting, M.A., Rev. F. B. Meyer, Canon Lyttelton, Mrs. Ormiston Chant, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, Mrs. Bramwell Booth, Dr. Barnardo, and Blanche Leppington—to enlist warm sympathy for the book. We would only add that it well deserves the hearty support of the Christian and philanthropic public. May the mission on which it goes forth be crowned with the richest blessing of Him who knew of no hopeless class in the community, who regarded none as too foul to come into His presence.

Miss Mason's House of Rest.—Miss Mason's partial restoration to health was the subject of very hearty expressions of thanksgiving and praise at the monthly meeting at the House of Rest, St. John's Wood, on Friday last. Ten weeks had elapsed since the beginning of her illness, and that day, for the first time, she was pronounced to be practically convalescent. During the period of strain and anxiety, Miss Mason has been the subject of much prayer, and both she and her friends recognise that her so far recovery is God's loving and gracious answer to the intercessions which have been offered on her behalf in all parts of the country. Miss Mason desires it to be known how much she appreciates and values these petitions, prompted by love, and by faith in a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God.

Other Lands.

Swedish Missionary Society.

By Rev. C. J. ENGVALL.

THE Swedish Missionary Society represents one of the most marvellous religious movements that have taken place in Sweden, uniting over 1,100 churches (thirty-three joined the Society last year), with a membership of about 100,000. These churches resemble the Congregational in England. Besides an extensive and successful home mission, the Society has from the first taken a very active interest in foreign missions. It is now carrying on mission work among the Lapps in the North of Sweden; among sailors and other Scandinavians in Sunderland, London, and St. Petersburg; among Armenians, Stundists, &c., in South Russia; in China, both west and east; in North Africa, among Jews and Arabians, and on the Congo.

The Society began its first missions in Russia and on the Congo in 1880. The last-mentioned has been the most prosperous in spite of many difficulties, of which the climate has been one of the worst. Many missionaries have died; others (among them the writer of these lines) have been obliged to return home for reasons of health. In one year six missionaries died. But God has blessed the work abundantly. The Society has now on the Lower Congo seven head-stations, with over seventy out-stations.

There are thirty missionaries (ladies included) and eighty native evangelists or teachers, seventy-nine schools, and 2,571 scholars, 1,777 church-members, of whom 451 were baptized last year.

At Mukimbungu the meetings have been very well attended, and the church has often been crowded. Every fourth day a class for natives wishing to be baptized has been held, and 115 have been baptized after careful consideration. From February to April a training course for evangelists and teachers was held, with twenty-five scholars. There are now twenty-five native teachers, who are in charge of the schools at the out-stations. The church membership at the end of last year was 436.

At Nganda the meetings were in the beginning of the year very well attended, and many arose and confessed their sins. About 300 persons attended the classes held specially for those who wished to be baptized. But trials soon came. A native chief about two miles from the station was an enemy, and was encouraged by the white men at the Government station. He did all he could to hinder and undo the mission work. The consequence was that many who seemed to be not far from Christ returned to heathenism. The missionaries visited the State officer at Luazi, and succeeded in obtaining a promise that the chief, although he was the officer's favourite, should be forbidden to hinder the mission. Soon after a new officer, who was more friendly to the missionaries, was appointed, and the chief was put in prison for some crime he had committed.

NATIVE EVANGELIZATION.

At Kinkenge the work has made good progress without any disturbing interruptions. Even some of the chief heathen priests are seeking help. In the schools have been sixty-three boys, and they have made very good progress. They have been half the day in the school, and the other half they have taken part in practical work.

As Kingoyi is a new station, a great part of the time has been employed building, planting, &c. A special class has been held with nineteen natives, who wished to be baptized. At Londe the missionaries have, to a great extent, been taken up with transport and practical work. In the printing and bookbinding department, worked by natives under the supervision of the missionaries, they have been very busy the whole year. They have printed 6,000 copies of an A B C book, the same number of reading-books, 700 copies of a monthly paper, and a Congo almanac, besides some new editions of old books.

It is of great importance for the mission work at Matadi that a school and mission-house has been built. The first contribution to it was given by the English Consul-General, who happened to hear of the need of such a building. In the morning there is a school for women, and in the afternoon for men. The number of believers has increased by sixty-four. At Matadi a smaller hall has been opened as a reading-room for sailors. Many captains have expressed joy that something is being done for the men, as there are many bad places at Matadi.

Rev. K. E. Laman has finished the translation of the Old Testament into Fiote, the dialect spoken on the Lower Congo. The British and Foreign Bible Society is just now busy printing it, together with the New Testament, which has been printed in several editions at Londe, on the Congo, so the people on the Congo will, before long, for the first time have the whole Book of God in their language.

In North Africa, Dr. E. Nyström has been able to translate the Bible into the Arabian dialect spoken by people there. A small book, with texts from the New Testament, was printed, and is now scattered abroad in great numbers.

DESIGNED & DRAWN BY MAURICE GREGORY.

The Gospel in Spain.—The object for which the Spanish Religious Tract and Book Society was formed is being steadily followed, and the Gospel in all its fulness is being proclaimed with simplicity and freeness. The Word is disseminated by means of tracts, books, &c., and with these weapons corrupt Christianity is combatted and national vices attacked. In no epoch of Spanish history did the country stand in greater need of Gospel literature, of which she is all but destitute, than at the present time. The work the society has set itself to do is difficult from many points of view; but after thirty years' experience in similar endeavours, Pastor Lopez Rodriguez is more than ever convinced of its importance. The prayerful sympathy of the Lord's people will be much valued by him and Madame Lopez Rodriguez and helpers in their efforts to give to the inhabitants of priest-ridden Spain that Word the entrance of which giveth light.

Facts about India.

(See Sketch Map.)

The south-west corner of Baluchistan touches Cork, in Ireland, whilst the eastern border of Burmah touches the Caspian. The northern border of Cashmere cuts through the upper part of Sweden and Norway, whilst the island of Ceylon nearly covers Greece.

OUR very heavy responsibility as English Christians for the vast Continent of India needs to be constantly brought home to us. India contains inhabitants equal to four-fifths of the population of Europe. It is a population three times as large as that of the whole North American Continent. If the town of Winnipeg were placed on the northern border of Cashmere, the city of Mexico would be found in Ceylon, on a map drawn to the same scale. If San Francisco were placed on the western border of Baluchistan, New York would be found in eastern Burmah.

India has seventy mother-tongues, twenty of which are spoken by over a million people, seven by over ten millions, two by over forty millions, and one (Hindi) by over eighty millions. Three-fifths of the population are engaged in agriculture and live in three-quarters of a million villages. There are only seventy-seven towns in India with a population of over 50,000 inhabitants. The proportion of the population able to read and write is still very small.

The Famine in Finland.

THE following cases are typical of the state of destitution to which large numbers of the inhabitants of Finland are reduced.

The entire crop of a peasant in Kuhmoniemi, with a wife and four children, was not enough to make a single loaf of bread. He gathered two hectolitres of potatoes, all of which are already consumed. His cow has died, for the hay crop also failed. Thus the family is deprived of bread, potatoes, and milk, and even in the best of years their diet was confined to these.

An old man and woman came to Pastor Râty, chairman of the Finnish Relief Committee. They had had nothing to eat for two days, and had come a long distance to plead, not for themselves, but for the sick and aged of outlying districts, who must die if help were not speedily brought to them. The pastor had to send them empty away, his slender means for relief having been exhausted some days before.

In Sotkamo, a parish of over 8,600 inhabitants, two children have already been starved to death, and many more must soon succumb if relief does not speedily reach them.

A woman, pale, tired, and insufficiently clad came to Rev. J. D. Kilburn, at Kajama, from a distant part of the parish. The Finnish Pastor Wayrynan certified her to be a hard-working and self-respecting woman, who never before had begged, but rather had been ready to give to others. Even now she pleaded for her widowed sister and children, and the infirm in her neighbourhood, more urgently than for herself. But he had nothing to give her; and, with an empty exchequer, he sees the need rapidly increasing.

Mr. Kilburn writes: "The longer I stay in these districts, the more I am convinced that for thousands of these earnest, honest, hard-working people it is impossible that they can live except they be helped."

An Indian Priestess.

NOW and again from the great mass of India's womanhood some noble soul asserts for itself a position on the roll of fame; and we may well believe that many others, though coming short of celebrity, as accounted by human judgment, place their fellows under lasting obligation for services rendered in the fear of God. In this class we would name Chundra Lela, whose story has been told by Mrs. Ada Lee in An Indian Priestess. (1s. 6d. nett. Morgan & Scott.)

Seldom have we read so touching a tale as this of a long-continued and painful search for relief from the burden of sin. Chundra Lela's father was a wealthy landowner of princely ancestry in Nepal, but she was the child of a polygamous marriage, and was left a widow at nine years of age. Through the broad-mindedness of her father, she enjoyed the benefits of an education altogether unusual among girls even of her station; but at thirteen she was deprived of the care of this parent, and left to study the dark, sad story of Hinduism in the sacred books.

Among other promises held out to her was that of pardon for the sin which had caused widowhood, by the performance of Char dhom, the visiting and worshipping at the four great shrines situate at the cardinal points of India. She determined to do this, and everything else prescribed in the sacred books; and across mountain and plain she went, repeating incantations and counting her beads. The devotion which she threw into her pilgrimage may be gathered from the following extract from the story.

She bathed in every sacred river, and worshipped at every shrine on her way, making offerings to the idols, and giving gifts to the Brahmin priests. On the way to the first of the four great shrines she visited Calcutta, worshipping at Kalighat (the great temple from which Calcutta is named), and bathed in the Ganges. . . .

The image of the goddess is hideous in the extreme. She has a black face with a protruding tongue covered with blood, and is adorned with a necklace of skulls. She is called the "Bloody Goddess," and many goats and kids are sacrificed to her daily by her worshippers. On the regular festival days the drain about the temple is said to flow full with the blood of her victims.

Chundra Lela trudged on, and at length arrived at the first of the four great shrines—the Temple of Jagannath, in the country of Orissa. The god is ugly, and the incidents of his worship are demoralising in the extreme. The second of the shrines is Ramanath, near Ceylon, on a small island not far from Madura. Passing to the third famous temple, Dwarakanath, in the west of India, the pilgrim made further sacrifices after the manner of devotees. Lastly she reached Badrinath, in the north of the peninsula, among the snows of the Himalaya range. There it was fondly hoped that the burden of sin would be taken away. Seven years had passed since Chundra Lela left home in search of God, and not yet had she found rest and peace. Neither journeyings nor ceremonies, neither offerings nor prayers, had availed anything!

Continuing her search, she found herself at the residence of a king twenty miles from Midnapore. In the presence of the king and queen she related her moving story, and the result was that she was begged to cease wandering. The king built her a house, and gave her servants; she became a priestess of the royal household, taught the women Sanscrit, and "performed worship" for them. Thus, in luxury and honour, she lived seven years, when the king and his first queen died. Not yet, however, did she know peace of mind; so once more she began pilgrimage, determined to please the gods, whatever bodily torture or affliction it might mean. She joined herself to a body of fakirs, and for three years called upon Ram, but without response. If anyone ever "found out" the gods of the Hindus, it was Chundra Lela; at length, she came to distrust the Brahmin priests, proving them to be liars rather than holy men.

Gathering up her idols, she took them to the house of a Boostrum, a caste rather low in the scale, and left them with the woman, saying: "You may worship these if you like; I have done them homage many long weary years—all in vain. I will never worship them again. There is nothing in Hinduism, or I would have found it." She had made the acquaintance of a girl who was enjoying Christian instruction from Miss Julia Phillips, of the American Free Baptist Mission, Midnapore. Buying a Bible for eight annas (8d.), she read it day and night at first, and soon loved it so that she could not hold her peace about the treasure she had found.

After a few weeks of inquiry and instruction, the earnest seeker expressed a wish to become a Christian. Leaving all the past, and "counting not the cost," she was baptized, witnessing a good confession. She took a path of her own, and, by tact, perseverance, and Christian devotion, surmounted many obstacles, and overcame difficulties before which many would have fainted. Where she had been known as a pilgrim, she has since preached the Gospel of Christ. Among others whom she led to the Lord was her own brother. He was ill at the time, and she nursed him tenderly. The story is thus told:—

One day he called her to him, and said: "Sister, I believe in Jesus, and have been trying to serve Him ever since the teaching I had when I went to see you. Do you think He will receive and save me?"

CHUNDRA LELA.

"Certainly, brother; that is just what He died to do," said Chundra Lela.

"You think He will?" he said earnestly. "I had intended to take my family and go to Midnapore, and come out openly and be baptized and live with Christian people; but I fear now I will never live to do that. I feel my days are few, but I wish to die a Christian; and you think Jesus will receive me anyway?"

"Yes, brother; I know He will receive you now. Do you give your soul and body to Him?"

"Yes, I do; and I believe Jesus does save me. Oh, I wish I could be baptized!"

"But there are no Padre Sahibs here, brother; no, not one in all our land," said Chundra Lela, yearningly, "and how could I bring one so far?"

"You could not," said the dying man; "for there would not be time. But, Lela, you are a Christian, and you preach the Gospel. Why could you not baptise me? I do want to die a Christian.

Chundra Lela thought a moment, and looked into the face of her beloved brother, for whom she had so long prayed. She then said: "Surely God would not be angry with me for doing such a thing. When I have performed all kinds of official and priestly services before heathen gods, I surely can do this for Him." She quietly left the room, and returned, bearing in her hand a brass bowl of water. Placing it on the ground, she reverently knelt by her brother's bedside, and pouring out a heartfelt prayer to God, who had so wonderfully led and saved her, and had now answered her prayer in the salvation of her brother, she asked Him to bless the water she was about to use, and to fill her brother with the Holy Spirit. She then, still kneeling, took the water, and dipping it with her hand, poured it upon the head of her brother, saying: "My brother, I baptize you, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Amen." She bowed her head in silence, and it seems to me that during that solemn ceremony the angels, and the Saviour Himself, must have hovered over that couch, and filled that room, away there in the centre of that heathen nation, with the glory of heaven.

As she rose, a sweet smile of peace had settled upon her brother's face, who was now no longer a heathen, but a Christian. A few days later the angels made another visit to that room, and carried her brother away with them, home.

Other incidents must be sought in the book itself, which is the record of a truly apostolic life. Thank God, grace knows no distinction of race, degree, or sex. The great lesson of the book is that there is no joy on earth like that to be found in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. No reader will rise from the perusal of its pages without feeling that he has been brought into contact with a truly holy life. To young Christians we feel sure it will prove of real service as showing how the life in Christ has been lived amid great difficulty.

Lord Kinnaird has supplied an appreciative introduction, and Mrs. R. C. Morgan has appended an informing life-sketch of the author. There are many illustrations, deeply interesting and well finished.

Men Wanted in Canada.

BEFORE me is your December number, and I see accounts of large numbers of "deserving, respectable men" who are seeking work. Here in the Canadian West we are in great need of such men. We need them in railroad building, in farming, and other occupations. Many of our successful men have begun in this new country without a dollar of money, but by honest work and care have risen to be independent farmers.

We have room for great numbers of men and women who are willing to engage in honest, healthy work. Here, under safe British rule, every man and woman has a good opportunity for usefulness and success. Great numbers of far-seeing people from the United States are coming to our West, and buying up our new lands for farming, and we expect many people from across the Atlantic to come and help us to make this a good Christian country. What a pity to see accounts of people out of work, and needing food, when we have here millions of acres of rich land capable of raising abundance of food, both for man and beast!

This country has come to a time when we have before us great enterprises in railroad building, farming, ranching, &c., and our call now is for good, honest, industrious Christian men and women. There can be no doubt that our Canadian West is to become very largely "Britain's Granary of Britain."

In Christian enterprise, education, general business, farming, railroad building, and mining, &c., our West has a very encouraging outlook. The days of mere experiment and doubt are past, and in future we may expect solid and substantial growth. I know of no part of the world where industrious families and young men and women have such opportunities as we have in West Canada.

The writer volunteered for mission work in this West thirty years ago, when there was not a foot of railroad, and everything in a primitive and doubtful state. How wonderfully matters have developed, and what an encouraging prospect we now have!

Portage la Prairie. William Halstead.

Among Seamen at Naples.—Much blessing continues to attend the operations at the Sailors' Rest. Mr. Stephen Burrowes and his helpers have had encouragement in their labours during the past year by seeing a larger number of converts than has been the case in any twelve months since the work was commenced. The fact that over 6,000 copies of the Scriptures in various languages have been circulated by the colporteurs in one year is in itself sufficient to call forth praise to God.

Belgian Missionary Church.—Rev. Henri Anet, representing this well-known agency, is on a brief visit to Great Britain, to interest friends in evangelistic work in Belgium. There are in connection with the organization thirty-five congregations, composed of converts from Romanism, thirty-six pastors and fifteen evangelists and colporteurs, sixty-five churches and halls, and seventy-five Sunday schools. M. le Pasteur Anet will be glad to tell the story of the work for the information of British supporters. Letters for him may be addressed to the care of Rev. C. Anderson Scott, 19, Russell Road, Kensington, W.

Mr. B. H. Gerrans,

THE STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

UNTIL the year 1785, "when George the Third was king," no society existed for assisting the suffering poor in a systematic manner. In that year, however, Dr. John Gardner, of Highbury Place, N., had his heart stirred by witnessing much sickness among the poor, which appeared to be largely due to want of food and warmth. This so impressed him that he determined upon trying to meet the need in some measure. Taking his wife and a few neighbours into his counsel, he started a relief fund upon which the sick poor of all creeds and nationalities, residing in London, should have a claim for assistance. It soon proved to be "as a grain of mustard seed," for from this small beginning sprang The Benevolent, or Strangers' Friend, Society.

JOHN WESLEY A SUBSCRIBER.

This was followed by branches that spread to many other cities and towns; and to-day not only in Great Britain but beyond are to be found offshoots in active operation. Indeed, there is a Strangers' Friend Society even in far-off Honolulu.

One of the first subscribers to Dr. Gardner's effort was John Wesley, who promised threepence per week, and paid a guinea in advance. The work quickly became so great a power for good that large sums were placed at the disposal of the committee, and it was honoured with the benefactions and patronage of Royalty.

A perusal of the old records of the Society affords an interesting glimpse of the social conditions of England a hundred years ago. In the annual report for 1803, for example, are pathetic accounts of the sorrows of the very poor, and there, too, we find evidence of the lofty principles of the directors and of their determination that the Society should be actively spiritual as well as philanthropic.

A CHRISTIAN ORGANIZATION.

The Society still employs no fewer than 150 men and women visitors. They belong to various sections of the Christian Church (as do the members of the committee of management), and all of them devote many hours every week, without fee or reward, in ministering to the necessities of the afflicted poor. They work under the direction of several district committees, which are under the supervision of the general secretary. In addition to the amounts they receive for distribution, the visitors frequently supplement the Society's relief by personal gifts, and their practical sympathy and simple Gospel teaching have had encouraging results. In thousands of instances the labours of these self-denying workers have been accompanied by the Divine blessing. Conviction has followed instruction, and they have seen the tear of repentance flow, and witnessed the hope of everlasting life cheering the departing hours of many, in whose happy experience penitential sorrow had given place to faith in the promises, and peace and joy in believing.

CARE IN ADMINISTRATION.

It is not the design of the organization to relieve the poor indiscriminately, since this would inevitably tend to encourage vagrancy and crime. Experience has shown the necessity of distinguishing between cases of actual want, and the feigned distress of artful and designing persons, who, by their fabricated tales of woe, so often succeed in imposing on the humane and benevolent. Each case of distress is made the subject of personal inquiry at the habitation of the applicant, and no relief is given till, by full investigation, the real facts are satisfactorily ascertained; there is thus every security that the funds are distributed amongst truly deserving objects of charity, and not wasted on the idle and profligate.

It would be an easy matter to fill a volume with striking instances of effective work. One or two cases, however, will suffice to illustrate the character of the Society's operations. Here are two from recent reports:

HELPING A POOR WIDOW.

One cold winter's day, a visitor in the Poplar district found in a back room a poor young widow, weak and helpless. The place was very clean, though neither food nor fire were there. Hers was a sad story. Six years previously her husband left home one day at four o'clock in the morning for work, as a lighterman, and at seven was dead, having been accidentally drowned. She, poor creature, was suffering from heart weakness, and as long as she was able to crawl about, earned a precarious living for herself and child by needlework of the worst-paid kind. The Society supplied nourishment and other necessaries, and afterwards got her admitted into a hospital, and later a convalescent home, where she remained until well enough to enter afresh upon life's struggle.

WORK AND BOOTS.

A bricklayer's labourer, living in East London, fell from some scaffolding and broke his arm. After a month's suffering, the poor fellow lost the limb by amputation. Early and late did the wife toil at her sewing machine, for she was a shirt-maker. With close work and inadequate pay, what could she do for her husband? One by one the articles that could best be spared from the scantily-furnished home were "put away"; and bravely did the woman work till her own strength failed, and at the time attention was attracted to her needs she was completely prostrate. Medical aid was called in, and food and necessaries supplied to the helpless creature and her four little children. Subsequently a place as night watchman was secured for the man. But he was without boots, and how could the money for them be earned? "I lay awake all night thinking about it," said the plucky wife to our visitor, "and the only thing I can do is to 'put away' my own boots. But then," she added, in a despairing tone, "how can I take my work home and bring fresh from the factory." The problem was solved by the visitor procuring the needed boots. And now this poor, but thankful, woman may be found a sincere worshipper, joining in praise and prayer at the throne of grace.

INVESTIGATION WORK.

Another very important service is that rendered to subscribers, who wish to be their own almoners, but desire to be first guided by the investigation of the visitors as to the bona-fides of the persons they propose to relieve. Friends who desire counsel in this direction will do well to communicate with the Secretary at the offices of the Society, 72, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

MR. B. H. GERRANS.

For twenty-one years Mr. B. H. Gerrans has filled the secretaryship with conspicuous ability and devotion. Since the days of early youth, he has been a humble follower of the Lord. Deep impressions received at Sunday-school, and from the godly leader of a Bible-class, had their effect in leading out the young seeker after truth into the light of God. The needs of young men were keenly felt by our friend, and in addition to his later toil in connection with the Strangers' Friend Society, he has been enabled so to encourage a number of young men into active Christian service that they have been able to build up some causes and "turn many to righteousness" among the dwellers in some of the poorer districts of the metropolis. With a ripe experience and an increased love for the things of God, Mr. Gerrans' delights are in the house of prayer and the evangelistic meeting.

PRESENT NEEDS.

The claims upon the Strangers' Friend Society are constant, for illness, whether occurring in winter or summer, too frequently finds the sufferers in a position needing help. The deserving poor, though generally very reticent in speaking of their troubles to a mere official inquiry agent, readily talk of their circumstances and sorrows to neighbours and friends, and as the Society's helpers are mostly of the people and live amongst them, they readily get at the true facts of the cases, so that there is little fear of funds being unwisely dispensed. Yet the continued usefulness of the Society is imperilled by a considerable falling off in its income through the death of old subscribers, or from reverses, compelling the dropping of their charitable contributions. It is to be hoped, however, that so excellent an organization will be enabled to maintain its efforts in the highest interests of the poor and suffering. The treasurer is the Right Hon. Sir Joseph C. Dimsdale, Bart., M.P., and its chairman is Mr. Henry Swaffield, of Sevenoaks, who has given much service to the work for the last forty-five years.

We cordially commend this "Good Samaritan" work to the practical sympathy of our readers.

The Late Sir George Stokes, Bart.

MASTER OF PEMBROKE COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, WHO DIED FEBRUARY 1, 1903, AGED 84.

"The undevout astronomer is mad!"
Wrote one of old.
We read the broad announcement, and are glad—
So true, so bold;
To miss the Hand which every orb controls,
Were utter folly to all thoughtful souls.

Another savant dies, of wondrous skill,
And grasps of mind;
Whose wont it was to sit on Zion's hill,
With joy to find
A Power Unseen, which helped him to survey
The world unveiled, in all its grand array.

Declare the science which he did not know?
No voice replies.
With wisdom's flood he seemed to overflow,
And ever rise;
Yet reverent still, he e'er with fervour glowed,
And science proved the handiwork of God.

Thrice happy he who seeks no higher fame
Than to adore,
And bring new lustre to his Master's name,
From human lore;
To humbly grasp the wellnigh infinite,
And own 'tis Heaven's, not the creature's, light.

ALBERT MIDLANE.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

FIRST WEEK OF THE SCOTTISH CAMPAIGN.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.)

THE measure of outward success which followed the work of the evangelists last week was a cause of praise to God, not only by themselves, but by the local friends. Before the middle of the week, Dr. Torrey had publicly returned thanks for the spirit of unanimity shown by the ministers and Christian workers of the city belonging to all denominations, for the evident awakening of interest among church members and outsiders, and for the great crowds who were coming to hear the Gospel preached. The presence of the Fisk Jubilee Singers on Sabbath evening of last week introduced an additional attraction, which made it more difficult to tell, for the time being, how far the people were really interested in the evangelistic campaign itself; and the public reception on Monday afternoon partook more of the character of an ecclesiastical function than the usual services.

BORNE UP BY PRAYER.

Monday evening's audience made it at once apparent, however, that greater things, in the matter of attendances at least, were to be realised than the best at Mildmay. Long, earnest, continued prayer had been answered; and there was no slackening of the intercession for the salvation of the people of Edinburgh and of Scotland. Dr. Torrey seemed to feel the support of being in the midst of such a great body of praying people, and of knowing that there stood behind him a loyal band of helpers. The hall was filled with an audience representing all ages and every class of society. Remarks heard during the week, and other evidences, showed that working-men and others, who were out of touch with any Christian organization, were present in considerable numbers. They came to hear, and their very expressions of disapproval were cause for thankfulness that the Spirit of God is working. They have at least been shaken out of the terrible indifference which is not even sufficiently concerned to object; and much prayer is being made that they may not be able to resist the Spirit who is striving to guide them into the light.

The preaching of the Word was with great power. As the elementary truths about the fact and majesty of God were driven home, and compared with the smallness of man and his works, a hush fell on all present. The daring frankness of the speaker, combined with the unmistakable note of personal earnestness, carried conviction where there had been cavilling and objection. The spirit of prayer was given richly as Rev. John M. Sloan and Dr. Torrey led.

Mr. Alexander is using every means at his disposal to organize the singing. In addition to the training of the regular choir, he asked that young men would congregate in the side galleries, so as practically to form male-voiced choirs; and recalled the excellent help received in this department in Calcutta from a body of soldiers, more than a dozen of whom gave their hearts to the Lord during the mission. One of the first persons to speak to Dr. Torrey at Mildmay was the mother of two of these young men, who had heard by post, with much joy, what things the Lord had wrought in her family, and could not refrain from coming forward to express her feelings of gratitude.

A touching note was a request for prayer for "a man well past middle life, who knows the bitterness of sorrow and disappointment, without the consolation that Christ alone can give; who has experienced the emptiness and foolishness of a life spent without Christ, and who has a knowledge of Scripture without a knowledge of God."

CONDITIONS OF PERSONAL WORK.

After leaving the Synod Hall, Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander went to take part in a rally of Christian Endeavour Societies, held in St. George's United Free Church. The preacher assured the members that he very seldom received such an invitation without accepting it. Speaking for the United States, he regarded the activity of young people as one of the most hopeful signs of the present day; and, so far as his observation had gone, the Christian Endeavour organizations often formed the backbone of the church. Pointing to the Apostle Andrew as an excellent example (John i. 41, 42) in the doing of such personal work as the societies are well fitted to foster, Dr. Torrey named as the conditions of success (1) being truly converted themselves; (2) being absolutely surrendered to God; (3) studying the Bible, for there is only one instrument provided for use in the work.

THREE MINUTES A DAY IN PRAYER!

On Tuesday Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander went by special invitation, conveyed through Professor Alexander Martin, to the students' dinner at the New College of the United Free Church, where they received a very warm and cordial reception. For that day the Synod Hall was not available for the meetings, and St. George's United Free Church was used. In the afternoon the closest possible attention was given as Dr. Torrey dealt with some of the aspects of the great subject of prayer. Some were not prepared to assent when he showed that he had some personal sympathy at least with the estimate that the average minister does not spend more than five minutes a day in prayer, while the average church member does not exceed three minutes on his knees before God. For the benefit of those who demurred, he related the startling results with which several of his friends had put the matter to the test in their own individual experience. The address bristled with far-reaching sayings, such as—"Yet every spiritual blessing is to be obtained in answer to prayer. If we had a practical belief that prayer could do much, we would do much more praying than we do. Our growth will be just in proportion to the time and earnestness of prayer."

When evening came, Free St. George's was found quite inadequate, and St. Thomas' Episcopal Church was used for an overflow audience. The evangelistic workers of the city were present in great numbers, evidently taking advantage of the presence of the well-known leader in aggressive effort to receive a message from God, and to observe his methods of winning souls for the Master. In some cases friends and relatives had been induced to attend who had long been the subject of intercession and effort. The gathering was obviously composed almost entirely of church members, leaders and prominent adherents of the various denominations being present, side by side with the younger generation, on whom the responsibility is falling. Those who were well acquainted with the city could trace in the pews the fruits of more than one former time of blessing in the city.

THE TRULY WISE MAN AND WHAT HE DOES.

Dr. Torrey took as his subject, "The Wisdom of Soul Winning" (Prov. xi. 30). His two main points were that (1) a wise man is a soul-winner), and (2) it takes a wise man to be a soul-winner. Soul-winning ought to be the business of life with every Christian, because (1) that is the business that Jesus Christ has commanded us to do (Matt. xxviii. 19); (2) it was the business of life of Jesus Christ Himself (Luke xix. 10); (3) it is the work in which we enjoy the unspeakable privilege of the fellowship of the Son of God—"Go you My way, and I will go yours"; (4) it is the work in which we enjoy the fulness of the Holy Spirit's presence and power; (5) it is the most beneficent work that any man can do (John v. 20); (6) it is the work that brings the most abundant and glorious reward (Daniel xii. 4).

Early in the week an evening newspaper began to draw a comparison between the circumstances now, and the state of affairs in 1873 when Mr. Moody visited the city; and declared the change wrought by the Higher Criticism of Scripture and intellectual progress to be such that the only class of society now influenced by evangelists is that among which the Salvation Army works—the lowest of all. But this was contradicted by events very speedily, and on Wednesday, at the noon prayer meeting held in Carrubbers Close Mission Hall, it was reported that in some of the large business houses the non-Christian young men were already showing a decided interest in the movement, and making inquiries as to the meetings from their believing companions.

"GET RIGHT WITH GOD."

Special prayer was made on Wednesday afternoon for the medical students of the city generally, as well as for specified individuals; and in this connection Dr. Torrey mentioned that in Madras the converts included more medical students than any other class, excepting possibly soldiers. At this meeting Mr. Alexander introduced the card which had been used with excellent effect elsewhere: "Get right with God," and thousands were readily taken by those who undertook to make good use of them by distribution, by fastening up in their own houses or offices, and by enclosing in letters. Continuing to deal with the subject of prayer, Dr. Torrey presented the idea of talking with God with much solemnity.

Rev. William Ross, who had taken a large and much-appreciated share in the preparatory services, was on the platform on Wednesday evening, and led in prayer. Dr. Torrey smiled meaningly as he recalled how when Mr. Moody came back to America in "the seventies" he mentioned, among things he had noticed, that Scotch people always carried their Bibles with them to meetings. Judging from his own experience, Dr. Torrey had concluded that times must have changed; but appealed for a revival of the old time practice. Reading 1 John iii., he stopped at the words, "We shall be like Him," to tell the story of a drunkard whom he had laboured to save in America. The man went down before temptation again, and again, and again; but Dr. Torrey was convinced that he had the root of the matter in him, and believed that he would some day get his feet on the rock firmly. Later experience justified the confidence; and "that poor drunkard will one day be so like Jesus Christ that you will hardly be able to tell the difference."

A PRETEXT FOR SCEPTICISM.

Despite the criticism of a section of the local Press, Dr. Torrey continued his trenchant denunciation of the unwarranted assumptions of so-called scientific writers and speakers. "Science," he said, "is often a pretext for scepticism: sin is its cause." To a very different class he was quite as candid, for he sees all round, and spares neither friend nor open enemy when there is an evil to be exposed or a flaw in the armour to be pointed out! "When you go fishing, you have to leave your dignity behind; and a preacher is a fisher." One of what were regarded as his too freely expressed questions was, "Are you a child of God, or a child of the devil?" On one occasion, at Ballarat he had hesitated to put it, but was led to do so. On the following evening about a dozen Chinamen filed into the inquiry-room, and announced that they had given their hearts to Christ, one of them explaining that this question had startled them into a determination to be different.

A decided breakdown of the former icy reserve manifested itself, and for the first time during the week the Pillar Hall, used as an inquiry-room, presented a busy scene. Genuine seekers came, burdened with a newly-awakened sense of sin, asking what they must do to be saved.

SCOTTISH KNOWLEDGE OF SCRIPTURE.

The actual knowledge of the letter of Scripture still possessed by the young people of the Scottish working and middle classes makes the teaching of the Spirit and the appeals of the evangelist alike more quickly effective than might otherwise be possible. Helpers in dealing with the anxious find that in the memory to which they can appeal with confidence. The young converts realise that what they learned as a task becomes a great cause of joy, and that the formerly despised knowledge of the Word gives real strength while they are digging deeper in the mine of Divine truth.

On Thursday afternoon Mr. Alexander introduced his "Bible-Readings from the Heart," and the text repetition was taken up most readily, the elderly people seeming to enter into it with special zest. Dr. Torrey mentioned, with heart-felt affection, that the day was the anniversary of Mr. Moody's birth (February 5, 1837); and read over several specimens from a roll of the requests for prayer presented at the Noon Prayer Meeting, January 17, 1874, when Mr. Moody was in the city. The only comment made on them was, "They sound a good deal like the requests we get nowadays!"

A general smile was caused in the evening by Mr. Alexander's remark, "You men are letting the women do all the singing, just as you do with the church work. Come now, wake up, and take your fair share both of the singing and the work"; and if his words have the same effect in the latter case as they had in the former, Edinburgh will know the difference. Dr. Torrey was specially touched by one case of a young orphan lady, who described herself as comfortably off, and who had several times been very near conversion, but had always been turned aside by friends. Her sense of need caused her at times to feel depressed, and she was constantly unhappy because she was not saved. Again there was good work to be done in the inquiry-room, and the conversation of some young workmen as they left, was better proof than even their assurances to the workers, that they had undergone a vital change.

PRAYER FOR CHILDREN ANSWERED.

Friday proved stormy, but the attendance was well maintained. Speaking again on Prayer Dr. Torrey urged a belief in the simplicity of the Bible, "the plain man's Book." A mother testified to blessings received in her family in 1874. During Mr. Moody's mission she and her husband sent a request for prayer for their three children, who were all soon after brought to the Lord. A son who was born after that time had been gentle and obedient for many years, and seemed a Christian child; but since he grew up and went out into the world, he has thrown over the Christian faith, and calls himself an atheist. Pleading the old promises, and with the same simple faith as twenty-nine years ago, the mother asks that he may be brought nigh.

DEALING WITH CRITICS.

When reading a passage from Hebrews on Friday evening, Dr. Torrey stopped and told how, in his own church, he had once asked a reporter, "Are you a Christian?" The answer was, "I am not what you would call a Christian, I suppose." "Well, what kind are you?" "I am a Unitarian." "You do not believe that Jesus Christ was a Divine Person, and ought to be worshipped?" "No, I don't, and the Bible nowhere says He ought to be." "Will you please read Heb. i. 6?" Dr. Torrey read the verse to him, and the man asked, "Is that in the Bible? My minister said there was no place in the Bible which said that Jesus Christ ought to be worshipped."

After attending several meetings a man came up to Dr. Torrey, and assured him that all the leading scholars had given up the Johannine authorship of the Gospel of John. "My friend," was the retort, "you do not know what you are talking about." The man had only been talking from hearsay, and before long admitted his ignorance. "It is the old argument, 'Have any of the rulers believed in Him?' But He was the Son of God, whether they did or not." The word "therefore" (Heb. ii. 1) makes the whole argument depend on the fact that Jesus Christ was such a wonderful person, that He was Divine.

Arrangements have been completed for a third meeting each day, from one to two p.m.,

FOR MEN ONLY.

Dr. Torrey mentioned the fact that gatherings of business men were the most characteristic feature of the mission in Australia. In Sydney the great hall was filled every day, large numbers of business men and members of both Houses of Parliament going without their midday meal for sixteen days in order to attend—"and Sydney is said to be a worldly city!" He intends to devote the first week to the discussion of "Reasons Why I believe the Bible is the Word of God;" and during the second week to deal with "Infidelity: its Causes, Consequences, and Cure," followed by "Did Jesus Christ Rise from the Dead?" Questions will be invited, and, while no guarantee could be given as to answers—"possibly," says the evangelist, "we cannot, but I think we can!"

SUMMING UP THE WEEK.

The burden of the closing address for the week was the appalling guilt and consummate folly of neglecting salvation. The fact that these press equally on all was insisted on. "The plainest man in the street, who knows the power of the Spirit experimentally, is a better authority on the matter than a man full of Greek and Hebrew, who does not know God."

The faithfulness with which the truth of God has been presented has left a very solemn impression; and, in the words of one well-known worker: "the common feeling is that the preaching is so manifestly done in the power of the Spirit of God that the minds of hearers were lifted above the personality of the preacher and heard a message from heaven."

The deep hush during Dr. Torrey's addresses has been remarked upon, as well as the quietness and gravity with which the audiences disperse. In this way believers of experience find a return to the old-time solemnity of public worship in Scotland, which provided an atmosphere for profitable meditation on the things of God.

A MOTLEY COMPANY.

After Saturday's rest, the second week of the mission began early on Sabbath morning with the gathering at the Free Breakfast for the Poor, so long and intimately associated with the name of the late Mr. Robert Wilson. Eight or nine hundred men and women—the outcast, the criminal, the degraded, and those whose only crime in the eyes of the world is their poverty—were presided over by Mr. W. Farmer Brown. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander at once proved that they were familiar with such surroundings, and showed that the souls of the waifs and strays are as dear to them, and to their Lord, as are those of more respectable society. "Whosoever will," sang Mr. Alexander, and then in frank, winning tones, asked, "Now who is left out when you come to that?" A text on the wall, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost," suggested the singing of "The ninety and nine," which revived old memories, the look on many faces showing that in better days the words had been familiar. Naturally in such a nondescript company, there were a few malcontents, but the great mass listened to the Gospel story with rapt attention, and a goodly number were dealt with at the close.

UNIVERSITY STUDENTS FOR CHRIST.

Rain fell heavily all day on Sabbath, sometimes in torrents; but twice over the Empire Theatre, in Nicolson Street, was filled by excellent audiences. The address to women in the afternoon was productive of splendid results, the thanksgiving for souls born again coming spontaneously from all parts of the building. In the most brotherly fashion Dr. Torrey seemed to enter into the needs of the other sex, and the Lord Jesus Christ, as held up by him, attracted many to Himself. When evening came, the attendance of men exceeded all expectation, passages and doorways being pressed into service as standing accommodation. The occasions have been very few indeed when it has been the privilege of any public speaker to confront in Edinburgh such a sea of strong, intelligent faces.

Taking advantage of the fact that his audience was unmixed, Dr. Torrey dealt with the subject of "Sin," with frank and pointed reference to the temptations and dangers of men. The first gallery was entirely filled with students from the University, invited through Professor A. R. Simpson, and the scenes witnessed after the address will be long remembered, at least by those who saw them from the front. In asking for an indication from any who had decided to yield themselves to Christ, Dr. Torrey explained that he quite sympathized with those who thought it better to take such a step quietly. Alone with God the decision is all right, but it does not count for so much. Taken publicly it affects others, and, instead of counting for one, may kindle a conflagration.

To illustrate the point, he recounted the circumstances of his own conversion, at the time when he was ready to leave Yale University. He had been known as a drinker, swearer, and card-player; and the temptation was to slip away, without saying anything, to avoid talk. But God led him to go round the college, and tell the men what the Lord had done for him. Twenty-five years after he attended a re-union of his class; and had the privilege of talking about Christ to judges, senators, governors of States, and other leading citizens, who thanked him for it. This, he believed, would have been impossible had he sneaked out of Yale without confessing Christ openly.

CONFESSION THE PATH OF SAFETY.

A large number of men rose in all parts of the theatre, but the most conspicuous breakaway was among the students. Manly, determined-looking fellows, who had never done so before, rose to rank themselves on the Lord's side; and from among the crowd farther back, who were standing for lack of seats, hands were thrust up to indicate that they, too, were to be reckoned. Dr. Torrey spoke of the step as enlistment for a war against sin, and the men who came out on Sabbath evening were of the stuff which makes good soldiers. While the great step involved much, the way into life itself was a simple one, with few steps. Anxious, too, that all should give audible utterance to their newly-found faith, Dr. Torrey asked them to stand and express together their acceptance of Christ as Saviour, Lord, and Master. It is intended later to organize a men's band for work in the city, and it is believed that the nucleus of it has already been found in this company of young men.

Mr. Alexander spoke a few hearty sentences, showing that he in no way under-rated the seriousness of the battle which lay in front in each life. The first guarantee of safety he found in open confession at the very outset. "I don't care if it takes you all day to-morrow to tell people of the change, the time will be well spent. If you get your mouth open right away, and let every one who knows you know that you have taken the step definitely, it won't be half as hard." Admitting that he had not expected to see so many, he said, "Why should we not set fire to Scotland, and begin right here to-night?"

Some of Mr. Alexander's homely words of counsel call for quotation. "When you feel that you are in temptation, hum the little chorus—

Ask the Saviour to help you,
Comfort, strengthen, and keep you.

"When you have an inclination to pray, always pray, if it is forty times a day. Be much in prayer. Get a hold of the Word of God, and freeze right on to it. Have a copy of at least the New Testament always in your pocket; not just in your Sunday clothes, but when you change, let it change too.

"Choose the church where you can get and do the most good; but be sure you join a church. Be a soul-winner, if you are never anything else. You will find very few who want to shine in winning souls all the time. You have a chance here to distinguish yourselves."

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Gipsy Smith at Brighton.

A MISSION on more than a usually large scale was held here last week, the rallying point being the Dome, and the missioner Gipsy Smith. "London-by-the-Sea," as this cosmopolitan watering-place is popularly called, stands high on the pinnacle of privilege, so far as religious movements are concerned, and its worldly attractions on the one hand, together with its Ritualistic notoriety on the other, make occasional missions a matter of necessity to supplement and strengthen the Evangelical work that is normally carried on. It is not an easy place to "move" or to arouse to anything like a pitch of enthusiasm; but the hearts of Christian workers have been greatly cheered during these days of evident anxiety to listen to the Gospel message from the lips of this honoured servant of God.

Of course there is a halo of romance about the Gipsy's life and work which naturally proves an attraction, even to those who absent themselves habitually from spiritual gatherings; but these are the very people whom it is the most desirable (if also the most difficult) to reach. The great Dome seats 3,000 persons, but it has proved its utter incapacity to accommodate the crowds that surged towards it night after night, and many hundreds have been doomed to disappointment.

There is a definite ring about the evangelist's preaching which brings home Divine truth with great force, and presents with unmistakable emphasis the claims of God upon the hearts of men. The ethical necessity of consistent Christian living is kept well to the fore, and while personal faith in a living Saviour is insisted upon as the essential element for salvation, the missioner urges that this must have far-reaching results in obedience to Christ as Lord.

The number of enquirers dealt with has run from scores to hundreds, and if only a reasonable percentage of these become true followers of Jesus, a power for good in the world will have been set in motion, which must develop into important and hopeful issues. The call to slack members of churches to more whole-hearted service has been heard, and apparently responded to, by a very large number, and this alone was worth all the effort that has been put forth.

It is felt that the work must not be allowed to end here, and much earnest thought is being given as to how it may most effectively be followed up. The fact that the mission was promoted by the Free Church Council has secured the active interest of ministers and others (including members of the Church of England who look above denominational barriers), who might have been less intimately concerned had an independent evangelist been engaged. Thus a wide sphere for further aggressive effort has been opened up, supported by the earnest prayers of those who watch, and wait, and work for the coming of the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. C. W. Lepper in Lanarkshire.

In these days when those who love the Lord are anxiously looking for tokens of blessing, it is encouraging to be able to report that a very helpful fifteen days' mission has just been concluded in the United Free Church, Glenboig, Lanarkshire, conducted by Mr. Charles W. Lepper, of Belfast. The mission was marked by signs of blessing from the start. The impressions deepened each evening, and not a few decided for Christ. Towards the close of the mission the people seemed reluctant to leave when the benediction was pronounced, and appeared as if they could have listened to the grand old story of redeeming love for hours. A notable feature of the mission was the hold the "good news" had upon the young. Many of the young lads and girls have given their hearts to Christ. Mr. Lepper preached three times on the Sundays, one of the services being for the young people. The meetings were held every evening during the week, and notwithstanding the stormy weather which prevailed were very well attended. The presence and power of God were manifest in each meeting, and much help was experienced by the Lord's own people, while great blessing was brought to the unconverted, many of whom are now clothed and in their right mind, sitting at the feet of Jesus. The Christian workers are greatly cheered and encouraged, as the mission was preceded by much prayer and expectation. D. G.

Bethany Hall, Glasgow.

Right throughout the month of January, Mr. William Thomson, Jun., was hard at work in Bethany Hall, under the auspices of the United Evangelistic Association, setting forth by the aid of limelight the way of salvation in pictorial form. The services were very largely attended from beginning to end, and large numbers professed to receive Christ as their Saviour and Lord.

Mr. P. McRostie, the superintendent of the Mission, formerly a student at the Bible Training Institute, is a young fellow of great promise, and under his able management, the good work of winning men for Christ is successfully and continuously carried on. Mr. Thompson's special mission has been in a field well prepared, and the harvest on that account has been all the greater. The district is a thickly-populated working-class one, in which families are crowded together in four-storey blocks, twelve or fourteen families, sometimes more, entering together. But all around, as the result of the good work, both stated and special, that goes on in Bethany Hall, numbers of men and women are to be met with, amid inauspicious and undesirable surroundings "shining for Jesus." Temperance Work.

The inaugural mission in Scotland of a "World-wide Pledge Signing Crusade" was conducted in Campbeltown by Mr. Tennyson Smith from January 21 to 28. There are no fewer than twenty distilleries in the town, and it was therefore "carrying the war into the enemy's country." The meetings were held in the Drill Hall, a building seating easily 1,200 people. Night after night the place was packed, hundreds having to stand. Over a thousand pledges were taken.

In connection with the recent Gospel Temperance Mission promoted at All Souls', Langham Place, W., by Rev. F. S. Webster, 150 total abstinence pledges were taken.

Miss Glover in Linlithgow.

We have been favoured with a return visit from this earnest and devoted young lady. Last spring she conducted a fortnight's meetings in the Congregational Church with such marked effect that we arranged for another mission, which was held from January 11 to February 1. Notwithstanding the unusually stormy weather which prevailed nearly the whole time, the meetings were the best attended ever held by this church, and many visible signs of the Spirit's workings were vouchsafed. Sinners were converted, some of them very notable examples of the power of the Gospel. On the closing Sabbath evening the chapel was crowded, and on the Monday a social meeting closed the mission, when many precious testimonies were given to blessing received. J. C.

Metropolitan Hall, Dublin.

A ten days' mission of an encouraging character has just been concluded by Rev. J. Stuart Holden in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin. Two meetings were held each week day, except Saturday, a Bible reading in the afternoon, and an evangelistic service in the evening, and on the Sundays two evangelistic services were conducted. All the services were well attended, and the interest continued to deepen till the close. The Bible readings were greatly enjoyed by large congregations, and the emphasis laid by Mr. Holden upon the Apostle's question to the Ephesians, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" has drawn the attention of many of the Lord's people. A deep impression has been made by the services, and many warm testimonies were given to the blessing received. There was a beautiful spirit of Christian unity manifested throughout; ministerial representatives of all Protestant denominations took part. M.

Mr. C. E. Barraclough at Dumfries.

An esteemed correspondent writes: "A fortnight's mission has has just closed in the Maxwelltown Mission Hall (Minister, Rev. R. G. Macintyre, B.D.). A good deal of earnest work was done in preparation for the Mission, and from the opening night the hall was full. This was Mr. Barraclough's first visit to Dumfries, but from the beginning he caught the attention of the audience. His bright, earnest addresses went right home to the hearts of the people. His loyalty to the evangelic message, the absence of 'fads,' and the desire that the work should be thorough, make his services specially acceptable to the ordinary church organization. The work deepened night by night; in the district served by the mission hall a real awakening has taken place. In the last three nights of the mission about thirty men and women came forward of their own accord and professed conversion. Others no doubt have made similar decision, while all have been stirred to fuller consecration, and backsliders have been brought back to their first love."

Mr. Henry Thorne at Ampthill.

Mr. Henry Thorne has just completed a ten-days' mission in the Union Chapel, Ampthill. Bible readings were given every afternoon, and evangelistic services held at night. Throughout the mission the interest in the meetings deepened, and Mr. Thorne's earnest addresses were followed with close attention. The Bible readings were particularly appreciated, and altogether a gracious influence rested upon the services. On Friday, 23 Jan., Mr. Thorne delivered his lecture, entitled, "From the Stage to the Cross: or, the Story of My Life," which was listened to by a crowded audience with great interest. A special meeting for men only was held on Lord's Day afternoon, one result being that the pastor of the church has been asked to conduct a "men's own" service every Sunday afternoon. To this he gladly agreed. Twenty years ago Mr. Thorne visited Ampthill under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., the memory of which visit is fragrant to-day not only in Ampthill, but in many other places. Mr. Thorne has been pleased to meet at these services some of those who received blessing at that time, and to hear of others who are now preaching the Gospel in other parts of the country. Charles V. Pike, Pastor.

Blessing in Queensland.

In a recent letter concerning the work of grace which continues to go on in Queensland, writing from Brisbane, on December 18, Mr. Andrew Stewart says:

"From every part of the State where our men are, or have been, good tidings come. Rev. Mr. Davidson has just returned from the north with a wonderful tale of revival, the movement being the greatest he has seen, and the tide is rolling on. Mr. Cumming is still north, and letters from ministers tell of work planned for him there. He is very happy and hopeful.

"In Brisbane the work moves forward. Mr. Hugh Paton has had ten weeks' tent work, and is now at his fourth centre. God has given him great favour with ministers and people. From all around there come requests for missions, and from the big city churches for pulpit supply.

"We are at present busy with a mission in a suburban district, Milton. The work is organized by a Congregational Church. We work on in different places until March, when we hope to have a great united effort in the most central hall in the city, Messrs. Paton, Davidson, and I all busy, with probably other workers helping. It is the climax of two years' incessant labour. We trust it may shake the city, and from Brisbane reach all the State, and move over Australia. We are praying every day at noon for blessing, and shall continue to do so. Will friends kindly join with us?

"A new worker, Mr. James Ferguson, sails on Februrary 12. Prayer is asked for his voyage, arrival, and settlement in Queensland."

Rev. Fred H. King has just concluded an eight days' mission at the Peckham Rye Baptist Tabernacle, which has been attended with much blessing to both the saved and unsaved.

Mr. William Collard is conducting a mission at Newtown, Norwood. The neighbourhood has been stirred by open-air meetings and processions; many rough characters have attended the meetings, and some have sought the Saviour.

Mr. William Forbes is continuing his labours in the provinces in the interests of theatrical women. The last meetings held were at Dublin, when a large number of performers came together. After tea, Mr. Forbes gave an address, and "marked" Testaments were distributed.

Mr. James Wharton has met with much encouragement at Atlanta, Ga., where he has conducted services for negroes at the (coloured) Congregational Church. On the Lord's Day there were deep impressions, and, with several days of the mission still to come, more than 200 inquirers had been helped.

At John Street Primitive Methodist Chapel, Sheffield, a twelve days' mission has been conducted by Mr. E. P. Telford. Extensive preparations were made for the services, thousands of homes being visited by a band of workers. Night after night men and women have yielded themselves to the Saviour, and the work continues to spread.

Mr. John Coates, of the Ross Evangelistic Mission, has just concluded an eight days' mission in the Congregational Chapel, Brierley. The meetings have been crowded, and the message was delivered clearly and simply. Many who were in the dark paths of sin and wickedness have been brought out into the light and liberty which is found in Christ. Albert Gibbs.

Standburn Congregational Church Forward Home Mission and Temperance Movement has just concluded a fortnight's special evangelistic effort. The evangelist was Mr. A. Y. McGregor, of Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh, who speedily proved himself to be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Much blessing and abiding fruit remain from the mission.

D. H. Ritchie Snaddon, Minister.

NEWTON ABBOT.

THANKFULNESS to God is expressed by those who have had to do with the mission at Newton Abbot, Devonshire, of Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones. This visit, that has wrought so much good, was rendered possible by the generous help of a Christian friend, who was moved by the cold state into which temperance work had fallen, to invite Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones into our midst. Their coming marks an epoch in the town's history of temperance, and great is the responsibility of those whose lives have been touched by the power of God's spirit during the mission. The town was divided into five portions for the purpose of house-to-house visitation, each portion being undertaken by one of the five Free Churches.

On the Saturday afternoon the largest hall in the town was crowded for a children's meeting, and when Dr. Henry asked those who were members of Bands of Hope and kindred societies to stand, not a quarter of those present rose. It was a revelation of a humiliating character. On Lord's Day afternoon and evening we had wonderful meetings, and every night of the week the hall was crowded. The great work has been among Christians. Dr. Henry's fidelity to the Word of God, his profound conviction and abounding earnestness, were inspiring to many. His heart-searching addresses were well followed up by Mr. Jones' uplifting solos. When Dr. Henry appealed to all who were willing to consecrate themselves to God "to battle against England's greatest foe," between 600 and 700 persons rose to their feet. To show the class who were reached, it may be mentioned that at a crowded meeting Dr. Henry asked all who were total abstainers to rise, and there were not more than ten or a dozen who remained sitting, consequently the number of pledges secured was not so large as in some places. However, we are able to record 349 pledges, and there are yet many small pledge books out, which, we feel sure, will bring the total over 400, for which we thank God and take courage.

We bid these two God-sent men "God-speed" in their work. Our only regret is that their stay was only for seven days. But what has God wrought in so short a time! Many were drawn by the singing of Mr. Jones, and were thus bound to hear the solemn denunciations of the drink. The power of song was demonstrated over and over again. The solemn awe which rested upon the meetings when Mr. Jones sang, "We shall know Him by the print of the nails in His hands," revealed how deeply his words touched many a heart. Mothers wept and prayed for wandering boys and girls as the singer gave, with pathos, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" We are hoping to gather up the fruits of our brethren's labours, and, not only so, but to be more alive to the responsibilities resting upon us in the face of this great evil.

The Bedouin Mission.

THE proposal to establish a Mission, with the object of reaching the Arabs of Palestine, Sinai, and Arabia, from headquarters in Jerusalem—where work will also be carried on among the neglected poor of the city—which was put forward last month, is finding favour with many of God's people at home.

Mr. Forder, the pioneer missionary to the Bedouin, who is to take charge of the work, has been holding very encouraging meetings in London and the provinces, and the thrilling story of his experiences as a messenger of the Gospel in the tents and cities of the desert has been listened to with great interest.

Already over £200 has been given in aid of the scheme, and promises amounting to £90 have been received, whilst one friend has undertaken to be responsible for at least £100. The secretary of the mission will be very pleased to give full information to all who are interested. Copies of "The Burden of the Desert of the Sea" (price one penny), may be had on application. Address: The Bedouin Mission, Missionary Association and Foreign Missions Agency, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Rev. F. B. Meyer at Bradford.

THE mission conducted under the auspices of the Bradford Free Church Council by Rev. F. B. Meyer closed on Thursday last. The first meeting of the series had been held on the previous Saturday, when Kirkgate Chapel was filled with a congregation composed mainly of young people. The programme for the week was a crowded one, but Mr. Meyer bore the strain wonderfully well. Indeed, he had proposed to continue the services on Friday, and desisted only at the express suggestion of the head organizer in London. On Sunday week, with the help of the resident pastors, he took the ordinary services at Great Horton Primitive Methodist and Mannville Chapels. In the afternoon he addressed a large gathering of men in Sion (Baptist), and later in the evening was on the stage of the Empire Theatre for a mass meeting on evangelistic lines. This service was perhaps the most remarkable of all. The spacious building was crowded. Mr. Meyer's topic was, "The night is far spent, and the day is at hand." Theatres are not provided with inquiry-rooms, but a large number of cards of decision were distributed as the audience dispersed.

On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday dinner-hour meetings were held in the Mechanics' Institute. The committee which had arranged for these had fixed an hour convenient for warehousemen, clerks, and the operatives of the mills. Unfortunately these did not rally to the gatherings, so, though none of them could be considered a failure, and the interest grew day by day, the success was not so great as had been anticipated. Each afternoon an address on the spiritual life was given in Salem Congregational Church to a numerous company.

The evening meetings in Kirkgate Chapel were the distinctive feature of the mission. On Monday, "Religion as applied to Public and Municipal Life" was the topic. On Tuesday, Mr. Meyer dealt with "Religion and the Home," and on Wednesday with "Religion and Youth." Night by night the chapel was crowded. On Thursday, though a sermon was announced, hundreds were turned away. The mission was primarily directed to the churches. It was intended as a preparation for an appeal to the outsiders by Gipsy Smith, which commences in St. George's Hall on Sunday next. Great blessing has already come to saints; these, in their turn, are now anxious about sinners.

Home Mission Week.

HUNGRY CHILDREN.

A FEW weeks ago I visited Shaftesbury Hall, Poplar. Let me tell you what I saw when I got there. On entering the hall, I noticed that it was full of tables arrayed with innumerable basins containing something which looked very hot and smelt very good, and beside each basin were a spoon and a large piece of bread. But what were all these lonely-looking basins doing there? You shall hear.

At five of the neighbouring Board Schools the children had been eying the clock for some minutes, and I do not think they had heard much of the latter part of the lesson! The clock struck twelve, books were closed, and out the children rushed helter-skelter down the street. It was a bitterly cold day. Some of these children made their way quickly to Shaftesbury Hall, and stood in an anxious crowd outside the door. I noticed that many of them were so feeble and ailing that they had not been able to run along quickly enough to keep themselves warm, and by the time they reached the Hall their hands and faces were blue with cold. How eager they were to get in when once the door opened!

It was dinner time. Now when you speak of dinner your thoughts fly to meat and potatoes and pudding, but it has quite a different meaning to many of our slum children. To them it is simply a repetition of what they had for breakfast, and that was a piece of bread with a scraping of butter or dripping (which it is sometimes very difficult to even see, let alone taste!), and this is again repeated at tea time. How would you like to dine off such fare each day?

But twenty-one years ago a kind lady, Mrs. Pennington, felt that she must do something towards giving such hungry little children as these at least one good meal a day. She therefore started a fund called "The Board School Children's Free Dinner Fund" (which has this year joined itself on to the "London Schools' Dinner Association"), and by aid of the money raised she was able for six months in each year to provide hot dinners free to destitute children. That was the meaning of all those waiting basins. They were full of nice hot soup and vegetables, with as much bread as the children could eat.

You shall pretend to go with me into the Hall and watch some of the children as they come in. You should have seen them hurry up to the tables, and what do you think was the first thing they did? Why, warmed their hands on the outside of the basins. One poor little mite was so numbed with cold that she could not hold her spoon at all, and stood crying pitifully until an older child pointed out the way to get her hands warm.

Another little girl of ten, whose pale face and tattered clothes told their own story of want and woe, said she did enjoy the dinners, for father had been out of work for weeks, and there were five younger children to keep beside her, and she added wistfully, "I get so dredful hungry, and it makes my 'ead ache, and then I can't learn my lessons, and I get scolded." Poor child, of course she could not learn her lessons properly. Could you under such circumstances? Many a child could tell the same story—so badly fed and clothed, they are not fit to meet each day's tasks.

There was one child who, I noticed, seemed to limp as she came down the hall. Looking to see the cause, I found she had lost a shoe on her way in, and the remaining one was so much too large for her that it required very careful managing to keep it on at all. As for stockings—well, they were mostly holes, and her frock seemed to be held on by pins. Neglect was written all over her. I wish you could have seen her seize a spoon and start on her savoury basin of soup. Not a word did she utter, but every now and then she would heave a big sigh of satisfaction, as the hot liquid gradually warmed her. What a boon these free dinners are can be best told by the children themselves.

From October to March, in thirteen different centres, hundreds of hungry children are sure of at least one good meal a day. The children are selected from the classes by the teachers, and of course, only those whose parents are out of work, or ill, or destitute, are allowed to have dinner tickets. How glad some mothers and fathers are to know that their little children will not suffer all day from the pangs of hunger; or if the parents are careless and indifferent to their children's need (for all are not blessed with kind parents like yours!), what a good thing it is that someone sees after these neglected little ones.

About sixpence per week will provide a daily dinner for one child. There are still a good many weeks left to the end of March, when the dinners stop; and even if it is not quite so cold just now, the children are hungry and want feeding all the same. Mrs. Pennington's address is 16, Crossfield Road, South Hampstead, N.W.

It is well to know that something is being done to help these little ones to grow up better fitted in body and mind to become good citizens. But there is still much to be done, and the poor are always with us.

Hungry Children.*

(A Parable.)

Children playing in the garden,
Happier than I can tell,
Merry voices sounding gladly
When they hear the dinner bell!

Off they scamper, helter-skelter,
More than willing to obey;
They are hungry—oh, so hungry,
After all their healthful play.

Ah, but they are quite forgetting
Father's wish that they should call
To those other hungry children
Out beyond the garden wall.

Gratefully they praise the Giver
For His gen'rous, dainty spread—
Oh, those other hungry children
Holding out their hands for bread!

* * * * *

Blessed, blessed are the children,
They "that know the joyful sound"
Of the loving voice of Jesus
Showing where true peace is found.

They who in the light are walking,
On the Bread of Life who feed,
Going on their way rejoicing,
Trusting Christ for all their need.

But a thousand times more blessed,
They who spread the Gospel feast
Which our Father hath provided
For the greatest and the least.

Jesus, fill us with Thy pity,
Willing all Thy gifts to share
With the hungry, dying heathen—
Souls committed to our care!

Drink and Defeat (1 Kings xx. 10-21).

IT was not yet mid-day, but Benhadad and the kings that were with him were drinking themselves drunk—and this in the face of their enemy. So insensate does strong drink make men. We are reminded of the words, which Lemuel's mother addressed to him, centuries ago: "It is not for kings, O Lemuel, it is not for kings to drink wine; nor for princes to say, Where is strong drink? Lest they drink and forget the law."

Drink makes men boastful and vainglorious. "The dust of Samaria shall not suffice for handfuls for the men that follow me." Beneath its stimulus all the nervous and muscular power in a man acts together and at once, instead of a third part, as is usually the case, and for the time he feels able to meet any emergency, not realizing that there will be an inevitable reaction, when the spent forces must be recuperated.

Drink robs men of their prudence. At the direction of a prophet of the Lord, a handful of young men, 232 in number, went out to face the entire army, a further contingent of 7,000 waiting under orders to succour them if need should arise. It is never wise to despise your foe, or refuse to use such methods as prudence may suggest for his overthrow. But when a man is full of drink, he is foolhardy, and will incur risks which will make his brain reel as he looks back on them.

Drink makes a man essentially selfish. A brave man could have assuredly cared for the poor soldiers, who, for no fault of theirs, were in jeopardy of their lives. He would have endeavoured to rally them, and reform their broken lines; but Benhadad was only too anxious to get away with a whole skin. Alcohol deprives men of moral sense, of all gratitude and pity, of all care for others; even wife and child are sacrificed to the awful passion it excites.

Life is a battlefield, in which men strive for mastery, and it is certain that the winning side will always be that which relies not on the artificial strength supplied by strong drink, but on the eternal God, who is God alike of the valleys and the hills. You may be as Benhadad, with every resource at your back and all that birth, position, or money can give, but if you close your heart against God, and open it to the demon of strong drink, it is inevitable that you must fail in the terrible strife.

On the other hand, if you will put your whole trust in God, and live a clean, pure, and simple life, though your resources be as two little flocks of kids (27), yet you will hear the Divine voice assuring you—"Hast thou seen all this great multitude? Behold I will deliver it into thine hand this day, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord."

This lesson is one for our country! Whatever may be our material resources, in ships and men, in guns and ammunition, if we continue to drink at the increasing rate of the last few years there will come a time when other nations of hardier and more temperate blood will outstrip us in the race. The manufacturing industries, which supply our populations with money, not only for bread, but for luxury, will pass into other hands, and we shall lose the proud position that we have held so long as the foremost nation on earth. If Benhadad drinks in his pavilion, when he ought to be devising methods for meeting the enemy, there will be nothing for it but a fleet horse or abject submission (20-32).

Let us do what we can to save our country from the blight of strong drink. There are several ways in which to do it:—

(1) Let each Christian Endeavourer sign the pledge, and not be ashamed to acknowledge his convictions.

(2) Let us use our influence in every circle in which we move to advocate total abstinence views, not posing as better than others, nor magnifying our virtues, but earnestly and lovingly getting those who will follow our lead to do as we have done.

(3) Let us abstain from voting in favour of anyone who is connected with the liquor traffic becoming an officer of the Christian Church.

(4) Let us pray that God will awaken His Church to grapple with this monster. He alone can vanquish it. St. George must pierce the dragon.

(5) Let us use our municipal and political influence in consistent opposition to the drink ring.

Christian Love (1 Cor. xiii.)

Golden Text—1 Cor. xiii. 13.

THE believers at Corinth were richly endowed with spiritual gifts, purposed of the Lord for the increase and building up of the Church in love. But the gifts were wrongly allowed to bring notoriety to individuals, and began to be looked upon as personal distinctions; irreverent comparisons followed, then vanity, envy, jealousy, contention, while love was lost sight of in the strife. Knowledge puffeth up, but love buildeth up.

Paul's Reproof.

1. All had been Gentile idolaters.
2. All had been taught by the Holy Ghost to acknowledge Jesus as the Lord.
3. All had been endowed by the same Spirit, each for the profit of the whole Church. Nine manifestations mentioned.
4. All apportioned by the will and working of the same Spirit, each to exercise his own gift in unison with the other members of the body of Christ—the Church (1 Cor. xii.). Gifts exercised without love would be noise without music, sound without harmony. In A.D. 1611 "Charity" meant love, which has since narrowed down to benevolence. "God is love" was new teaching in Corinth.

Love Essential (v. 31-3).

Power of oratory } Without Gift of languages } Love
Great learning } are Skill in teaching } like a sound only, with no message beneath the words from the God of love to the seeking souls.

Wonder-working faith, benevolence, heroism, without love, miss the link that binds the heart to God (1 Cor. xvi. 22). "In sincerity" (Eph. vi. 24). The Spirit of God draws by love (2 Cor. v. 14).

Love's characteristics.

(are)	(not)
Forbearing	Envious
Kind	Boastful
Truthloving	Conceited
Patient	Ill-mannered
Trustful	Selfish
Hopeful	Quick-tempered
Gracious	Suspicious
Unfailing	Lover of evil.

Turn each into a personal question and prayer.

Love supreme.

1. An attribute of God. "God is love." 2. Eternal. "Love is of God." 3. The plan of salvation. 4. A bond none can break.

Love is the silken thread which knits the followers of Jesus together in Him (Col. ii. 2). The thread may be strained, but never broken (Rom. viii 35).

The holy cement with which the "lively stones are built up" (1 Pet. ii. 5); it may be damaged by the enemy, but the stones cannot be injured.

The atmosphere of heaven for the child of God to breathe.

The ground in which (a) the child of Jesus has root and grows (Eph. iii. 17). Pray for the dew of His blessing that you may bring forth fruit (John xv. 4, 5; (b) Whereon you can walk and talk (Eph. iv 15; v. 2).

For war, the "banner," "chariot," and "breastplate" are each love (Sol. Song, ii. 4; iii. 10; 1 Thes. v. 8).

LESSONS.

1. The love that was lost during the disputes in Corinth was more valuable than the gifts they contended about. Stop and think how miserable you will feel when the quarrel is over. Ask, "Is it worth the pain of an aching memory and the loss of love?"

2. I can talk about Jesus. I know the plan of salvation in the Scriptures. I can repeat texts and hymns, but when Jesus asks me, "Lovest thou Me?" can I give Him the answer Peter did? (John xxi. 15, 16, 17.) Aaron "spoke well," but he failed grievously. Moses said "I am not eloquent," but he served God in love. (Ex. iv. 10.)

3. Love in the home inspires loving words to cheer each other by the way. Take care no word of yours has a sting in it that will give pain to mother or father in the years to come. Love in the home acts like oil, and makes the wheels of life turn more easily. It is the mainspring of true politeness. "In honour preferring one another."

Mistaken Sufferings.

When travelling through India one continually meets with "holy" men, Hindoos, who in their ignorance undergo all kinds of sufferings to propitiate their various idols. One man holds up his arm until it becomes rigid and withered, and the poor fellow will go through life in that maimed condition. Another, with clenched fist, allows the finger-nails to grow through the palms of his hands; and yet a third man may sit throughout the hot weather, in an almost nude condition, surrounded by fires, and literally giving his body to be burnt, as instanced in the lesson. We who have a better knowledge of a loving God may yet rely too much upon our doings or our sufferings, whereas it is Christ who has done all and suffered all to save us. Though we bestow all our goods to feed the poor, and though we give our body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth us nothing (v. 3).

A Dimmed Picture.

Surprise is often expressed at the sharpness and beauty of photographs produced in many distant parts of the globe, while those taken in our own country are often dull and wanting in the fine effects to be obtained in other climes. However good the lens of a camera may be, the clearness of the atmosphere has much to do with the success of a picture produced by photography; and when the result is unsatisfactory, it occasionally arises from the fact that the object was seen "through a glass darkly." Only a clear atmosphere will give a clear picture, and in our spiritual lives we are often affected by our sinful surroundings. Our vision is blurred, and we neither see God nor understand His doings. Though now we see through a glass darkly, and find the reflectors of life to be poor, we shall at last, face to face with Him, in a sinless atmosphere, and know even as we are known (v. 12).

The Greatest Thing in the World.

A short time ago, a little boy, the only child of a well-known artist, was stricken with diphtheria. One night, when medical assistance was impossible, the nurse hastily summoned the mother of the little one, and informed her that the only way to save her son's life lay in instantly sucking from his throat the poisonous matter. The lady, as many other mothers have done before her, at once responded, and succeeded in averting the immediate danger. After a long and tedious illness both the patients slowly recovered, though the mother, in her noble endeavour, nearly sacrificed her own life. Now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love (v. 13). Love is strong as death. Many waters cannot quench it, neither can the floods drown it. God is love. He so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

Obituary.

MR EVAN WATKINS.

MR. EVAN WATKINS, of the Mission House, Upper Clapton, after more than forty years' patient missionary service in the Lord's work—associated with the beloved name of the late Mr. John Morley—passed peacefully into that eternal rest for which he had so long striven, on February 4, at the age of eighty-three. He will be missed by a large number among the poor working-classes, to whose interests, both spiritual and temporal, he gave unstinting service. "Every man's work shall be made manifest; the day shall declare it." This is the only printed allusion ever made to the faithful service of this devoted servant of Jesus Christ. "He that seeth in secret, shall reward openly."

REV. D. J. EAST.

The home-call has come to Rev. David Jonathan East, one of the oldest ministers of the Baptist denomination. Mr. East, who was born in London in 1816, studied at the old Stepney College, and was ordained in Leamington in 1838, on the day of Queen Victoria's Coronation. On leaving Leamington, he undertook a pastorate at Waltham Abbey, Herts, from which he was called by the directors of the Baptist Missionary Society to be principal of their theological college in Jamaica. He laboured in that colony for forty years. The college was removed from Rio Bueno to Kingston, and became one of the most successful institutions of its kind. In leaving the colony, its then Governor, Sir H. W. Norman, said that Mr. East, "in efforts to further education, in literary labours, and in all that has seemed calculated to win the people of Jamaica, has been untiring."

MR. W. R. GARWOOD.

By the death of Mr. William Richard Garwood, the historic Devonshire Square Baptist Church, Stoke Newington Road, N., has been deprived of one of its most valued members. During a long period of years Mr. Garwood witnessed for Christ in business and church life in and around London, and many good causes secured his unstinted help and support. As deacon and treasurer of the Devonshire Square Church, he was greatly beloved by pastor and people; the young found him tender as a parent, to the poor and weak he was kind as a friend. Also, as superintendent of the Walford Road Mission, he showed himself a man full of faith and good works. The end came somewhat suddenly, at the age of seventy-two, but it was bright and confident, with a hope full of immortality. On Sunday last, in a powerful sermon, the pastor of the church, Rev. G. P. McKay, pointed some of the many lessons to be learned from the life and testimony of Mr. Garwood.

MISS MARGARET OKELL, NEW BARNET.

A wide circle of sympathizers will learn with sorrow of the death, on February 1, of Miss Margaret Okell, of New Barnet. Early in life she found peace in Christ, and at once commenced active work, in a suburban district of Glasgow. After a while she was laid aside with spinal trouble, and years of suffering followed, borne with Christian patience. Much prayer was made, and by-and-by she was restored to perfect health. She then came south, to take charge of a Girls' Home in New Barnet, started by her sister (now Mrs. Frank Eardley), and one of a group of three, the central institution being in the East of London, and the third at Brentwood. Miss Okell laboured assiduously in training girls for domestic service in Christian families, but the Home did not by any means exhaust her energies. She took an active part in temperance work, and gave valuable assistance in many evangelistic undertakings. She also visited largely among the poor. Her busy service came out of much prayer and devout study of the Bible.

About Books.

THE LATE MR. R. C. CHAPMAN.

A DEEPLY interesting biographical sketch has come from the pen of Mr. W. H. Bennet, of Yeovil—Robert Cleaver Chapman, of Barnstaple. (2s. 6d. net. Glasgow: Pickering & Inglis.) These pages present many charms. First they tell the story of one who was a man of God in his day and generation; then they supply select extracts and sayings, notes of addresses, and some of the hymns written by Mr. Chapman. To the whole, Mr. James Wright, of Bristol, prefixes an introduction full of sympathy and fragrant of interesting reminiscence.

All who knew the man will wish to read this book. Those who only knew about him—having heard of the grace and goodness which the Lord showed through him—will welcome the personal outline, and prize the gatherings from his written and spoken words. There are many allusions to teachers and workers of a bygone day, including Denham Smith, George Müller, William Hake, Harington Evans, Henry Dyer, and Anthony Groves. There are two photographs of Mr. Chapman, both as the patriarch of quite recent years.

FOR FRENCH READERS.

AMONG the excellent biographies recently translated into French, we welcome those of D. L. Moody and George Müller. It is a pleasure to include these among volumes worthy of being brought under the notice of French-speaking people; and such as help in their circulation will doubtless find them welcomed by Roman Catholic as well as Protestant readers. (E. Bichsel, 10, Rue de Lanterne, Lyons.)

D. L. Moody: L'Evangéliste Américain. Sa Vie et son Œuvre. Traduit de l'Anglais par Madame W. Soltau-Monod, avec une préface de M. le Pasteur Th. Monod. This is the smaller "Life" of the evangelist, but it is more; the translator has introduced chapters on meetings in France in 1882, and on topics specially interesting to those for whom the book has been prepared. There is a good portrait. (2 francs.)

George Muller.—Par Arthur T. Pierson, Docteur en Théologie. Avec une Introduction par M. James Wright, et une préface de M. S. Delattre, Pasteur de l'Eglise Libre de Clermont-Ferrand. Traduit par D. Lortsch, pasteur. Here we have a large volume of over five hundred pages, with appendices, illustrations, and all. The book requires no commendation; it is such a biography as the subject demanded, and the author is specially qualified to produce. The translator has brought sympathy as well as ability to his task. (6 francs.)

HYMNS AND THEIR WRITERS.

THE story of hymns, both in their making and use, has been told in many a volume; but we know of no manual so comprehensive and generally interesting as that given us by Francis Arthur Jones, with the title Famous Hymns and their Authors. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) It is not the companion of any particular hymnal, but a book dealing with compositions that are the favourites of the Church at large, and therefore are found in all collections. And among the most attractive features of the book we would name the illustrations, which include many portraits of familiar and unfamiliar writers. There are also several facsimiles of great hymns.

In the preface, Mr. Jones tells us that the compilation of his book engaged him for some ten years, and we can well believe it. The object has been, not so much to give details of a merely literary nature as to furnish some account of the authors and the circumstances that led to the making of their best-known hymns. Biographies have, of course, been consulted, and with good results; but over and above this, Mr. Jones has corresponded with hymn writers and their representatives, and his pages are greatly enriched with their contributions to the fascinating story. The treatment is methodical, the hymns being dealt with in classes—Morning, Evening, Advent, Easter, Communion, and so forth. Born of enthusiastic interest, and the outcome of much labour, this is a good book, and lovers of hymns will assuredly read it to pleasure and profit.

Cæsar Malan's Gospel narrative, The True Cross, translated from the French by C. S., is issued in a handy little book from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. (Limp cloth 6d.) The fact that it is in its seventh edition, shows that the book has been in large demand. We trust its gracious message will have a yet more extensive circulation.

Visions of Glory, compiled by J. L. W., relates some of the things seen and realised by departing saints. Christian biography yields great spoil in this line, and some of its richest treasure is presented in this little book. (1s. Holness.)

The Pentecostal Baptism: Is it Regeneration? A Reply to Rev. G. Campbell Morgan. By Thomas Payne, D.D. The immediate object of the author is to controvert the assertion that the baptism of the Spirit is identical with regeneration. We think he proves his point. But when he asserts that the gift of the Spirit is subsequent to conversion, we consider he is not so successful (see 2 Pet. i.). Nevertheless, the book is useful, inasmuch as it presents, in a concise form, quotations from many Christian writers, in support of the author's view, always in a spirit of love and courtesy. (2s. 6d. "Christian Herald" Office; or the Author, 23, Hyde Grove, Manchester.)

The Representative Men of the Bible. By George Matheson, D.D., LL.D., formerly minister of the parish of St. Bernard's, Edinburgh. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) Some of the great men of Old Testament story are here delineated, after the manner that one would expect from the author of "Studies in the Portrait of Christ." In thought and style Dr. Matheson is sui generis; and his pages will amply repay prayerful perusal. It matters not how often one has studied a Bible character, he may reckon upon new aspects of revealed truth being suggested in these luminous pages. Not that he will get all-round views; rather, he will find fresh and striking thoughts calculated greatly to enrich knowledge gained from more regular interpreters and expositors.

Erromanga, the Martyr Isle. All who are interested in the New Hebrides Mission will give a hearty welcome to this story of Erromanga, as told by Rev. H. A. Robertson. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) Having laboured in the island for thirty years, Mr. Robertson brought special qualifications to his work. He gives us a history in the true sense of the word, and has spared no labour to arrive at facts and events regarding past days, such as have never before been generalised from the point of view of the Christian historian. The story of the sandalwood trade is told; also the early days of the Mission, so full of hope and tragedy. The accounts of native customs and practices are very readable, and from beginning to end the book is one for which to be profoundly thankful. This book will occupy a worthy place in missionary literature. There are portraits and many other engravings, all of them highly finished.

The Bishop of Ripon has made a notable addition to our helps to thoughtful and earnest meditation on Scripture. The Wisdom of James the Just is written for the plain reader. The strong personality, spiritual mind, and sound common sense, which so eminently qualified the leader of the church in Jerusalem for his difficult work, are analysed with ability and insight; and the devout Jewish life exhibited as a true preparation for Christian holiness. The chapter which deals with the self-revelation of the writer is a conspicuous example of how much may be learned by the careful reader with nothing beyond the English Version in his hand; and may well form a practical guide to the application of the method to other books. The limitations belonging to the Epistle itself are necessarily reflected in the treatment; but the verse-by-verse examination of the chapters abounds with help for personal application of the truth, wise counsel, and comforting reflection. (5s. Isbister.)

Roads from Rome: A Series of Personal Narratives. Compiled by Rev. Charles Stuteville Isaacson, M.A., Rector of Hardingham, Norfolk. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) From time to time our pages afford evidence of the great unrest that prevails in the Romish Church; and we have told the story of many men and women who have left the system, and found light and peace in the simple faith of Christ. A budget of such cases of escape from Rome are collected in this timely volume. Those who have seceded without regard to evangelical principles, or determined upon a freer service of Christ, do not come within the scope of Mr. Isaacson's book. Rather, we have here the stories of men such as Thomas Connellan and André Bourrier, who have sought and found Gospel liberty, and whose experiences point distinctive and reliable "roads from Rome." The narratives are given at first hand; and they relate to experiences in Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, and Portugal. The pages tell a very impressive tale. The Bishop of Durham, in a brief preface, points out that the great drift of opinion to-day makes for a more or less complete oblivion of facts respecting Romanism. He concludes: "I am sure that we do need a grave, reasoned, authentic warning in regard to the Church of Rome; and Mr. Isaacson has, in my view, constructed his book, for that purpose, in exactly the right spirit."

TIMES OF BLESSING IMMINENT. In this booklet Mr. R. Henderson Smith editor of "Trust" Magazine, and Rev. James Lyall, evangelist, outline the story of recent Gospel triumphs in the Antipodes. (1d. Edinburgh: Religious Tract and Book Society.)

A Story about "Songs and Solos."

AN EXPERIMENT IN CHURCH-FILLING.

IN a comparatively small town, a few miles from the metropolis, the notice board of the Congregational Church had this singular announcement, following the notice of morning service: "Evening service and all other meetings in the Lecture Hall."

Thereby hangs a tale, which is a substantial testimony to the value of the truth and of "Sankey's Hymns" well sung. It appears that some years ago the little chapel was thinly attended. In the hope of the pastor announced an evangelistic service on the last Sunday in the month, at which "Sankey's Hymns" would be sung. Small bills were also left at a large number of houses. There had been the usual hesitation in adopting but the prejudice was overcome by the pastor urging the choir to try them, and to do them well for Christ and humanity. The choir have never regretted it, but have earned the reputation of singing those hymns as they are seldom sung. To the surprise of all,

SANKEY'S HYMNS;

THE CHURCH WAS SO FILLED

on the first occasion that a few, not caring to stand in the aisles, left the place. That was the first and last special evening service held in the chapel.

Having a large lecture hall near by, it was at once urged to hold the next monthly service there. The increased attendance on that occasion led to the request that the service in the hall be held fortnightly instead of monthly. It was done, and after a few services, the building, holding nearly 600 people, was so well filled that it was decided to close the chapel, and hold the evening service there. The special service now became the regular service, but with "Sankey's Hymns." It has continued for many years, and is as much appreciated and as well attended as ever.

Now, what was the result? Some left because it was deemed improper to receive the Lord's Supper in a lecture-hall. A few dislike the service, while admitting its usefulness, and seldom or never attend it. But it has largely added to the membership of the church, and so increased the attendance at the morning service in the chapel, that, on a fine morning, the deacons have difficulty in finding accommodation for the worshippers, and are seriously considering the ways and means of enlarging their borders. The

SUCCESS OF THE EXPERIMENT

was a proof that the Gospel, fully and heartily proclaimed, with "Sankey's Hymns" well sung, and for the sake of others, is a sure means of reaching the masses. It should, perhaps, be added that the hall is in a good position, and attractive in appearance; the deacons, moreover, stand in the lobby presenting hymn-books and giving a hearty welcome to all who attend. There is about the service, and never a clap trap advertisement respecting it. It has, moreover, led to the establishment of two largely attended children's services in the basement of the building, carried on during the service above.

Oxford Notes.

THE chief event in the Oxford religious life this week has been Canon Christopher's missionary breakfast, held in the Town Hall on Saturday, when 363 accepted the Canon's invitation, including many heads of colleges, whilst the majority present were undergraduate members of the University. This is the twenty-seventh annual breakfast Canon Christopher has given. The speaker was Bishop Lofthouse, of Keewatin, N.W. America, a diocese 2,000 miles long, a temperature often of 40deg. below zero, where a return letter from the distant parts of the diocese to its bishop takes eighteen months, taken and returned only on foot over perpetual snow. Yet of the Indians in that diocese 90 per cent. know and read their Bibles.

At the St. Aldate's Men's Service on Sunday, the preacher was Rev. G. T. Manley, M.A., Senior Wrangler of 1893, now of Allahabad, N.W. India. Speaking of the work of C.M.S. in India, Mr. Manley said that during the past year 9,000 baptisms had taken place; but while the work had increased five per cent, the workers had decreased to the same extent. If the increase of baptisms and workers could only be maintained, then, in seventy or eighty years, the half of India would be evangelized.

Irish Notes.

A SUCCESSFUL series of united evangelistic meetings has been held in Dungannon. The Presbyterian and Methodist churches in the town united, and the services were, in consequence, largely attended. Many received much spiritual blessing.

Dean D'Arcy, vicar of Belfast, has been elected Bishop of Clogher in place of Dr. Stack, who has resigned. The Dean had a most distinguished university course, and is the author of several valuable books. He has been only about two years vicar of Belfast.

In order to assist poor parishes in the south and west of Ireland, the Misses Nugent have forwarded from the London Sustentation Fund to the Irish Church Representative Body £1,100, and have received from that body cordial thanks for "their indefatigable exertions."

A very important temperance conference hast just been held in Longford, the bishop of the diocese, Dr. Elliott, presiding. Papers were read by Revs. W. Wellwood and J. Thompson, and among the speakers was Mr. J. D. Crosbie, D.L., who travelled from Kerry to be present, and to give his testimony as a landlord and employer of labour in favour of total abstinence.

An important convention for the deepening of spiritual life has been held in the Methodist Hall, Fivemiletown, Co. Tyrone. Rev. W. M. Wilson presided, and there was a large attendance. The subjects discussed included family religion, separation from doubtful things, public worship, and proportionate giving. Messrs. Richey, Moran, and several others took part in the proceedings, which were of a most stimulating and helpful character.

For the purpose of deepening the interest in foreign missions conventions were held last week in Cork, Dublin, and Portadown. The meetings which were organized by Rev. Hugh McReag, secretary of the Irish branch of the Methodist Missionary Society, were addressed by workers from China and representatives of the Presbyterian and other missions. The effort is a new one, and it is not unlikely that it may become permanent, and be extended to all the principal cities and towns of this country.

Personalia.

Mrs. Josephine Butler, in a recent note, says: "The winter has been trying, but I am holding on. Thanks be to God!"

Mrs. Penn-Lewis is on a visit to India. She hopes to meet many missionaries at the large hill stations, and to return to England early in May.

Rev. Jesse Mayo left for the United States by ss. Cedric, on February 11, to fulfil engagements, and expects to be away at least until the summer, when he hopes to return for open-air and tent work. Communications may be addressed c/o Rev. Thomas Law, Memorial Hall, E.C.

Rev. Isaac F. Row has resumed his work in India in connection with the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society. Mr. Row has a large field to cover; his regular railway passes extending over 2,000 miles of railway. Writing from Jubbulpore, under date January 23, he says:—"We are in the midst of a terrible outbreak of plague; the people are fleeing away by thousands, and missionary work is quite upset."

The Churches.

Church of England.

At St. Silas Church, Bristol, Rev. F. J. Horsefield is preaching a series of sermons on Protestant truth. On the last two Lord's Days he has dealt with the subject of "The Confessional." Several quotations were given from Ritualistic manuals circulated amongst children in the Church of England, in which secret confession to a priest was stated to be absolutely necessary to salvation, and that there was no other way to obtain God's forgiveness.

In the course of an impressive sermon on Sabbath observance, preached at All Souls', Langham Place, the Bishop of Kensington asserted that the desecration of the Lord's Day is universal in the part of the diocese under his care. From the East, where there may be some excuse; from the West, where there is none; from the country districts and river banks, which on the Lord's Day are turned into a pandemonium, the same sad cry is heard, of forgetfulness and indifference.

A remarkable reformation is stated to have been accomplished in the little mining village of Sunnybrow, Durham, by the vicar, who lives in one of the miners' cottages, and brings to bear upon his parishioners the influence of example as well as precept. As a result "pigeon-flying matches and all forms of gambling" have diminished, while "the village streets are quiet, such a thing as a drunken fight or brawl is almost unknown, and there is a marked absence of bad language."

Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow, having accepted the vicarage of Bordesley, Birmingham, the present is an opportune moment to recall some particulars of the fruit of his many labours at St. Peter's, Islington. Since his appointment in 1894, in addition to maintaining careful pastoral supervision, he has identified himself with various united evangelistic and philanthropic efforts. He also founded the North London Convention. During his ministry at Islington a vigorous work has been carried on in the parish, and many improvements effected in the church. Besides the purchase of a vicarage, and furnishing a house for lady workers, a sum of £2,370 has been raised towards the cost of building mission premises in a poor part of the parish, a scheme which is left for his successor to complete.

Congregational.

The temporary headquarters of the London Missionary Society, during the building of its new house, will be at No. 30, Gray's Inn Road, W.C. The removal from Blomfield Street will probably be completed by the first week in March, and it is expected that the temporary premises will have to be occupied for nearly two years.

Stamford Hill Congregational Church (Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon) has shown a very kindly interest in the adjoining church at the High Cross, Tottenham (Rev. E. Cornwall Jones) by making a collection towards reducing the large debt which hinders the work of this church, set as it is in an industrial neighbourhood. The offerings amounted to £43 7s. 11d.

At the Thursday evening services at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, Dr. Pierson has lately given a series of addresses of a biographical character, on the lines of men whom he has known. The first address was on Robert C. Chapman, of Barnstaple; then came Jerry McAuley, R. W. M'All, of Paris, and Charles Haddon Spurgeon. The addresses were full of encouragement and stimulus.

Baptist.

The members of the Bible class at East Parade Church, Horsham, have built a classroom for their own use. The whole of the work was done in the members' spare time, and the structure, which is of corrugated iron and lined with match-boarding, has taken about ten weeks to erect. The room will accommodate about eighty people.

Pastor Charles Spurgeon continues in poor health. He has practically relinquished his work at Greenwich, though a few weeks earlier than his resignation a few months ago had formally anticipated. At the annual church meeting on Thursday week, at South Street, Greenwich, a resolution was unanimously carried, recording "deep gratitude to God for sparing Pastor Charles Spurgeon to give nearly twenty-four years of successful service at South Street Baptist Church, Greenwich, and for the many tokens which He has given of His Divine favour during that time."

Services in connection with the recognition of Rev. Geo. Wainwright as pastor of the church at Crewkerne were held on Thursday, January 29, when Rev. J. R. Wood, President of the Baptist Union, preached in the afternoon to a large congregation. After tea, the chapel was well filled for the evening meeting. Representatives from many of the churches in the district were present, and the chair was occupied by Mr. Robt. Colman, J.P., of Bournemouth. The speakers were Revs. Elias George, of Yeovil; H. Trotman, of Bridgwater; J. R. Wood, and the pastor. The outlook for the work is very hopeful.

Methodist.

Rev. Joseph Kirsop, who has been identified with the United Methodist Free Churches ever since the formation of that community in 1857, and has filled its highest seat, has issued an earnest plea for the amalgamation of the Bible Christian Methodists, the Methodist New Connexion, and the Methodist Free Churches.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, Wesleyan Missionary Society, continues to receive encouraging reports from the Transvaal. Rev. Amos Burnet, the new superintendent, has thrown himself with much energy into the work which was paralysed by the war. Not only is the old work being resumed, but vigorous efforts are being made to extend that work among British settlers and the native races.

Miss Mabelle Biggart, B.A., of New York, recently preached on a Lord's Day afternoon and night at the Bible Christian Church, Stanford Avenue, Brighton. Rev. S. B. Lane, secretary of the Brighton Free Church Council, writes that the sermons (on "Cross Bearing" and "Care for the Perishing") were much appreciated. Besides preaching, Miss Biggart lectures, and gives "Temperance evenings." She is open to accept engagements in connection with any Evangelical denomination. Address: Montague Hotel, Russell Square, W.C.

Presbyterian.

Clapham Road congregation (Rev. Thomas Currie) has had a very fruitful year. Encouraging reports are given of religious, educational, and benevolent work in connection with the church and mission.

The annual meeting of St. Peter's congregation, Upper Tooting, S.W., has been held. Notwithstanding unpropitious weather, there was a large attendance. The reports presented were most interesting, and told of a year of vigorous and successful work.

The annual Congregational meeting in connection with Jesmond Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, has been held. From the reports in the printed Year Book, the various organizations associated with the church, of which Rev. John A. Hutton, M.A., is minister, appear to be in a very healthy condition. During the year sixty-four names have been added to the Communion roll, and, deducting fifty-one removals, the total membership now stands at 647.

Society of Friends.

At the afternoon conference at Bedfordshire Quarterly Meeting, the subject of the "Best method of utilizing our meeting-houses on First-day evenings" was ably introduced by Edward Grubb, present by special invitation. A lively discussion ensued, and this was the most largely attended meeting of the series. The subject was looked at in all its bearings, and there was a general recognition of the fact that the needs of different localities are many and various—only to be met by the exercise of wisdom and common-sense in the adaptation of means to ends, under the guidance of a charitable and Christ-like spirit.

The annual meeting of the Town Mission, Lancaster, was held in the Friends' Meeting House. The president, Mr. G. W. Barrow, spoke, and Mr. G. H. Weekes gave an interesting account of the general work, and said that many lives had been made brighter and better as a result of the mission. The mission is carried on without any appeal for outside help.

In connection with the West Kent Mission of the Protestant Reformation Society, a series of public lectures are being given in the Co-operative Hall, Bromley. Deputy Surgeon-General W. P. Partridge commenced the course with a lecture on "An Upper Room." At the second meeting Mr. Charles Gardiner, missionary of the Society in Tunbridge Wells, spoke on "Our National Church in the Sixteenth Century; Its Friends and Foes."

"The police-court branch of the Town Mission, Hyde, Lancs., has of late been richly owned and blessed of God in the reclamation of prisoners, both men and women, who testify to changed lives and joy in Christ," So writes Mr. J. B. Lomas, missionary and pastor. He adds: "The new Licensing Act brings us in touch with a new phase of philanthropic work, viz., women whose husbands obtain a separation order from them, and to whom only bare pittance is allowed. Help is needed to provide temporary shelter for these poor creatures, often driven to drink or led into it by their husbands and then cast aside. £55 has been given or promised by sympathisers towards clearing off the debt of £350 on the new mission hall."

Fallen Asleep.

On February 3, after a long life of Christian activity and devotion, Mrs. Jane Gaskin passed away at Dorchester. She opened and conducted for many years one of the most successful of Clifton's girls' schools, and was singularly used of God in influencing young minds towards the mission field. Many workers at home and abroad owe to her exemplary life their first impulse for Christian service. —South Ockendon, Essex, has lost an active Christian worker, and a sympathetic friend of the poor, by the death of Rev. A. A. Savage, pastor of the Congregational Chapel. Prior to going to Ockendon he held a pastorate at Ingatestone.—A long life of faithful service has been closed by the falling asleep on Sunday, February 8, of an aged servant of Christ, Mr. Mearns, of Tottenham. Converted at an early age, his consistent work and unfailing testimony to the faithfulness of God has been an encouragement and strength to many of the Lord's people who loved and valued him.

Notices.

Mr. Henry Thorne, who is preparing an account of his mission work in England and other countries, will be obliged if ministers, missionaries, and other Christian workers who have been led to know the Lord in any of his services will send him a few words of testimony as to when it was and when they obtained the blessing, and as to their present occupation and service in the Lord's vineyard. Communications may be addressed to 31, Beverley Road, Anerley, London, S.E.

Miss Wooldridge, daughter of the late Mr. John Wooldridge, who for many years was well known as a faithful and successful tent-evangelist, has a number of copies of the book (137 pp.) which tells of her father's "Life Work." These she would be glad to send to Sailors' Rests, &c., at 9s. per dozen if friends would help her with subscriptions addressed to her at 4, Serffs Terrace, Huxley Road, Leyton.

The Y.M.C.A. Forward Movement. None too soon has the Council of the Y.M.C.A. resolved to extend its work into the smaller towns and villages of our country, where at present young men are not provided for. This forward movement is likely to be one of the last in which the venerable Sir George Williams can hope, by reason of his years, to take active interest. His appeal for the work should not pass unheeded. There is especial need for labour among young men in smaller places where life lacks something of the colour and attractiveness associated with large towns. To capture a young man for Christ before he plunges into city life, is a great thing. There is abundant opportunity for the Y.M.C.A. to renew its youth in this direction.

Beginning at Home. Mr. Augustine Birrell, in his speech last week at Bristol, struck a note which needs to become dominant just now. People of all parties are beginning to realise, with him, that our attention has been of late years directed to distant affairs rather than to the state of our own house, with the consequence that we are suffering in our home life in many directions. Mr. Birrell spoke wisely when he warned his hearers that a nation's greatness does not consist in external aggrandisement, but in the breed of its people, and their tasks, habits, and ideals. Now that Parliament has re-assembled, there will be ample food for reflection, and material for reform We must reach the cause of lowered ideals. The nation's taste is vitiated because its heart is estranged from God. Politicians may continue to talk about reforms, but their words will be useless while men exile God from life. The nation will yet have to understand that its prophets and evangelists are its truest friends, and that the message of the Gospel which they announce is the first message they need to hear and to heed.

The Nancy Trial. The indictment framed by the Bishop of Nancy, together with five archbishops and fifteen bishops, in regard to "the crimes of the Good Shepherd Nuns," to which reference was made in our last issue, should have at least one effect in these islands. Surely no one can read of the cruelties and horrors which for years have been going on behind the bolts and bars of these conventual establishments in France, without determining that his or her voice shall be lifted up to insist upon the official inspection of all such places in Great Britain and Ireland. Some of them are, to use President Loubet's words, "trading associations masquerading under the name of religion," and it is time that full light should be let in upon their methods. "He that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God" (John iii. 21).

Rome and the Children. The Roman Catholic press is naturally jubilant over what it calls "the Great Conversion movement"—that is, the passing over to its worship on Sunday week, of half an Anglican congregation, as referred to in our last issue. In the course of an interview with a reporter, the Roman priest of the church to which the congregation of St. Michael's, Shoreditch, has, in part, migrated, said :—

> I could not help remarking the training—Catholic training, apparently—which the children appeared to give evidence of. They sang Catholic hymns in a perfect manner.

And this training they received at the hands of a clergyman who at his ordination swore to defend the Protestant faith ! Mr. Evans was admittedly a very extreme man in his practices, but, as the Church Times says in a leading article, the basis of his practices, his doctrine, is held by the "Catholic" party in the Church of England. This is undoubtedly true, and thousands of children are regularly receiving a "Catholic" training in this way. This is Rome's opportunity—she can afford to wait until the children become adults and go over to her communion. But there is a terrible responsibility resting upon those parents who so easily put their children into the hands of clerics who violate their ordination vows, and undermine with secret influences the most sacred ties of family life.

"The Protestant Dictionary." A most useful compendium of facts for the use of Protestant teachers will in a few months be issued by the Protestant Reformation Society, 62, Berners Street, W. The articles contain comprehensive replies to various popular Ritualistic manuals, and cover a wide field of Romanist controversy in its modern aspects. No dictionary on the Evangelical side, taking account of Scripture teaching and primitive faith and practice, has for many years been compiled ; but all the time Rome has been aggressive, and there has been abundance of material published in support of opposite positions. The editors of the dictionary are Dr. C. H. H. Wright and Rev. Chas. Neil, while the contributors form a strong array of able men who have specialized in the particular subjects with which they deal. The volume is to be published at 15s., but a special initial offer is made at 10s. 6d., for a limited number only, if orders are lodged at once with Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, 27, Paternoster Row, E.C. It is a work that all who can should buy.

Science and Alcoholism. The ravages wrought by drink throughout our own and other countries, have elicited from doctors and scientists a chorus of condemnation of alcohol either as food or stimulant. It is well that eminent men, who have hitherto been silent upon the matter, are now speaking with no uncertain sound. It is necessary they should do so, in view of the attitude taken up by the "trade" organs towards temperance. In last week's Licensed Victualler, for instance, "robustness" is definitely associated with drinking habits, and "limpness" with temperance. With people who are capable of so distorting facts, the moral argument has little weight, but the medical and scientific answers to them will weigh even with those who reject the higher appeal. Science is a grand ally for a Christian—for all Christian truth is founded upon real science, i.e., assured facts—but we must take care ever to sound the Christian note as paramount. Our message is not one of reformation only ; it is radically one of regeneration. "Ye must be born again" has in it everything for human life ; without that the vital element will always be lacking.

The French Government and Drink. In many practical ways of late, the French Administration has given evidence of a desire to intensify the war against alcohol. The most striking step, however, has been that of posting a placard, within the last week or two, upon the doors of the mayoralties, police stations, and other public buildings, drawing attention to the degeneration of the working-classes through drinking habits ; and exposing a number of popular fallacies as to alcohol being of service, and indicating the traffic as the prolific cause of poverty, crime, and a host of grave diseases in their worst form. Naturally "the trade" is up in arms to defend their money-making, soul-destroying business ; but, happily, the French Government disregards unholy vested interests, if opposed to the well-being of the people. Such an effort makes for righteousness. We need Christian statesmen bold enough, under the Divine influence, to grapple with the growing evil of the drink trade. The need is one to be laid before God in earnest daily prayer.

Sunday Railway Labour. It is distressing to see week after week the amount of excavating and other arduous work enforced upon the Lord's Day by certain railways. The excuse is that alterations and repairs can only be done on that day, to prevent interference with the daily traffic. But what of the interference with the commands of God and the claims of men ? Besides, it is not true. The work could be done at night ; but that might entail additional expense and decrease dividends ! The construction of the new "tube" at Finsbury Park employs an army of Sabbath labourers, which is a scandal that demands a protest. So, too, the drainage work on the Midland (South Tottenham line). Cannot Christian railway shareholders make their voice heard in such cases as these ? We are glad to see Prebendary Webb-Peploe bringing the question of excessive Sunday goods-traffic before the directors of the G.N.R. "Them that honour Me I will honour" is the Divine promise. Let it be put to the test.

The "Clean" Newspaper. We wish it were immediately possible for the suggestions of Mr. Justice Darling and Lady Jeune, with regard to the publication in the papers of nasty cases in the Courts, to be carried into practical effect. Of late there has been a multiplication of details published which can do no good to anybody, and very much harm to many. It ought to suffice to report only the bare essentials of these cases, so that the necessary publicity may be attained, and nothing beyond that to satisfy the prurient-minded or to soil the innocent. We deplore the methods of the realistic novel as carried out in our daily papers. They familiarize the reader with shameful things. The Apostle, writing to the Ephesians, declared it was a "shame to speak" of these things. What then of advertising them broadcast?

Aliens. Mr. Lewis Lyons' open letter to the chief Rabbi of the United Kingdom, in reference to the alien question, is of deep interest, as representing, in a clear and able manner, the position in the matter of the hard-working, respectable Jews. Unhappily, it is difficult, in times of hardship and distress, to stop to discriminate, and it is to be feared that the respectable Jews and small tradesmen may have to suffer through the misdeeds of their undeserving and criminal brethren. Mr. Lyons has suggested a conference of representatives from all the synagogues and Jewish trades'-unions and friendly societies, to deal with the question of the harbouring of the criminal classes, the discreditable Jewish landlords and sweaters, and other points bearing upon the anti-alien movement. It is to be hoped that the suggestion will be adopted, and promptly, for the growing feeling certainly points to troublous times for those who are in a strange land only by sufferance, and whose well-earned good name is being overlooked through the iniquities of unscrupulous and criminal immigrants. Legislation undoubtedly must be forthcoming; but it should breathe the spirit of the Master in both its basis and its results.

Black and White. The racial question has again taken a front place amongst pressing modern problems; and so far as America, South Africa, and, to a certain extent, India are concerned, it is one which cannot with safety or justice long be left unsolved. The right of the coloured subject to full citizenship may be a crucial problem. The American Secretary for War urges that the responsibility for the welfare of the black can never be thrown off, and that the question of what to do in the present condition of affairs "should occupy the greatest minds of the country." It is certain that the unchristian divisions which are now permitted to exist will become very powerful for evil if they are not promptly filled in and bridged over. As it has always done at such crises, the Church of Christ must point the way.

The Moslem. Rev. Dr. Zwemer, F.R.G.S., in his recently-published life of Raymund Lulli, the first missionary to the Moslems, has some burning words in regard to the smallness of missionary work in Mohammedan countries. He says that, in regard to those people, we are as yet only "playing at missions." This is sadly and impressively true. A reviewer has added to this charge:—

> Mission statistics of direct work for Moslems are an apology for apathy, rather than an index of enterprise. . . . This neglect appears the more inexcusable, if we consider the great opportunities of to-day. More than 125,000,000 Moslems are now under Christian rulers. The keys of every gateway in the Moslem world are to-day in the political grasp of Christian powers, with the exception of Mecca and Constantinople. . . . The disintegration of Mohammedanism, as seen in the reformatory movement of the Wahabis in Arabia, the Babi movement in Persia, the Young Turkish Party in Constantinople, and the Bible now everywhere speaking in the languages of Islam, show how auspicious is the time for taking the work of conquest.

Self and Steadfastness. In the practical outcome of our life, it makes all the difference whether we essay "our part" with some looking to self—however little—for will and power to perform, or whether we do it with a heart happily at rest in God as He "who worketh in us to will and to do." To struggle to make oneself steadfast, wholehearted, or prayerful is one thing; to hold that a heart fixed and whole for God and for duty is a gift—and simple gift that one asks for as one asks for pardon—is quite another. The first means fear, failure, and much grieving of God; for, so long as self has any place at all, "our part" is always beyond us—is always impossible. The second means "life and peace;" for when every square inch of the being is open to the Blessed One in restful receptivity, He fills it with His own life—with His victorious power to be and to do according to His will. Then, and only then, can we really "do our part."

The Revival of Worship. From the pen of Dr. Goodrich, of Manchester, has come one of the best letters we have seen upon the pressing question of church attendance. He touches a point that very few have raised in the course of the whole correspondence—i.e., the absence of the sense of worship.

> Our people have not been led to think of Divine worship as a Christian duty. If they like the preacher, they go; if they do not, they don't go. The public worship of God is to many just one of the incidental things of life. . . . Christian people must realize that public Divine worship is a solemn duty, without which God's name is not hallowed and the soul is not nourished.

This raises another point—whether the present method of holding services does always lead to worship. Tradition has wedded the sermon to the service, and not always to edification. Again, does the presence of a man in a church mean that he is a worshipper? He may be far enough removed from that. Surely it would be an excellent thing if the Church only occasionally met for the sole purpose of worship. The preaching could be a separate thing. If there is no adoration of God, the basis of all vanishes. Whatever be the method employed, we certainly need a revival of worship.

"Doing our Part." "We must do our part if God is to do His"—who would suspect evil of a saying so true and innocent as this? It is true enough; for, if we would reap God's harvests, we must sow. We must use the means, not forgetting the great means of prayer, if we are to know His power; and, if we would abide in Christ, we must live in His Word. And yet it is apt to suggest the fallacy that, in "doing our part," we are less absolutely dependent on God than at other times. To the great majority, it limits the trust-area of life, and gives to self-effort a recognized sphere. It seems to imply that, in our use of the means, we trust more or less to self, and not simply and quietly in God alone. With many people it divides life into two—the area of mixed trust in self-effort plus Divine grace; and the area of pure trust in God alone. What is this but the sanctioning of that self-trust which God counts idolatry, and from which all evils come?

Professor C. von Orelli

ON "BABEL AND BIBLE."

AMONG those who accepted the challenge of Professor Friedrich Delitzsch, and replied to his contention that Israel's religion and civilization were of Babylonian origin, was Professor C. von Orelli, the distinguished Old Testament commentator, of Basle. At the outset of a remarkable lecture, delivered a few days ago, he referred to the enthusiasm, largely unreasonable, which has attended the decipherment of the cuneiform inscriptions discovered during the past fifty years on the site of old Babylon. While some have expected too much in the way of confirmation of Bible story, others have gone to the opposite extreme, and expected (or desired) to find in Babylonian antiquities the starting-point of all the usages and legends of subsequent civilizations. Accordingly, one Assyriologist had gone so far as to derive from the mythology and astronomy of the Babylonians the history of Harmodius and Aristogiton, the two Athenian liberators, as well as stories regarding the old kings of Rome!

Professor von Orelli held that Professor Delitzsch fell into a similar error when he made itappear that everything great and noble in the Old Testament flowed from Babylonian civilization. In the first place, the facts which he exhibited as something altogether new were acquired by the Science of Biblical Antiquities from twenty-five to thirty years ago; and, as Hommel, the Assyriologist, has remarked, the fact that it should have been possible to present these data as NEW before a German audience, is hardly flattering to the interest which the Germans actually take in Biblical questions! Again, in his enthusiasm for things Babylonian, Professor Delitzsch has not reflected that if the materials in question were common to Babylonians and Israelites, yet the Biblical use and narration are inspired by a spirit infinitely superior to the Babylonian—a very important circumstance in this connection.

Recognising the wealth of light that the inscriptions have thrown upon the text of Scripture, Professor von Orelli passed on to remark that it is more than ever rash to-day to call in question the historic personality of the patriarchs. Since the spade has been at work, scientists have lost a good deal of their scepticism regarding personages of antiquity. The first sovereign of Egypt was classed as a mythical being; to-day his tomb has been found! It is the same with Midas of Phrygia, Minos of Crete, Semiramis and many others. Without noticing the sarcasms of the learned, Schliemann carried on his excavations to recover the ancient city of the Trojans; he succeeded, and a new period of Greek civilisation was revealed to science.

The age of Abraham can no longer be relegated to prehistoric times. On the Amarna tablets we find information regarding the political condition of Palestine in days anterior to Joshua—information in harmony with the Bible story—forcibly refuting many prevalent assertions regarding the credibility of Genesis. Proceeding to compare the Babylonian and Biblical accounts of events narrated in the early chapters of Genesis, including the Flood, Professor von Orelli showed the great and vital differences and contrasts, making it plain to his hearers that the Old Testament story is special and original in substance and character. It is incomprehensible, he said, that Professor Delitzsch should have attributed to Babylonian records a character more pure and primitive than belongs to those of the Old Testament. The struggle of Marduk or Bel against the Dragon of the Abyss, as a result of which heaven and earth came into being, shows us the low idea of the Divine entertained by the Babylonians. Moreover, it presents a striking contrast with the simple story of the first chapter of Genesis, a record which from age to age has exhibited the true relation of God to the world, and of man to God and the world.

The Prophet and the Child.

I.

AN incident of painful interest in the life of Elisha is recorded in 2 Kings ii. 23. The age of these juvenile offenders has been the subject of some discussion. Probably we are to understand "youths" rather than "little children," since the substantive used is applied to Solomon when he must have been sixteen or seventeen years of age (1 Chron. xxix. 1). At any rate, they represented the "rising generation" of Bethel, a town of hallowed memories, which signified "the House of God," but had degenerated (Hosea. x. 5) into Bethaven, "the House of Vanity."

Yet these young folk were not heathen, They lived in a centre of light and learning, with a school of the prophets in their midst. From the day when Jeroboam selected Bethel as a site for one of his golden calves, steady deterioration had set in, so that before that monarch died, the "old prophet of Bethel" (1 Kings xiii.), who in every sense had "seen better days," had become a byword for his backsliding, and the whole community was correspondingly demoralized. Thus these young hooligans grew up with no respect for a prophet's age or calling, and no reverence for religion or the laws of God. In mocking Elisha, they derided Him whose appointed messenger he was—an apt illustration of Paul's words: "The carnal mind is enmity against God" (Rom. viii. 7).

WHO WAS TO BLAME?

Of course we condemn them; but was the fault theirs alone? Were not their parents even more to blame? What were their surroundings, what their homes? If the fountain be defiled, can the spring be clean? Ungodliness will rule the family, if vanity dominate the home. A prophet may teach the things of God, but godless or backsliding parents will frustrate his best endeavour.

Not even a doting mother can bear her children's sin. Rachel may weep, but she cannot avert the blow; and the home-coming of these lacerated forms must pierce her heart with even keener pain than the sufferers themselves endure.

We do not assume that all these young folk were slain. To tear is not necessarily to kill. They were not likely to stand still to be eaten! Young people are nimble on their feet, and these would not think twice before taking to their heels. Two she-bears could hardly do more than wound so many in so short a time. But whatever the degree, the punishment was sufficiently severe; the young scoffers learned the lesson that God is not to be mocked with impunity, and that sin must incur its rightful penalty. For God has unexpected ways of teaching men—even as Gideon, who "took thorns, and with them he taught the men of Succoth" (Judges viii. 16).

MODERN TOPSIES.

Does not the incident suggest a searching lesson for modern days? We all remember the little black girl, Topsy, in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," whose only theory of creation was, "Spec's I growed!" She was an unattractive mite, shockingly ignorant, and, as many would consider, "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked"; and yet the simple, childlike care of little Eva won her heart to the love of God. We may not appreciate the doubtful genius that prompts children to do such things as she delighted in, but we know many like her. In homes and Sunday-schools, as well as in the streets, there are scores of little unfortunates—neglected, troublesome, or spoiled—anything but paragons in looks, in manners, or in conduct, and who, on that account, too often cry in vain for the care that is their due.

Children differ in appearance as well as in habits; some naturally attract us, others as certainly repel. Even parents are liable (and, perhaps, teachers more so still) to prefer one child above another; yet all are equally precious in the sight of God who made them all. We admire a pretty child, with rosy cheeks and curly hair, and are apt to regard it as so much more worth saving than one of puny and unattractive face; but beneath the undesirable exterior there may exist a nature stored with a wealth of future possibilities, and a heart beating with pent-up love—if only we had eyes to see it, and patient commonsense to draw it out. Nor have we always found that those most pleasing to the outward eye turn out the best, or reward most gratefully the interest shown on their behalf.

THE EXAMPLE OF JESUS.

When the Saviour took the little ones in His arms and blessed them, we do not think He selected a pretty one here and there, and left the ugly ones alone. We love to believe that He took them as they came; and that if favour were shown at all, it was to the one who evinced the readiest desire to come.

Those of us who, like Timothy, were born of Christian parentage, and have attended helpful ministry, feel the gratitude we owe to those who trained us in the Scriptures, and led our feet into the way of peace. Yet how haltingly even we have followed their holy walk, how indifferently obeyed the voice of our teachers, or inclined our ear to them that instructed us! While, then, we mourn our own shortcomings, our indolence or wilfulness, weakness or rebellion, let us at least see to it that, like Lois and Eunice (2 Tim. i. 5), we deal faithfully with the young committed to our care, and teach them to avoid the mistakes that we have made.

It is not fair to pack our children off to Sunday-school, merely that we may be at ease ourselves, and expect the teacher or the minister to counteract, in one brief hour, the irritation or inconsistency we show them all the week beside. We may and yet "Beth-aven" would more fitly describe many so-called Christian homes.

Let us remember that even the influence of an Elisha has its limits, beyond which it can no further go; and that no minister, however earnest—no teacher, however wise—can compete with the example of a worldly home. "I know him," said God, concerning Abraham, "that he will command his children and his household after him" (Gen. xviii. 19). He knows us too. What does He know? If our homes exhibited more command, and our lives more self-control, there would be less of disappointment and chagrin.

Shall we not cultivate the Elisha-life, if only for our children's sakes, that, bound with us in the bonds of eternal life, they may, perchance, become Elishas too? And if we do not see it in our own day, may we not hope that (if, like him, we put God first), those of our dear ones who have not thus gladdened our hearts may, like the unknown stranger whose body touched Elisha's bones, in some unexpected way be quickened with the Spirit-life, and "stand up on their feet" for Christ, even when we have passed away? G.

The Man with the Inkhorn.*

By Mrs. M. BAXTER.

"He called to the man clothed in linen which had the writer's inkhorn by his side. And the Lord said unto him, Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof." (Ezek. ix. 3, 4.)

THE men that sigh, and that cry for all the abominations—who are they? Not those who go with the multitude, who are in the fashion, who do what they think people expect them to do. Jeremiah was one who cried and sighed; he took to heart the sin of his people; if they were not ashamed, he was ashamed for them. Daniel was one of these, when he confessed his sin and the sin of his people (Dan. ix. 20), and Ezekiel himself was one. It is very striking that about this time God had in Jerusalem, in Babylon, and among the captives by the river Chebar, witnesses who stood on His side, and who would not be at rest while His name was dishonoured, and His glory put to shame.

How is it in our own day? Surely we, too, are living in a time of crisis. What position are we taking up? Are we on God's side? Are we seeing things in His light? And are we filled with shame, confusion, and grief that He is so little understood, and His Word so neglected? Does our cry go up to God in deep earnest, "Hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done as in heaven so on earth"? Are we a marked people, despised and rejected with our Lord and with His prophets?

As the blood-sprinkled lintel and doorpost of the Israelites' houses in Egypt forbade the entrance of the destroyer, so now in Jerusalem the marked ones were to be spared. "And to the others He said in mine hearing, Go ye through the city after him, and smite; let not your eye spare, neither have ye pity; slay utterly the old man, the young man, and the maiden, and little children and women; but come not near any man upon whom is the mark; and begin at my sanctuary." The most guilty were the teachers and elders of the people! Oh, do men understand this? Are there not some preachers who think that they shall escape judgment because they are preachers? Miserable delusion! Because they are preachers, they are the more guilty.

They began with the elders, and the awful command went forth: "Defile the house, and fill the courts with the slain." The presence of the Lord was departing; destruction and death took His place. It was an awful moment for Ezekiel; all around him in his vision he saw the dying and the dead. "And it came to pass while they were smiting, and I was left—(alone in the court of the priests, the only faithful one)—that I fell upon my face, and cried, and said, Ah, Lord God, wilt Thou destroy all the residue of Israel, in Thy pouring out of Thy fury upon Jerusalem?" It was like that moment in the wilderness when Elijah said, "Behold I, even I, only, am left."

Ezekiel must learn that even in such a judgment, a holy God could not have done otherwise, and He explained to His bewildered servant: "The iniquity of the house of Israel and Judah is exceeding great, and the land is full of blood, and the city full of wresting of judgment, for they say, The Lord (Jehovah) hath forsaken the earth, and Jehovah seeth not" (Ezek. ix. 9). This is the apostasy, when men, without restraint, will go all lengths in sin, and then lay the blame on God, and say, "He hath forsaken us, He does not hear prayer, He takes no notice." Oh, how terribly is this spirit of our own age! God is relegated to the background by His creatures and spoken of as though He were not to be trusted! And yet in many ways, God is mightily asserting Himself. "And as for Me also, Mine eyes shall not spare, neither will I have pity, but I will bring their way upon their head." "And behold the man who had the inkhorn by his side reported the matter, saying, I have done as Thou hast commanded me." There was no other way, and Ezekiel did not question.

*Fulfilling the Ministry.

By Rev. Dr. R. A. TORREY.

WHEN God calls a man to the ministry of the Gospel, He puts the greatest honour upon him that is possible in this life. It is a greater thing to be a minister of the Gospel than to fill any other office on earth. The minister of the Gospel, if he be a true minister, lays the foundations of the nation's future greatness.

Suppose a man were called to stand in a position where a thousand lives depended on his faithfulness, and he proved faithful, he could look back and say, "There are a thousand lives saved because I was faithful." But suppose a man is placed in such a situation, and he proves unfaithful. A thousand lives are destroyed because he is unfaithful. Could anything be more appalling than that? When God calls you and me into the ministry, where, if we are faithful, nobody can tell how many lives will be saved, not only for time, but for all eternity—can anything be more glorious? He calls us into a place where, if we are unfaithful, only eternity can measure the awful desolation that is wrought.

How are you to "fulfil your ministry," or "fill your ministry full?" How are you to accomplish all that God intended when he called you?

I. If we are to succeed, we must form a very clear conception of what the ministry is. What is the purpose of the Christian ministry?

(1) The purpose of the ministry is, first of all, to save the perishing. In Luke xix. 10 the purpose of Christ's own ministry is defined. When He calls you and me into the ministry, He means that to be the main purpose of our lives. To save the lost is the purpose of every true Christian life. "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men," is addressed to the whole Church, but specially this is the work of the ministry.

SOUL-WINNING OR FAILURE.

The minister of the Gospel who is not winning souls and saving the lost is a failure, whatever else he may be doing. He may be doing good work, and getting a good name for himself, but unless he is bringing men to an acceptance of Jesus Christ, he is a failure.

(2) The next purpose of the ministry is to feed the flock (Acts xx. 28). I do not know for Britain; but, alas! in my own country there is many a minister who is not feeding the flock. There are those who are giving to the flock poison instead of food. I do not believe any man does that wittingly; but we live in an age when novelty is applauded. The man who can bring forward something novel or original will be applauded in the newspapers. The temptation to bring out a new view of things to a man who is ambitious—and a man who is not ambitious is no good as a minister—is almost overwhelming.

I plead with you that you will never bring anything before your people until you are absolutely sure it is the truth of God. No matter how plausible it may seem, or how helpful in certain directions, never bring anything before your people until you have fought it through on your knees in the white light of God's own presence.

THE DEMANDS OF HONESTY.

In my own early ministry I wanted to be honest. As soon as I got a new view of things I thought that for honesty's sake my people ought to know of my change of views. So I came out conscientiously, in all honesty, and declared my departure from the commonly-accepted view. I did it for honesty. It is well to be honest; it is well also to be sure.

If I had waited, I could have been just as honest, for honesty does not demand that you should bring forth your half-baked conceptions; and if I had waited I would not have had to take back what I have had to take back with bitterness. For it is a great deal easier to unsettle people than it is to settle them again. Be sure it is food that you are giving to your people.

It is possible to offer to the flock sawdust instead of food. Be sure that what you are giving them is not poison, not sawdust, but the truth of God. If you will preach the truth from that book, the Bible, you may be sure you are giving them bread.

(3) The third purpose of the Christian ministry is to train people to work (Eph. iv. 11-13). Instead of the words in the Authorized Version, "for the work of the ministry," the Revised Version, following the Greek, reads, "unto the work of ministering." The work of the minister is to train the people unto the work of ministering. It is your work and mine to train our membership in this way.

I have been pastor of four churches, all very different—about every kind of church there is. Every one of these has had a steady and remarkable increase. I have never had a church that did not double its membership in a few years. The secret of this is that I did not try to do the work. I trained my membership to do the work. I started out in my first church with a training class of members. I taught them how to win souls, and they did it.

A LIVE CHURCH AT WORK.

My church to-day has 1,800 members. Each section has a superintendent, who has under him, or her, workers. Every pew has a Christian worker in it. Wherever a man or woman sits down, within easy reach there is another man or woman who knows how to use the Bible to bring a soul to Christ. As soon as I am done preaching the net is complete, and the stranger is caught. Suppose a man does not like what I say, and gets up to go out, no better thing could happen. No sooner is he outside than one of my workers has a call also to go into the street. He follows the man, opens a conversation, and before the man knows he is being led to Christ.

Anyone can preach in that kind of a church; start out just as soon as you get hold of the people to train them for the work of ministering.

II. We must give ourselves to Prayer and the Word of God (Acts vi. 4).

(1) Give yourself to prayer. Any man who is not a man of prayer will be a failure as a minister. You may study, you may do good work, you may be eloquent, you may be a remarkable preacher, but if you are not emphatically a man of prayer, you will be a failure as a minister, Any man who does not love the gathering together of God's people for prayer, and the secret closet, ought to get out of the ministry, or, better still, to be transformed into a man of prayer.

The men who have led the Church of Christ have differed widely from one another in their preaching: they have held Calvinistic, Arminian, and other views; but they have been all alike in this respect—every one of them has been a man of prayer.

PRAYER WILL PUT ALL RIGHT.

When you and I stand at the farther end of our ministry, and look back on its successes and failures, I believe every one of us will wish we had prayed more. If you have learned the secret of spending much time upon your knees, or upon your face, before God, pouring out the soul in earnest to Him, you have learned the secret of success in the ministry. For if the prayer life is right, all will come right.

(2) Give yourself to the ministry of the Word. Whatever theories we may hold about the inspiration of this Book, and regarding criticism, there is one thing easily demonstrable. That is, that this Word, declared without hesitation, without compromise, and without excuse, still has more power to draw men of all classes than any other book. The man who preaches the Bible unhesitatingly, in an intelligent way, without making any excuse, in the power of the Holy Ghost, will always get a hearing.

What this old world is hungering to hear is the Book. Take Chicago. It is a city that goes in for things big; big churches with the rest. It is said to be the wickedest city in the world, it is also the city where Christian people are most aggressive. The churches that are filled on a Sunday evening are the churches where men preach just one thing, and that is the Bible.

DIG, DIG, DIG INTO THE BOOK.

Not only has the Book power to draw men, but it has power also to convert them. You must study the Book. No man has a right to be in the ministry who is not a student, and does not propose to remain a student to the last day of his life; but he must be a student of one Book. I know you are students. Are you Bible students? Do you dig, dig, dig, everlastingly dig, into that Book?

Much that is called Bible study is not study of the Book; and what I am concerned for is study of the Bible itself—not to know what men say about the Bible; I submit that that is not Bible study.

We must study the Bible in a practical way, so as to know how to bring it to bear on men and women as they are to-day, and as their temptations and needs are. Somewhere in the Book there is the medicine that every sin-sick soul needs; and we must know it to find the proper medicine in every case. If you do not know how to take the Bible and bring its power to bear upon a sin-sick soul, it is time you found out.

III. We must put out of our lives every known sin. There are men in theological halls and in the ministry who have not done this. I do not wish to be father-confessor to any man, but one is forced into the position sometimes; and the saddest confessions I have ever heard have been those of ministers of the Gospel, telling of repeated failures arising from going on with something displeasing to God. We can all be perfect in this respect, that we may not be set on anything that we know to be sinful.

"TO HIM IT IS SIN."

We must put away doubtful things. Men come to me and ask, Is this thing wrong, is that thing wrong? It is wrong for you, or you would not come with that question. The fact that you ask it shows that you have an uneasy conscience; and whatsoever is not of faith is sin.

We must put away everything that will rob us of influence with anybody. Many things that are perfectly right and innocent in themselves are not perfectly right and innocent for you and me, because they rob us of influence with somebody.

In a world hurrying on to ruin, I want every ounce of power that I can have for God and for good. I settled in the theological seminary that I would never smoke again; and I know I have reached people I could not have reached if I had smoked.

IV. We must be definitely baptized by the Holy Ghost. I do not care for terms or hair-splitting. I would rather have the right thing by the wrong name than the wrong thing by the right name; but you must have a definite enduement of power from on high.

Young men, God has seen fit to lay much responsibility upon you for the success of His Church in Scotland. I believe He is calling some of you to a line of surrender to Him, to the line of consecration to His service, and of power that will mean great things for the land. Step over the line, and blessing will come. Draw back, and failure and disappointment are inevitably yours.

He Faileth Not.

WHATE'ER life may bring to you,
"God" will ring true to you:—
Star in your sky—
Food in your store—
Staff in your hand—
Friend by your side—
Light on your path—
Joy in your heart,
In your ears music—
In your mouth song.
Yes, rapid as your race may run,
And scorching as may shine your sun,
And bitter as may blow your blast,
And lonely as your lot be cast—
Whatever life may bring to you,
"God" will aye ring true to you.

The Oracles of God.

LECTURE BY DR. A. T. PIERSON.

CONTINUING his course of lectures in exposition of "The Oracles of God," Dr. Pierson addressed on Friday evening a large and appreciative audience. The numbers increase from week to week, showing the deep interest taken in the subject.

Taking up points of Prophecy not considered the previous week, Dr. Pierson recalled the numerous predictions of which the Jew is the centre, and showed how in subsequent history each had been fulfilled to the letter, excepting those relating to the ages yet to come. These predictions involved that the Jews should be (1) besieged by their enemies with such severity that the women should eat their own children; (2) rooted out of their land and carried into captivity; (3) never allowed to find rest in the land of their captivity, but be scattered abroad in all parts of the earth; (4) despoiled by their enemies, and made a prey; (5) a by-word, an astonishment, a hissing, in the countries where they should be found; (6) while scattered, they should remain separate from the nations among whom they resided; and (7) finally, be restored to their own land. Could it be possible, he asked, that such a phenomenon as this should have been foretold by Moses—and the prophecy fulfilled before our eyes—and not communicated to him by Almighty God? One of Europe's greatest monarchs asked his chaplain to give him, in a word, proof that the Bible was true.

THE REPLY WAS—"THE JEW."

But aside from the Jew as the centre of prophecy of the Holy Scripture, there is a wider circle that embraces the whole human race. We find it in Genesis ix., where we have a threefold distribution of the human race (vv. 18-27). Ham went to Africa and settled it, Japheth to Europe, and Shem to Asia. Here is the foundation of the three great continents then known to men.

We are told in this chapter that God should enlarge Japheth, and no race has known such enlargement as has come to the Japhetic. The descendants of Shem and Ham never spread by conquests over the face of the earth to the same extent as those of Japheth; and while it is the proud boast of the British Empire that the sun never sets on the dominions of King Edward, it does not behove Great Britain to question the authority of the prophecy uttered by Noah concerning Japheth. With regard to Canaan, the son of Ham, it is three times averred that he should be the servant of his brethren, namely, a slave, and the great outstanding fact is before us that nearly all the slaves of the world have come from the Hamitic race. The terrible slavery trade carried on the coast of Africa, for which Great Britain and the United States were partly responsible for many centuries, is fresh in the minds of all. So extensive has been the African slavery that the bodies of those whose lives have been lost in the middle passage, and of those who perished in securing the natives of that land and incorporating them as slaves, would make a double row extending round the earth at the Equator.

Turning to Dan. ii. Dr. Pierson drew attention to the remarkable vision of world-empire, communicated to Nebuchadnezzar in a dream which he was unable to recall, but was revealed to the prophet. He dealt in detail with each feature of the colossal image, and its respective significance in the scheme of prophecy concerning Babylon and the kingdoms of succeeding eras. The regular degeneracy in the image from the head of gold to feet of iron and clay foretold a degeneracy from the absolute sovereignty of one man, even to oligarchy and virtual anarchy. The prophecy was sure, its fulfilment certain.

Proceeding to chapter vii. the lecturer pointed out that the same truths unfolded in chapter ii. are found here also. What Nebuchadnezzar saw in the image, Daniel saw in the procession of wild beasts from the sea. Yet there was a distinction in the experiences of King and prophet; for, while to Nebuchadnezzar world-empire was a colossal figure of glory, Daniel saw represented in the wild beasts the inward corruption of the race, its sensuality and defiance of God. How could anyone, he asked, having studied these prophecies and the events fulfilling the predictions, and doubt the word and work of the One whose providence has shaped history, and whose eye is over all the ages yet to come?

PROPHECY A FOUNDATION OF FAITH.

In reviewing the two lectures which he has devoted to the theme of prophecy, Dr. Pierson reminded his hearers that the Bible contains about a thousand predictions. The majority of these have already been fulfilled, and he was convinced that some 300 are in process of accomplishment now and in the approaching centuries. "Why have we thought it worth while to spend two evenings on this subject? Because prophecy is designed to be a foundation of faith in a supernatural God and a supernatural Book. If as yet you cannot see your way clearly to accept the Bible as the Word of God, here you have a path that leads you up to the vestibule of faith. The province of reason is to inquire (1) whether the Bible is the Word of God, (2) what it contains, and (3) what relation its contents have to us. When reason is satisfied on these three matters then the way of faith is absolutely clear.

AN APPOSITE ILLUSTRATION.

"Suppose it became necessary for me to have an operation performed upon some of my vital organs, in order to save me from certain death, what should I do? I should first find out if the surgeon was capable of dealing with my physical ailment; secondly, that he was not a man of malice, and would not inflict upon me any unnecessary suffering. Having satisfied my mind of the surgeon's ability and honesty of purpose, I should leave myself absolutely helpless in his hands. Thus reason prepares the way for faith. So God says to me, Here is the evidence that the contents of this Book are My Word to you. And now, having approached the vestibule of faith by this path, I submit myself to Him, trusting Him as my soul's physician, to do what He will with me, remembering that I have previously satisfied myself that in Him is infinite wisdom, infinite ability and infinite benevolence; and though His Book may contain many things that transcend my intelligence, my trust is the natural outcome of the confidence that has been created by intelligent inquiry."

"Thy King Cometh."

NOW by likeness, now by contrast, are heavenly truths brought home to us by the things of earth and time. This thought has been impressed on us by the recent shock of disappointment at a great ducal house, and in all the country around, when the sudden, though, thank God, slight illness of the king prevented, at the last moment, his promised coming.

Some of the daily papers devoted columns to the names of distinguished guests already assembled to meet the royal visitor, and to the preparations "on a lavish scale" to do him honour, the multitudes mustering from all parts to witness his arrival at the gaily decorated station where his noble host and hostess were in person to receive him. Just two hours before the royal train was due, fell the heavy stroke of disappointment.

Well may we, as loyal subjects of the King of kings, give thanks and rejoice that His so eagerly longed-for coming is sure! Well may we live in the joy of, and earnest preparation for, "that day," and this "more and more as we see the day approaching." That glorious advent is the one and only certainty of our swiftly passing years. "I will come again," says our King, "and receive you unto Myself"—whether to call us, now one, now another, home, or to "gather together unto Him," and to our loved ones already with Him, us "who are alive and remain."

Had that royal visit of earth been accomplished, how little trace had remained after a few fleeting hours! But the coming of the Heavenly King will, "to all who love His appearing," bring in a perfectness of blessing, for ever and ever. ALICE JANE HOME.

A Timely Innovation.

AT the midnight meeting held during Gipsy Smith's mission at Brighton "the people" whom the churches and the missions, by their ordinary meetings, do not, and cannot reach, were reached. I had the management of the arrangements re seating, &c., and so was at the various entrances seeing the people in and out; therefore I know what I am speaking about.

The midnight crowd was made up of the "street loafer," the "fallen men," the "fallen women," the "partly intoxicated," the "drunkard," the "fish hawker" with his basket, the "flower girl" with her basket, and the utterly forsaken of men; the publican, barmaids and barmen, theatre managers and employees, actors and actresses, and in fact all classes who on account of the non-convenience of ordinary places of so-called worship are precluded. To hear the response of these people when appealed to to turn unto God say, "I will, I will," was indeed most refreshing to one's soul.

May I ask the question, Are not missions becoming like the churches—nursing institutions for Christians? Are not the majority who attend these missions regular churchgoers? Does not the appearance of these good folk in the street, with their Bible and hymn-books under their arms, going to the meetings, help to exclude the "man in the street"?

The experience of all who had anything to do with the late mission here was, from Gipsy Smith downwards, better all midnight meetings than none at all. No mission is complete without it. The class of people that attend are those for whom Christ died. This is one of the highways and byways which must be sought unto.

I believe Gipsy Smith has made up his mind (owing to the success of the one held here), to have a midnight service wherever he goes in future; and I should say, perhaps not only one, but too or three. God will bless the sacrifice of those who put their hands to it.

I do most sincerely hope that your advocacy of this new departure will be such that all will be compelled to adopt it, in both Temperance and Gospel Missions. WALTER GILLETT.

Work for the Blind.

NUMBERS of deserving blind men and women, who were constantly employed at Southwark until the school was removed to Leatherhead, are now crying loudly for assured continuance of employment. The Committee of the School for the Indigent Blind (St. George's Circus, S.E.) are anxious to respond, and with this in view Major-General J. E. D. Hill (chairman) has addressed an appeal to friends of the blind. The Society cannot guarantee work without the power of acquiring a freehold site whereon to erect necessary workshops, entailing a considerable outlay, which the funds of the charity cannot bear.

A sum of £1,000 has already been promised towards achieving the object by which these afflicted men and women will be able to maintain themselves. Unless workshops are provided, the blind people who have learned a trade and are now maintaining themselves will be thrown out of employment. The committee are hopeful that the appeal of their chairman will not be in vain for those who, though blind, are anxious to support themselves by their handicrafts if only the opportunity be given them by such agencies as the workshops afford.

"Journeying Mercies."—Having read in a previous issue that the Railway Mission Convalescent Homes are needing funds, a correspondent suggests that all travellers on reaching their destination should place a contribution in the box provided for the purpose as a thankoffering for immunity from accidents. "A large sum might thus be raised for the benefit of those to whom we owe so much, when they are laid aside by accident or sickness."

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, February 22. 2 Chron. xxvi.

A STRONGLY religious man, like Zechariah, may exert a most salutary influence on public affairs. By all means get your "visions of God;" but be equally careful to link them with practical service, influence, and advice. Emerson talks of hitching our waggon to a star. Even a waggon will move swiftly then! How much blessing would come to the world, if those who have visions of the Unseen and Eternal would give them practical exemplification! The vision-seer is apt to become visionary; the so-called practical man is apt to look only earthward. There should be a combination of these two attitudes. Raphael's Transfiguration picture combines the glory on the mountain-top with the miracle on the demoniac child.

Notice the expressions, "As long as he sought the Lord, God made him to prosper" (5); "He waxed exceeding strong" (8); "He was marvellously helped, till he was strong" (15); "But when he was strong, his heart was lifted up, so that he did corruptly" (16). In these brief sentences many a life may be epitomized. When we are strong we are most in peril; first, to forget that we are strong only because God has made us so; secondly, that we are stewards for His glory.

The reign of Uzziah seems, in its earlier passages, to have been remarkably successful. In war, in building, in agriculture and husbandry, in the marshalling of troops, and in the invention of war machines, he manifested great capacity, but the lustre of his reign was tarnished by the daring and impious act, by which he attempted to assume the office of the priest. Since the days of Melchizedek, there has been but One who has been King of Righteousness and Priest of the Most High God. Only our Lord can be a priest upon His throne. To anticipate His prerogative was to incur the brand of the leper; but is not this what the Pope of Rome has done for centuries? Remember Isa. vi. 1.

MONDAY, February 23. 2 Chron. xxvii.

Jotham's reign was, on the whole, peaceful and prosperous. His mother had come of a noble stock, and her influence accounted for much. If mothers would only realise how much they can influence, not their children only, but through them, future generations, how much more careful they would be not to allow them to pass from their hands into those of strangers; and with what constant, strong, and tender love they would nurture their young life!

The current of evil was too strong for the young king. "The people did yet corruptly." He found it easier to build the upper gate of the Temple, and to strengthen the fortifications of Jerusalem, than to turn back the tides of worldliness and sin, which powerfully affected his son and successor, and bore him on in a career of shameless infamy.

It is significant to learn that he became mighty, because "he established his ways before the Lord his God" (6). Cf. Rehoboam (xii. 14); Ps. cxii. 7. We must seek to establish our ways. Too much religion is truly described as "drifting goodness."

All our ways must be ordered under the Lord's eye, for His glory, and by the direction of His Spirit. Then God will be able to do His best in and for us—we, too, shall become "mighty." "I am not more sure," says Erskine, of Linlathen, "of my own existence than I am of being under the eye and guidance of a Being, who desires to train and educate me to be a good man; and yet I know that beyond the pale of the Bible's influence, this conviction has rarely been felt. But the agreement between the Bible and my spiritual organization strengthens my faith in the Divine origin of the Bible, more than any other argument could."

TUESDAY, February 24. 2 Chron. xxvii.

"This is that king Ahaz" (22). Such is the epitaph on the memorial tablet of this wicked king; who, notwithstanding all that Isaiah could say or do, dragged his kingdom to a lower level of infamy and disgrace than any king of Judah before or after. He first embraced the symbolic calf-worship of the northern kingdom, and thence passed by an easy transition to the gross evils that had disgraced the Canaanites (2).

Fuller details of the invasion by the allied Syrian and Israelitish kings are given by Isaiah (vii., &c.). But we are told here that it was due to the Divine Hand, which thus chastised Judah for shameless vice under the cover of religion. The slaughter and captivity of such vast numbers were terrible calamities, the inner reason for which was clearly indicated by the prophet Oded in his manly and powerful speech to the victorious Israelites (9, 10).

The emancipation, clothing, feeding, and sending back of the captives was a very beautiful act, which proves that, even in those days of general apostasy, there were many who steadfastly followed the law of God. How beautiful true religion is, when it shines out in acts of mercy and forgiveness! Even the ungodly must respect it then. Would that the Church of God was as anxious for the beauty of the Lord to be upon her, as she is that He would establish the works of her hands! "Love is above all; and when it prevails in us all, we shall all be lovely, and in love with God and one another."

In his distress, Ahaz, with infatuated blindness, plunged deeper and deeper into wanton sin, closing the doors of the Temple and sacrificing to the gods of the people that smote him. Oh, suffer us not in any trouble to fall away from Thee, but bring us back again!

WEDNESDAY, February 25. 2 Chron. xxix.

Again notice the influence of a godly mother (xxvi. 3). Hezekiah had no sooner ascended the throne than he proceeded to open and renovate the neglected Temple. Perhaps some who read these words, in their inner life, are as that Temple was. They have shut up the doors of mercy and love towards their fellows, and of reverence and godly fear towards God; have put out the lamps of godly testimony; and have not burned the incense of intercessory prayer. If so, let them not be negligent, but arise to cleanse themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit; let them seek forgiveness and restoration to their old positions; and let them offer themselves again as living sacrifices, which is their reasonable service. Then, as the burnt-offering begins, the song of the Lord, which has long been still, will break forth again (27).

Has the song of the Lord died down in your heart? Ah, there is but one cause for it. The burnt-offering of your life has been slurred over, and the true significance of existence has been missed. All this must be altered. The burnt-offering stands for surrender to the will of God, and devotion to the needs of men. To keep unspotted and pure, and to visit the widow and fatherless in their affliction—such is the double attitude of the devout soul. Then joy comes like a flood, and such joy is always contagious. The Levites "Sang praises with gladness." "And Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people." The elect souls of the race must not falter "in their great task of happiness," nor move among men without showing faces on which Heaven's smiles are laughing!

THURSDAY, February 26. 2 Chron. xxx.

The national celebration of the Passover had fallen into disuse since the division between the two kingdoms, and Hezekiah determined to revive it and invite the entire Hebrew people to participate. With the concurrence, obviously, of the king of the northern tribes, who at that time was Hoshea, messengers were despatched carrying the royal invitation throughout the land. It was not surprising that this attempt to revive the ancient feast, and secure the unity of Israel, should awaken criticism and ridicule in many quarters; but even from these districts, large numbers gathered to Jerusalem; and in Judæa there was but one feeling, of expectation and delight. In our own time we should do our best to manifest the unity of the Body of Christ. The appearances of division, in form, ceremony, and method may even become more marked as the years pass, but the spiritual oneness in Jesus Christ can never be disturbed by these.

The necessary arrangements could not be completed at the usual time at which the Passover was celebrated (fourteenth day of the first month); it was resolved, therefore, instead of postponing it for another year, to observe it on the fourteenth day of the second month, a liberty which was granted to individuals under certain circumstances (Num. ix. 6-13), and might presumably be extended to the nation. But it is interesting to notice, from the good king's prayer, that even then, all the people were not perfectly cleansed; but he realized that their moral and spiritual intention and attitude were more important than ceremonial exactitude, and with perfect confidence claimed exemption from penalty. So the joy spread. "The Levites and priests praised the Lord day by day" (21); other seven days were kept with gladness (23); Israel and Judah rejoiced (25); and prayer and praise ascended to God's holy habitation, even to heaven (27).

FRIDAY, February 27. 2 Chron. xxxi.

Two memorable results followed the revival of religious life, of which the previous chapter contains so vivid a record.

1. Demolition of idolatrous images and symbols.—Ardour for the service of God animated every bosom, and the people went forth through each of the two kingdoms, destroying all traces of the practices which had involved so much national apostasy and suffering. So, as we live nearer and nearer to God, we become increasingly sensitive to everything that grieves and dishonours. Have you made, lately, a tour of your own heart and life, with the object of discovering where you stand, and what there is that needs to be put away? Do not be too sure that all is right, until the search-light of God has been turned on "the thoughts and intents of the heart."

2. The provision of funds for God's work.—Such was the liberality of the people that the priests had more than enough; and their families, in the priests' cities throughout the country, were well provided for. The story as told here is not only full of interest, but very much to the point in the present times. Everywhere we hear of funds being raised by most objectionable methods, some of which are worthier of the public-house and the theatre than the house of God. But if only the Church of God were in a revived state, and her members gave a systematic proportion of their yearly or weekly income, there would be enough and to spare. What of ourselves?

SATURDAY, February 28. 2 Chron. xxxii.

It might have seemed reasonable to suppose that God would have given Hezekiah entire immunity from such invasions as Sennacherib's. But the longer we observe, the more clearly do we see that it is not God's purpose to preserve His children from trial or temptation, but to keep them in it. So He permitted Hezekiah to pass through this fiery ordeal, but knew how to deliver him, and make a way of escape (2 Peter ii. 9; 1 Cor. x. 13). Is it not certain, also, especially as we read the corresponding chapters of Isaiah, that this invasion acted as a foil to bring out the saving help of God, as it never could have been otherwise manifested? Dare to trust God in your extremities, for these are His opportunities. The Lord will save you and guide you on every side (22), and exalt you to inherit the earth.

But be sure and notice that, however pious and devoted a man may have been, unless he walks always warily, he may finally break down under some crucial test, more subtle and insidious than any before. It is easier to withstand the invasion of Sennacherib than the flattery of Babylon (25, 31). May the Lord deliver us from pride of heart (25, 26)!

I cannot hold Thee fast, though Thou art mine;
Hold Thou me fast!
So earth shall know at last and heaven at last
That I am Thine.

A Cheering Review.

At the Winter Reunion of the Open-Air Mission, held on Tuesday evening last week, the Lower Exeter Hall was thronged with friends and sympathizers; and the meeting, which followed after tea and a happy season of friendly intercourse, was full of timely reminders to the Lord's witnesses of their responsibility to go forth into the open-air, and proclaim the Gospel to the masses who, despite every effort that is made, remain untouched by the regular operations of the churches.

AN ENCOURAGING RECORD.

After Lord Radstock had led in prayer, and Mr. W. H. Seagram had read and commented on part of the fiftieth Psalm, Mr. Frank Cockrem presented some notable reasons for praise and thanksgiving. The record of the year's work shows that 951 race-meetings, fairs, and other great assemblages of people throughout the land were visited by evangelists of the Mission. Thirty prolonged Campaigns were conducted in groups of villages, meetings, being held and house-to-house visitation undertaken. At the many special services conducted in the open-air the aggregate attendance was estimated at over 400,000, while the copies of literature distributed totalled 1,086,000. These remarkable results were the outcome of work in 974 towns and villages; chiefly of England and Wales, but a few of them in France.

There had been a continual flow of spiritual blessing, particularly on the racecourse work. Large numbers of letters of thanksgiving have been received from those won for the Master. One of the most striking was that from a would-be suicide, brought to the Lord at the Ayr race-meeting, and now, with all his family, rejoicing in salvation. Another interesting instance was that of a young lady impressed by the words of the Society's evangelists at Maidstone, who wrote in terms of fervent praise, telling also of her desire and efforts to lead wanderers into the way of life.

The host of the evening, Mr. Frank A. Bevan, who followed, defined the object of the meeting to be "to confer together on the best means of impressing outsiders, and to provoke one another to love and to good works." The religious census now being taken by a London daily paper clearly demonstrates that the great body of the people are outside religious influence. There is much valuable preaching, much sound and useful teaching, much Bible study, but the masses are almost untouched. For an example of wise method we turn to our Lord, who sent forth His disciples "to preach the Gospel to every creature." And, if the people are to be won for God, it is necessary that the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ should be preached—earnestly and clearly, thinking less and less of human, and more and more of Divine power—in the open air.

RIGHT AND WRONG METHODS.

The next speaker, Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, made a burning appeal to the churches to break away from customs and conventionalities which tend to repel the people. The methods of to-day are a downright failure. There is a parable of our Lord which teaches us the right and the wrong methods—that of the Wedding Supper (Luke xiv. 15-24). "Go out in the highways, and compel them to come in."

Here is set forth (1) the invitation to come, and (2) the duty to go. There are two methods of working to gain the people, one which may be called the attractive or magnetic, and the other the aggressive. The first of these ideas is that the Church must be made attractive to the unevangelized. The cry is, "Let us have a more beautiful building, a more powerful organ, a more accomplished choir;" but with all these frantic efforts to make the churches "draw" there was never so little of the magnetic about them as to-day. From a worldly point of view—and there is nothing else to appeal to in a worldly mind—there has to be the provision of a splendid edifice, a gorgeous ceremonial, an eloquent sermon, and then—"if the people do not come it is their own fault!" They do not come. That method is a failure, a dismal failure; and so the gulf between the common people and the Church of God was never so broad as it is to-day.

Three results which follow are (1) the standard of pure worship and Gospel teaching is lowered. The hue and cry is, "Let us decorate and ornament, to get and hold the people." And the Lord's Day is desecrated by people hurrying to the fashionable churches, while the others are depleted. Large sums of money are paid for superb churches; fashionable ministers are paid enormous salaries; and then the church officers say that on equitable business principles the income must equal the outgoings. But what right have they to such outgoings?

(2) The church degenerates into an aristocratic club, instead of being a working-place for souls; and (3) God's blessing is withheld. With all these efforts to make the Church attractive, it is being converted, owing to the lack of spirituality, into a petrified form of doctrine and practice, destitute of power. And the great difficulty of all is that too many churches are satisfied with the present condition of affairs. Instead of acknowledging failure with tears and fasting, they are content.

THE SECRETS OF SUCCESS.

What, then, are the secrets of success? The Bible never teaches that the Church is to be made worldly to attract the worldling. Our business is to maintain apostolic simplicity of preaching, realizing that "the carnal mind is enmity against God." "Do you ask, 'What of the ungodly?' Get your soul full of compassion and love, and then go out, seeking to win their hearts and to bring them in, not as unbelievers, but as believers. Thus brought, they will find the things of God according to their taste. Moreover, if, as a minister, I am paid a colossal salary, how shall I get on to the level of the working-man? He regards me as on a kind of Alpine summit, far removed from his humble circumstances.

When the Church understands and carries out her mission, three results follow: Spiritual teaching is upheld; the fellowship of believers is maintained; and the Holy Spirit baptizes the workers with heavenly power. The warm beating of the pulse of Christ's love is felt in the life of such a church.

Dr. Pierson concluded with a solemn and affecting description of his own experiences in breaking away from much that was worldly and merely fashionable in religious service, to a career of soul-winning. He added: Any place where God meets souls is consecrated, and when the passion for souls is an all conquering one, then souls we shall win. Men know when they are loved. When I was a young student I once visited a fashionable church to hear a great preacher, with a view to picking up hints that would help me in my studies. I was but poor, and was frigidly treated, being told to wait, although stylish people were received with the greatest deference. Thirty-five years afterwards I was invited to preach in that very church. I felt I ought to tell them, and I did so. Yes, men know when they are loved; and when, on the contrary, they are kept at arm's length, they know that also.

"Has not the time come when every church should be energetically aggressive, going out into the field, which is the world, laying hold of 'the outcast, of the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind,' and by the holy compulsion of love, bringing them in, that the house of God may be filled?"

THE TRACT IN THE COAL-CELLAR.

Dr. Christy Wilson, of Doncaster, who said that he received the call to open-air work through an article in The Christian twenty-eight years ago, followed with a bright speech of reminiscence and appeal. During the Race Week at Doncaster, one of the evangelists of the Open-Air Mission in the course of his distribution of Gospel literature, put a tract down a cellar grating. A servant girl found it, read it, and became deeply concerned. When spoken to, she cried, "Oh, the tract in the coal cellar!" She was pointed to the Lord Jesus Christ and is His servant to-day. The speaker went on to describe with force and freshness the efforts put forth by the Open-Air Mission during Doncaster race week, and urged Christian people to a more general utilization of the advantages of open-air missioning. "Let us go out into the slums and the thronged streets, getting at the people and uplifting the Lord Jesus Christ, that He may be glorified."

National Purity Crusade.

THIS movement, under the auspices of the National Vigilance Association, has made itself heard during the past three weeks in South Wales. The meetings opened in the Mansion House, Cardiff, where a reception was given by the Mayor and Mayoress. Several other gatherings were held in the city, after which Penarth, Newport, Barry, Brynmawr, Blaenavon, Port Talbot, Aberavon, Neath, and Bridgend were visited.

The deputation secretary, Mr. James Marchant, was cordially welcomed, and in each place a return visit was requested. The story of the work is received with sympathy by all sections of the public. A great impression is made by accounts of the work being done by the Association: one day tracking the footprints of vice in the highways of a great city, or a country village in the United Kingdom—the next hunting down a white-slave dealer in the streets of Paris or Berlin; now listening to the heart-breaking cry of a father, whose fair daughter has been decoyed from his care, under promise of marriage or easy and remunerative employment, into a life of impurity—anon to a mother who cannot manage her wild, wayward child, and fears the worst may happen; one hour prohibiting the sale by auction or private treaty of disgusting books—the next nailing up warnings in the ship's cabin to young women travelling abroad; one month visiting the capitals of Europe enlisting the services of emperor and princess, pastor and consul, in breaking up the cunningly organized traffic in girls—another pleading the cause of purity in English homes and from English platforms; to-day pacing the lobby of the House of Commons pressing on the attention of members the amendments to the Criminal Law Amendment Act—to-morrow seizing barrow-loads of bad photographs, or receiving parcels of obscene literature left in a cloak-room, and burning them with joy at the request and expense of the depositor; to-night watching some haunt of devilry in London—the following holding a midnight mission to men in Holland.

The work is multifarious and unremitting in the social circle, the law courts, and legislative quarters. In one court, the agents are engaged in establishing the fact that it is competent for any person to take proceedings against the keepers of disorderly houses—in another obtaining the far-reaching legal decision that it is false pretence on the part of a married man to procure the ruin of an unmarried girl under promise of marriage; in London holding an International Congress of immense importance, attended by 100 foreign delegates, to take united action against the buying and selling of human beings, body and soul, for filthy lucre and evil purposes—in Paris meeting the representatives of all Governments to frame an international code to punish the slave-dealer wherever he is captured; now sending a letter to India to discover the whereabouts of a betrayer, or to South America to protect a forsaken victim—another with a draft of a Criminal Law Amendment Act to Victoria, Australia; with one hand restoring the missing girl to a mother's arms—with the other snatching the child from the embrace of the destroyer. And all these engagements and endeavours are attended by a burden of financial responsibility.

The National Vigilance Association is prepared to send its representative to conduct purity meetings in any district in the United Kingdom. There must be a number of readers who can throw open their own drawing-rooms, and many ministers and councils who could arrange for such gatherings as are being held up and down the country. Readers are requested to address Mr. W. A. Coote, National Vigilance Association Offices, 319, High Holborn, London, W.C.

A Lady and Her Work.

THE LATE LOUISA LADY ASHBURTON.

THE story of the life of Louisa Lady Ashburton, who passed away on Monday last week, is one which stands out as a noble record of devotion to the highest interests of humanity. Tennyson, in a famous lyric, once wisely counselled aristocratic ladies to turn their attention from frivolity and dalliance to ministering to the poor and needy. Louisa Lady Ashburton needed no such advice; she had been trained by a godly mother, whose memory is still revered in the little Scottish village of Maryburgh, to know and follow the Lord Jesus Christ. Hence, her long labours were the outcome of a strong love for souls.

When the home-call came, her ladyship had attained the age of seventy-six, and her health had been failing for some time; yet the news of her death came as a great shock to those who had been associated with her in various deeds of Christian philanthropy.

The third daughter of the late Right Hon. James Alexander Stewart Mackenzie, she was in her youth a beautiful member of London society. Lord Ashburton, son of the peer who represented the Court of St. James's in Washington sixty years ago, married Miss Mackenzie as his second wife in 1858. He died six years later, and his widow inherited a large fortune and country seats in Scotland and Hampshire. She made good use of her great wealth by entertaining those who could make no return of her hospitality; and many a Christian worker has enjoyed a restful holiday at Melchet Court, near Romsey, where she loved to gather those who sought to benefit the world.

There was something of the "Broadlands" note about some of these house-parties, for Lady Ashburton was wide in her sympathies, and interested in many forms of benevolence. Her daughter, the Hon. Mary Florence Baring, married Lord William Compton in 1884; and both interested themselves in Christian work. Lord William was formerly in the House of Commons, and was well known, later on, as Earl Compton, prior to his succession to the marquisate of Northampton. Louisa Lady Ashburton shared with her son-in-law a practical sympathy in the children assisted by the Ragged School Union, of which institution Lord Northampton has been president for several years. The death of her daughter, the Marchioness of Northampton, last year, was a great sorrow to her.

Everyone who knows London philanthropies will think of Louisa Lady Ashburton chiefly in connection with the Mission which bears her name. It is a pleasure to recall the story of how she came to interest herself in this undertaking on behalf of those who were "on the stones" at the docks. It is nearly twenty years ago now, that, having attended a meeting on behalf of the London City Mission, her ladyship paid a visit to the East End in company with Mr. James Dunn. Alighting near the Custom House station, she was amazed at the sight of men standing about idle while waiting on the chance of a job at the docks. In answer to inquiries, she ascertained that the public-house was the only available place of rest and shelter for such men between whiles.

Pushing her investigations, Lady Ashburton entered one of the largest public-houses in the neighbourhood. Addressing the landlord, she asked whether he thought such a house as his was the best place for men to frequent. "Well," he replied, "they can come in here and get warm, even if they have no money, and I don't know where else they could go for rest or shelter." Her ladyship asked the publican how much he would take for the goodwill of his house, and he answered, "I should want £20,000, and you would think it cheap at that price if you saw my books."

Going further, her ladyship looked at another corner position—a dwelling-house, with the lower part used as a coal office. This could be got for £600, and it was taken. Then was started a work which has since grown remarkably, some six other houses having been added to the undertaking. Her ladyship pulled down houses and built a hall for meetings. The work had its difficulties, but the devoted lady was undaunted. She built over water as well as on land, and the results were gratifying in many ways. As the work progressed, the interest of many friends, far and near, was manifested in its practical aims. On two occasions the Duchess of Teck went down to open, first the Home, and then the Mission Hall, and the present Princess of Wales accompanied her distinguished mother on both occasions. The houses were furnished with comfortable dormitories, and a suite of rooms was set apart for her ladyship. On this work Lady Ashburton spent thousands of pounds. She supported two City missionaries, who carried on the work, conducting services and visiting the people, with encouraging results.

The departed lady specially helped sailors and fishermen. For many years she placed her private room at her Custom House buildings at the service of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society for the seamen of all nations coming to the Victoria and Albert Docks. Lady Ashburton was also the founder of the Millwall Sailors' Rest, giving the Society £1,200 to start the fund. Her ladyship likewise enabled the committee to sign the contract for a fine block of buildings at Yarmouth by a promise of £250 a year for four consecutive years. The institutes thus erected have proved a blessing to thousands of fishermen as well as Scottish fisher-girls who proceed to Yarmouth for the herring season.

The latest manifestation of her ladyship's generosity was a promise of £1,000 to erect, equip, and endow the King Edward VII. Nautical School at the new headquarters which is being built for the Society in East London. The school is to be crowned with a small observatory, and as far back as June last her ladyship, with a yearning heart for her daughter, who had just died, and with a premonition of early decease, decided on an "In Memoriam" inscription as follows:—"Louisa Lady Ashburton and her beloved child, the Marchioness of Northampton. 'They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided.' The heavens declare the glory of God.'"

Another interest was in orphan girls. The Lady Ashburton's Girls' Home in Globe Road, E., has been for fifteen years under the direction of Mrs. Frank Eardley (née Okell), a shelter and a home for many hundreds of orphan girls. A number of workers have been trained here, some of whom have undertaken work abroad.

The Globe Road property belongs to the estate, and it should be mentioned that, as no provision is made for maintaining the household and teachers, it is proposed by Mr. and Mrs. Eardley to transfer the inmates to a simple country home to be worked in connection with the others for which they already have the sole responsibility, and for which they need help.

The instinct for initiation which marked her career was also manifested in connection with the excellent work of Mr. George Holland at the George Yard Mission, Whitechapel. It was by the generosity of her ladyship that a beautiful colony was established on her estate at Addiscombe. That colony included the "Mary Baring Nest" for ailing children, the "Louisa Lady Ashburton Rest" for worn-out and convalescent parents, and the "George Holland Dovecot Home" for mothers and infants. To these was added an iron room for evangelistic and other services, and all were erected and maintained by her ladyship.

THE MISSION HALL AND REST, CUSTOM HOUSE, E.

Mr. Henry Varley,

PASTOR AND EVANGELIST.

IT is some years since we told the story of Mr. Henry Varley, the well-known evangelist. Since then our friend has seen varied service in many lands, and his presence among us at the present time suggests a suitable occasion for an outline of his career as a worker in the great harvest field. Among preachers who make themselves understood, and drive home a plain and impressive Gospel message, Mr. Varley occupies an honoured position, and in all parts of the world there are men and women who look upon him as spiritual father, through the blessing of God upon his preaching.

Born at Tattershall, in Lincolnshire, in 1835, Mr. Varley is now in his sixty-eighth year. In early life he received religious impressions which have never left him. His mother was a woman of considerable culture, having for some years been at the head of a large boarding-school for young ladies. Her influence over the boy was as holy as it was powerful. Henry was still young when she died, but he has ever cherished the memory of the sacred hours during which he sat by her bedside, and read aloud her favourite hymns. School days were spent at Lincoln, and young Mr. Varley made his mark in two directions; he was quick at figures, and a capital elocutionist. These distinguishing powers of the youth have been amongst the distinguishing powers of the man.

Leaving school at about thirteen years of age, the youth went to London. One Sunday afternoon, while passing through Trafalgar Square in the course of a walk, he was accosted by Mr. J. W. Kirton, who was distributing tracts in connection with the Y.M.C.A. Placing a tract in the young man's hand, Mr. Kirton extended a cordial invitation to the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel's chapel in John Street, Bedford Row. The invitation was readily accepted, and lasting good resulted from that introduction to Christian influence and work in the great city. Instruction and light gained in the Bible Class led to young Mr. Varley's conversion; and in 1852 he was baptized by Mr. Noel, and admitted as a member of the church.

In the pursuit of business Mr. Varley soon afterwards went to Australia, but he returned to England in 1857, with the intention of preparing for the work of the ministry, with a view to settling in Australia. This purpose was not carried out. Having married a lady who has proved a true helpmeet to him, Mr. Varley determined to settle in Notting Hill, and to combine Christian work with business life. Success crowned his efforts; but at the same time he felt an irresistible impulse to devote himself largely to the work of Gospel preaching. In business he occupied a position of unquestionable disinterestedness when speaking to men of business concerning Christ; and along these lines he often addressed sterling words to the journeymen butchers of London. But all his efforts while engaged in business failed to satisfy him that he was doing his duty to the utmost of the Lord's demand.

Many give the end of their success to the Lord. Mr. Varley did not withhold the beginning of his prosperity. Efforts put forth in 1860 eventuated in the erection, at Notting Hill, of a place of worship capable of holding 1,600 persons, and known as the West London Tabernacle. The cost of this building was, in part, met by Mr. Varley and his father-in-law. Thus Mr. Varley's first savings in business, amounting to a considerable sum, were devoted to God.

The Tabernacle was continually crowded with people, and at last between 700 and 800 believers were in followship. The Sunday-schools were also a great power for good. Many hundreds of children received day-school education as well as instruction on the Lord's Day in the buildings. Only a few weeks ago Mr. Varley had the joy of attending a meeting of old scholars, on which occasion the present secretary, Mr. Levermore, told him that, even after this length of time, he has the names and addresses of more than a thousand old scholars who are invited to the annual meeting in November.

In 1868 Mr. Varley sold his business, in order to undertake world-wide evangelistic work. After answering many calls for help in various parts of the country, he began a series of Gospel visits to other lands. In

MR. HENRY VARLEY.

1874 he went to the New World, and preached with great acceptance and much blessing. As many as twenty thousand people were seen on one occasion filling Barnum's great Hippodrome, New York, on a Sunday evening. In the Association Hall, and Cooper Institute, too, Mr. Varley's addresses attracted immense audiences, and many drawing-room meetings were held. The effect of his preaching was to kindle an enthusiasm in the breasts of the Christians of New York generally, which set thousands of them seeking out their friends and relatives, and urging them to come and hear the Gospel. About a hundred ministers met him at the close of the month which he had engaged to spend in the city, and begged him to remain at least another month, while, at the same time, from Boston and Philadelphia the cry came, "Come over and help us."

Large audiences everywhere attended his addresses, which Dr. Cuyler said were delivered "in familiar, John Bunyan-like English, and which held the large congregations as tight as in a vice." It is believed that great good resulted from his unceasing efforts, especially in New York and Boston. For seven weeks in the former city he held meetings six days each week, usually twice a day, often three times. Hundreds of people were converted, and the churches confirmed in the faith. In Canada, also, Mr. Varley was received as a man greatly beloved, and the character of his work is clear from the following sentences written at the time by a correspondent in the Dominion: "This country has beheld what God can do by a man wholly surrendered. Aldermen, professors, merchants, drunkards, young and old, educated and unlearned, are daily testifying of the wondrous love of Jesus. Christians have been led to realize the riches of their inheritance, and awake out of the death-like sleep growing out of mere formalism and ceremonialism."

Among other places in Canada in which Mr. Varley's preaching was greatly blessed was Brantford, Ont., a city of some 12,000 inhabitants. The work begun by the visitor was continued for months afterwards, and it was computed that 1,500 people were brought to Christ, of whom 1,000 joined the churches. Some years afterwards Mr. Brethour, with whom Mr. Varley stayed, while on a visit to London, declared that this report, though astonishing, was fully within the mark. He added that the social results of the mission were, if possible, still more remarkable: "The gaol was empty, the police had nothing to do, every licensed house had been closed, and only one person (an old lady) had applied for parish relief during the preceding twelve months."

Returning to England, consecrated anew to his work, Mr. Varley was instrumental of enlarged usefulness, and the West London Tabernacle was still the centre of fruitful work for Christ. Among the agencies which had sprung into existence were an "Industrial Home for the Blind," and the vigorous organization for evangelization among the men of the Metropolitan Market. Year after year Mr. C. H. Spurgeon lent the capacious Metropolitan Tabernacle for the annual meeting of this mission, when a powerful testimony was borne to the reality of Mr. Varley's work, and the graciousness of his influence among the "market men." These annual festivals continued for twenty years, thus bearing witness to the influence thrown into a remarkable and successful business career.

In 1877 our friend visited Australia, and extended his travels to Tasmania and New Zealand. Hundreds of persons confessed Christ; especially was there blessing in Melbourne. Coming home, he soon realised that evangelistic calls stood in the way of due attention being given to pastoral duties; he, therefore, resigned the pastorate, in order that he might be at liberty to give himself exclusively to proclaiming the Gospel. To the deep sorrow of the church worshipping in the West London Tabernacle, the resignation took effect in 1882, and since that time Mr. Varley has devoted himself to evangelization and the exposition of the Word of God.

What of the years that have followed? Mr. Varley has made his home in both hemispheres; his labours have been continuous, and with rich blessing from the Lord. Compassing sea and land in the service of Christ, he has made nine voyages to Australia; and also paid six visits to the United States, covering the continent from New York to San Francisco. He has preached in many cities in the States and Canada; and among other regions visited may be named South Africa, India, and the Straits Settlements. As already intimated, he has preached in distant parts of Australia, and all over New Zealand; and Tasmania has more than once been included in his ministry. And, of course, the whole of the United Kingdom has been covered, and some Irish centres have been visited.

Mr. Varley occupied a prominent place in the Conventions for increased spiritual life. He was at Oxford and Brighton in 1875, and thus had a part in the movement out of which grew the Keswick Convention and its many daughters. From time to time in recent years he has been among the teachers who have spoken at meetings of Christian people as gathered on the Scriptural basis of "All one in Christ Jesus." During the past few Sabbaths he has been preaching at Mildmay, following up the mission of Dr. Torrey. His word has been with power, and there have been "signs following."

In the cause of social purity Mr. Varley has done yeoman service. His lectures "to men only" have been listened to by hundreds of thousands; his pamphlets also have reached a wide circulation, and thus, it is known, many have been warned of evil while there was still place for repentance. His published lectures to men, youths, boys, and parents, have reached a circulation of over half a million. God has blessed the plain and solemn words spoken and written, and men have been thankful indeed. In proof of this, it may be stated that about 25,000 letters have been received from time to time, thanking him for his important and helpful advice.

Another "plank," and an important one, of Mr. Varley's platform is Biblical exposition, It is by the study of the inspired Scriptures that the man of God is complete, "furnished completely unto every good work"; and by illumination from the same source that men and women are "made wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Mr. Varley holds that there in no better way of moving an audience in the right direction than by making the Word of God thoroughly understood. A passage of Scripture clearly explained has a stronger influence than the best "original" thought and the most brilliant eloquence of the preacher. Whether dealing with Righteousness, Temperance, or Judgment to Come, Mr. Varley's appeal is to the Holy Scriptures; and in unfolding the Gospel with its doctrines of Regeneration, Justification, and Sanctification, he finds the same safe and sure resource in the Written Word. Concerning all things relating to life and godliness, he appeals to the Bible; and his appeal has been attended with signal results in his public ministry.

In his family relations Mr. Varley has been greatly blessed. For forty-five years he has enjoyed the fellowship of a brave and self-denying wife. Without his beloved helpmeet, a woman of rare grace and natural ability, he could not have undertaken one-third of the work which, in the goodness of God, he has been permitted to accomplish. Four of Mr. Varley's sons are preachers of the Gospel, two of them being also heads of large business houses in Melbourne. His daughter has for the past five years been a valued literary helper in Mr. Moody's work at Northfield, Mass.

Some score of books have come from his pen. His pamphlets on "Cain and Abel," "The Atonement," and "Death and Afterwards" have been specially useful in recent days, by way of controverting materialistic speculations. The most substantial works from his pen, however, are—"The Evangel of the Risen Christ" (400 pp.), and "Christ's Coming Kingdom" (480 pp.). These deal with themes of the sublimest interest, and lift the heart to heaven. Needless to add, their author is a fervent believer in the speedy coming of the Lord. This is one of the deepest convictions of his heart, and the effect of it upon him is that it gives a solemn yet gladsome glow of feeling to his words upon any subject.

Work in Northern Nigeria.

FOR a number of years the claims of this field have been laid on the hearts of some Christians in Canada. About ten years ago three young men from Toronto went to Lagos, and from there penetrated into the interior of Nigeria. Within a few months two of them died (one at Gierku, where Ryder, of the C.M.S., died some years later, and was buried beside him), and the survivor, with health weakened by fever, returned to Canada. As soon as his health was sufficiently restored, this young man interested others in the needs of the land, and formed a council in Toronto. As this council of twelve men represent eight different denominations, two being from the Church of England, it is strictly interdenominational. The name of the mission is the Africa Industrial Mission.

The report for last year shows that for nearly fifteen months there have been four missionaries at a station on the Niger called Pataji. Though all have had attacks of fever, at last reports they were recovered, and the work was going on very promisingly. That the Lord has wonderfully helped in acquiring the language, is evident from the fact that one of the workers writes: "I have all John's Gospel translated, and six chapters in Mark." The last missionary to go to the field is a fully qualified medical man, who spent last summer taking a special course at the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, and who sailed from Liverpool in October. The superintendent of the Mission on the field writes that a way is open to establish a station in the Haussa country, as soon as workers can be got to occupy it.

Readers of The Christian are asked to remember in their prayers this little band of workers in the midst of the millions of heathen, and to ask that their numbers may speedily be reinforced by consecrated men, either from Great Britain or America? Anyone desiring more information should write to the Chairman of the English Council of the mission, Mr. B. F. Babcock, 4, Water Street, Liverpool, or to the secretary, Mr. William Henderson, 8 and 10, Lombard Street, Toronto, Canada. The latter will be glad to furnish copies of last year's report to any sending for them.

The Lee Memorial Home.

MRS. ADA LEE (the authoress of "An Indian Priestess: Chundra Lela") who has completed her fifteenth year of actual mission-service in India, says: "We have just passed the third anniversary of our six darling children. We trust the time is near when we may realize our cherished hope and begin the building of the 'Children's Memorial.' We greatly need the room which this will give us for dormitories, suitable class-rooms, and accommodation for more workers. We have now about 5,000dols, and need another 10,000dols to build as we require. We are using old buildings, rooms unsuited to the work, but are thankful for these, and are willing to do the best we can with them until our Father, who loves these little ones, gives us better. The dear ones whose memory the building is to commemorate, draw our heartstrings heavenwards, but the Lord so vividly told us it was for these children who have no one to care for them that He wanted us to live; and this we are doing cheerfully, and it is our joy to do His will. Is there anything too hard for the Lord?"

A Visit to Cherchel.

THE workers at the North Africa Mission Station at Cherchel, the Misses Read and Day, have lately been privileged to welcome their comrade, Miss Cox, of Djemâa Sahridj, who took part in a number of special gatherings for the natives.

Miss Cox gives an interesting account of the meetings at the Mission House: "We soon found ourselves passing among the lemon-trees in the little garden. Stationed as sentinel at the gate was a brave old Arab in native costume (always picturesque) receiving some thirty or forty girlish figures, their heads enveloped in shawls of various colours. Through the sweet garden they sped, and in the courtyard received the warmest welcome from their kind teachers. Finally, they stood before the table of gifts that friends over the sea had enabled us to distribute. It was sweet to hear their young voices singing of the Saviour. The next day another gathering was held for boys. These, too, are being grounded in Scripture, and most carefully taught. Our friends greatly feel the need of helpers, especially of a married couple for work among older lads.

"The next day we took part in another meeting for sixty other girls, and again we were gladdened in the assurance that the Word of God is indeed finding a place in many hearts in Cherchel. Our visits among the Arabs in their homes gave us fresh opportunities of realizing the devoted lives of our sisters, and our five days' sojourn with them convinced us more than ever of the power of the Gospel."

Evangelical Effort in Finland.

FROM time to time mention has been made in our columns of the progress of the work of providing an evangelical place of worship in Helsingfors. Mrs. Frances L. Parker has been staying with me, and I am glad to know, through her, that she has met with continued success; of the £4,000 necessary for the undertaking, some £3,350 has been raised. If the remaining amount can be secured by April, the building plan can be carried out this year, which will greatly facilitate the extension of Gospel work in Finland. Further information will be gladly given by Mrs. Parker, House of Rest, 10, Finchley Road, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.

Persecuted Stundists.

A RUSSIAN Stundist, having transgressed the State and Church law of Russia by following the dictates of God's Word in the Gospel of His grace, was imprisoned, and banished to Siberia. Thence he has made his escape, and is now in the town of Sophia (Bulgaria). He is the father of a family, consisting of a wife and six children, the youngest of them five years, the eldest, a daughter, of seventeen.

They are a sober, industrious family; the younger children are attending school, as much as the father's very scanty means will permit. He is by trade a stovesetter and plasterer, his eldest son a blacksmith; but they find very scarce remuneration in their employment, and often suffer privation. Their desire is to emigrate to Canada. His case is typical of many more; and I feel led thus to lay the matter before the Lord's stewards and remembrancers. Bis dat qui cito dat. F. W. Baedeker.

Wart-Eck, Weston-super-Mare.

Rev. J. D. McEwen in Brazil.—Writing on January 19 from Orobo, Bahia, Mr. McEwen (who, it will be remembered, recently visited this country) states that the work which he has undertaken gives promise of much development and usefulness. It is not, however, without immediate difficulties. "On my way," says the writer, "I called at Muritiba, and preached with two soldiers at the door, twelve at the windows, for my protection. A few days before, while a group of believers were met around the Word of God, a bomb was thrown in, striking a man on the leg and burning him badly. Two or three others were injured more or less. The police were sent at the instigation of the Chief of Police at Bahia City. There was perfect quiet and a full house, and most attentive were these poor creatures to hear. In fact, the people flock to the little squares and vendas where I go with my Bibles, reading and selling the precious Book."

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

SECOND WEEK OF THE SCOTTISH CAMPAIGN.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.)

AFTER the great Lord's Day gatherings reported in our last issue, the meetings naturally dropped for some days to more manageable proportions, but still continued to mark a steady increase in attendance as compared with the previous week. A marked feature all through was the strong and efficient staff of workers by whom the evangelists found themselves surrounded. Good arrangements had been made in advance by the leaders at Carrubbers Close Mission, and those in charge of other home-mission centres; but, over and above this, some of the best work has been done by Christians who were visiting the city, and who used such hours as were at their disposal to gather the sheaves, or glean the single ears, in the Master's great harvest-field.

GETTING THE CHURCH RIGHT.

On Monday of last week Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander met by special request with the members of missionary societies connected with the New College and the University. The hearty reception accorded to them, as well as the close attention with which their words were received, showed that hearers as well as speakers regarded the occasion as one of much importance. Addressing himself to those who had received a call to the ministry of the Gospel, Dr. Torrey declared without hesitation that, taking a wide view of the work and duty of the church, it is more important to get the congregations right than even to see a large number of outsiders converted; and that, narrowing the issue down to the personal question, it is most important of all to get the ministers right—"for if the minister be right, the church will be right. If our theological halls are sending forth a stream of life, in the form of true ministers of the Gospel, the work of the Church will go forward. If they are sending forth a stream of death, in the form of men who are not fit for the ministry, the future of the country is assured for evil." Fuller notes of the address will be found in another column.

CHEER FOR SABBATH-SCHOOL TEACHERS.

The series of addresses on Prayer was continued on Monday and Tuesday afternoons. With the first group of requests for the week came a most encouraging message; a Sabbath-school teacher, who had asked the Lord to give her the members of her class, returned thanks for three girls converted at one meeting, and added that her brother had been equally encouraged by the conversion of a boy in his class. Mingling with all the petitions, was a note of praise "that God is visiting Edinburgh;" and it was found, when friends began to compare notes, that while God was winning souls through His servants, on the previous day, in the Drill Hall and the Empire Theatre, many of God's people had remained in their own homes, definitely to hold up the hands of the evangelists in prayer.

As the week advanced Dr. Torrey felt that the time was ripe for allowing the after-meeting in the evening to take more definite shape. On Monday, the address, on "The Judgment Day," was a very searching and solemn one. Two points that seemed to go home with much force were declarations (1) that Godless men may laugh at the thought of the judgment, but they cannot laugh it away; and (2) that to prove the resurrection of Christ is to prove the Judgment Day—"the two go together."

A PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

A correspondent having asked Dr. Torrey to make public admission or refutation of certain newspaper statements—adding that silence would be construed to mean admission—a personal statement was made on Tuesday evening. Dr. Torrey said that since they set out on their tour round the world Mr. Alexander and he had uniformly declined to make any charge for their services. They had unreservedly placed themselves in the hands of the committee in each town or city they had visited, and had accepted at the close whatever was given them—"sometimes a good deal, sometimes little, sometimes nothing at all"—with which they had always been perfectly content.

When he went to the Chicago Bible Institute, Mr. Moody asked him what salary he wanted; he replied that he had given up salaries years ago, and did not propose to have any more to do with them. He was assured that if the Lord sent anything for him he would get it, and the trustees had always made provision for him. In 1900, the trustees invited him to take a vacation of a year, during which they would continue their allowances to him. Since setting out he had sent to the Bible Institute all money paid to him, after deducting his actual expenses.

THE USE OF A PRAYER LIST.

The address which followed was based on the question, "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" (Mark viii. 36). At the close there was more evidence of personal anxiety on spiritual things than on any earlier week-evening. When all who were prepared to accept Christ had been invited out to the front, Dr. Torrey explained that wherever they had gone they had been led to introduce the use of praying lists. On the top of the card he advised the writing of the words, "God helping me, I will pray for the conversion of the following people, and keep on praying." Under that space should be left for the entering of the names. When one of the persons is converted the name ought to be crossed out and another added to take its place. One lady in Melbourne said she found afterwards that one of her friends was converted on the first night before she could get the name down; two more on the following evening, and so on. "The place to begin is right in your own home." Asking those to stand who had such lists or would make them, Dr. Torrey remarked, "Very good; but it is not half the Christians here. Are you not sufficiently interested in your friends to do this? Do not ask any other person to pray for your friends, unless you will do it yourself." Many more then rose, and he added, "If you mean that, this meeting means more than any other meeting we have had here."

SAFEGUARDS AGAINST BACKSLIDING.

Five simple rules to safeguard against backsliding were given to the young converts: (1) Keep looking to Jesus. (2) Study the Bible at least fifteen minutes every day. Begin with John, and read it five times. Then read Luke, Acts, and First Thessalonians each five times, Romans three times, Ephesians five times. Follow that by reading the New Testament straight through; and afterwards do as you feel led. (3) Take plenty of time for prayer. (4) Confess Christ every chance you get. (5) Go to work to-night to bring others to Christ; and if you do not get a chance, try to-morrow.

Among the touching cases of conversion were those of a widowed mother and daughter, who had been prayed for at the afternoon meeting; and who, to the joy of their friends, were the first to come out to the front in the evening.

On Wednesday evening, those who arrived within a few minutes of the time of opening were confronted by a locked gate, and the placard, "Hall Full." Dr. Torrey went on the platform and asked Christians who had heard him preach a number of times to volunteer for a prayer-meeting in the inquiry-room, leaving their seats for those who had not come before. When both halls were full, it was found that thirty or forty were still in the outer room who had not yet been in Dr. Torrey's audiences, and further exchanges were arranged to accommodate them in the hall. When announcing a whole day of prayer on Friday, Dr. Torrey said they would observe that he expected them to give up everything for the day. "It will do you no harm to close your businesses. They did this in New Zealand and Melbourne." He hoped some would make it a day of fasting, but could not dictate what that would mean, for to different people it meant different things. "Let us make a business of waiting upon God."

HOW ARCHIE SETTLED IT.

A commercial traveller, who had only arrived in the city an hour or two before the service, was among those who formed the prayer meeting. Watching in a corridor at the close, he saw two young men about twenty-one years of age who did not appear to have been sufficiently impressed to remain for conversation, but whose faces showed that they were not altogether unconcerned about the matter. Stepping up, the worker asked, "Are you looking for the inquiry-room?" Receiving "Not exactly," a little hesitatingly, for an answer; he pressed the question, "Don't you think it would be better to settle this matter to-night?" Ultimately persuaded, they went in. Asked then what was their difficulty, one of them replied, "I could not be a Christian. I could not keep it." "No," said the friend by their side; "but would you not like to be kept?" Turning to the Sword of the Spirit, Isaiah xii. 2 and Romans x. 9 were used with good effect; and then the question pressed, "Won't you settle it?" "I will do it when I get home." But the soul-seeker knew the dangers of delay, and used more Scripture until there came a ready "Yes, I will settle it now." By this time another Christian had engaged the young man's companion in conversation. There was still doubt in the face, when the one who had just found the Lord burst out with the words, "Man Archie, can't you trust Him? I thought there was something to feel, but I see now it is only to trust Him." Archie did trust Him, and the two left the hall talking of things to which they had hitherto been strangers.

CONFESSING CHRIST AT ONCE.

On account of Friday being devoted to prayer, the general evangelistic services for the week culminated with a great gathering on Thursday evening. Clear, sharp weather favoured walking, and before eight o'clock the hall was crowded in every part, with hundreds gathered outside. The subject for the evening was "How to Obtain Eternal Life" (John xx. 30, 31). A splendid argument was step by step built up, showing how the Apostle John proves Jesus Christ to be the Son of God—by (1) the signs, powers, and miracles he records; (2) the nature of the teaching recorded; (3) the testimony of John the Baptist; (4) the Resurrection of Jesus Christ. The man who will honestly, prayerfully, and thoughtfully read through the first twenty chapters of John, will come to the conclusion that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and will be saved.

The moment the sermon was over, the workers were busy on every hand, and speedily about thirty men and women who had already been enabled to decide for Christ were gathered at the front; while those who had not got so far were dealt with in the inquiry room. The characteristic of the dealing with converts has been this insistence on the possibility of deciding in the public assembly. That it was a severe ordeal to come out publicly at once was evident at every gathering; but the very hardness made the results all the more satisfactory.

On Wednesday Dr. Torrey began to devote the afternoons to a series of addresses on the Person and Work of the Holy Spirit. Among the visitors for the day was Mr. William M.

Oatts, hon. secretary of the committee in charge of the arrangements for the mission in Glasgow. In a few earnest sentences he told how generally Christians in the West of Scotland are lifting up their hearts for Edinburgh, well knowing that if the city be moved by the Holy Spirit the effect will be felt, not only through all the country, but throughout the world. He revived personal recollections of the way in which the Revival of 1874 began, so far as Scotland was concerned, in Edinburgh, and the blessing spread westward, southward, and northward.

PRAYING BANDS.

During recent weeks he had visited a number of the neighbouring towns, and had found bands of from 100 to 120 Christians unitedly waiting upon God for this one thing. In connection with the Bible Training Institute, no fewer than 200 such bands have been formed; and large numbers of similar small companies are meeting in the homes of the people.

Mr. Alexander has been pressing on the attention of all the great amount of good work that may be accomplished by the writing of letters to those who are not Christians. Day after day he has quoted instances to show how this branch of service has been blessed; and on Thursday afternoon, after asking for volunteers to do this, asked also for an indication of those who had received such letters during recent days. A surprising number of hands were held up.

An instance of a Melbourne lady who had lost both arms, and who yet found it possible to write letters for God, has filled the hearts of some able-bodied people with shame and confusion. The Holy Spirit is quickening the perceptions of Christians; and among other classes who are coming to have a share in prayers and personal interest is the great one of mothers with young children, who are unable to attend meetings. Mr. Alexander very naturally points out to those who are bringing the subject forward that the field is a splendid one for individual service. Dr. Torrey caused some surprise on Thursday afternoon by saying, "I thank God for all that has been done, but I am not so well satisfied as some of the brethren. We have not seen the conviction of sin here that we ought to have done. 'Because they believe not on me'—it is the sin of unbelief of which the Holy Ghost convicts men. We want a work that will reach the poorest in the city, and the most refined and cultured people among you; it is the office of the Holy Spirit alone to produce these results."

WITH THE BUSINESS MEN.

The principal new feature of the week has been the additional meetings for business men. Beginning on Tuesday, good congregations have been present each day. The topic for the week has been, "Why I believe the Bible to be the Word of God." On Tuesday the reason dealt with was (1) because of the testimony of Jesus Christ. The Lord Jesus Christ set the stamp of His authority on the entire Old and New Testaments in such a way that if we accept the authority of Christ we must accept the whole Bible, and for many reasons the authority of Jesus Christ is unimpeachable.

Wednesday's reasons were (2) the argument from fulfilled prophecy, limited on account of time to (a) explicit verbal prophecies regarding the Jewish nation, the Gentile nations, and the coming Messiah. The passages of Scripture selected for the purpose were Isaiah liii.; Daniel ix. 25-27; Jeremiah xxiii. 5, 6; Micah v. 2; and Psalm xvi.

A second line of examination was (b) the study of pictorial prophecy, or prophcies by type and symbol. The man who will shrug his shoulders when you speak about the types, and say there is nothing in the subject, has not studied it. After dealing with (3) the argument from the unity pervading these sixty-six books, which are the work of forty writers, spread over thousands of years, speaking different languages, and living in different countries, Dr. Torrey summed all up in the words, "The man who wants to learn will bow before the testimony."

The address on Thursday was notable from the scathing terms in which Dr. Torrey brought out the moral superiority of the teaching to that of any or all other books in the world. He showed perfect familiarity with the choice passages in heathen writers which it is customary to quote as proving their high tone, and then placed alongside these passages of very different character which are deliberately ignored by the upholders of these authors. The series was closed with a clear, comprehensive, and logical review of the Christian position.

DAY OF PRAYER.

Direct evangelistic work was suspended on Friday that the whole day might be spent in prayer. The business men's meeting was held as usual in St. Andrew's Parish Church, the others being in Queen Street U.F. Church. In the morning Rev. Dr. J. Hood Wilson presided, and led the way into the secret place of the Most High, showing that out of the deepest sense of need, the longing of the thirsty soul for God, comes the answer to prayer.

Reading Zechariah xii. 9-14, Dr. Alexander Whyte brought a message of great beauty and power. "He pours, we do not produce it ourselves; and when we want anything to be poured we take a vessel. If we have not much of the spirit of prayer, we see where it is to be had. He has it in plenty; and, if we are poor and needy, we are just in the right place."

The key-note to the afternoon (chairman, Rev. Dr. John Smith) was found in the words, "Hallowed be Thy Name"; and in the evening Dr. Torrey gave a powerful and heart-searching address on "Hindrances to Prayer." Memories of former days with Mr. Moody were awakened by the singing of Mr. A. W. Vance (Belfast), honorary superintendent of the Homes of Rest at Bangor.

INQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

On Wednesday evening a lady said to Dr. Torrey, "Can you talk with me? I have no assurance that I am saved." The ever-ready Bible was turned over to John iii. 36. "Do you believe on Christ?" "I do not know." "Do you believe He died on the Cross, and bore your sins?" "I do not know." "Do you believe in His power to keep you from sinning? Have you asked God for Christ's sake to do this? Have you got a real faith in Christ, that leads to absolute surrender? Have you surrendered all to Jesus?" "I have." "Then read, 'He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.' Who does that verse say has everlasting life?" "He that believeth." "Who says so?" "God." "Is it sure?" "Yes." "Very well, what is sure?" "That he that believeth hath everlasting life." "Do you believe on the Son?" "I do." "What have you got?" "Oh, I do not feel I am saved." "I did not ask you what you felt. Suppose you had committed a crime, that you had been condemned, and that you were awaiting execution. Suppose that the King pardoned you, and that somebody brought the pardon, signed and sealed by the King. What would you know?" "I would know that I was pardoned." "How would you know it?" "Because I saw the document." "Well, here is God's document, and it says, 'hath everlasting life.'" "After you had seen the King's document, suppose someone should say, Are you pardoned?" "I should say, Yes, because the document says so." "Do you feel pardoned?" "Very likely you would not; it would be so new, so sudden, so good, that you could not realize it. You would say, perhaps, that you did not feel it, but you knew. What does this document say, 'hath everlasting life.' Does it say he that feeleth so?" "No." "He that believeth"; is that a description of you? Read your own name in 'hath.'" "Oh," she cried, "I see it. I see it."

Three nurses, who were out with young children, promised a worker to come in the evening. Two of them came, and left rejoicing in the Lord. The difficulties of one generation are the difficulties of another. Many stumble over the very simplicity of the way of salvation, and others cannot believe that it can be done without preparation. One young widower could not realise that it was the hand of a loving Father by which he had been so sorely stricken.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Gipsy Smith's Mission at Brighton.

(Further Notice.)

Gipsy Smith's mission was the most successful ever held in Brighton in connection with the Free Church Council. For ten days the Dome was crowded to its utmost capacity, while hundreds of persons were turned away from the doors. The audiences were of the most representative character. Ministers, magistrates, aldermen, councillors, lawyers, doctors, artizans, shopkeepers; in short, "all sorts and conditions of men"—and women—have crowded the historic edifice. The Mayor and Mayoress were in evidence upon the platform at more than one service, and were among the most interested of the evangelist's hearers.

Gipsy Smith's power over great crowds is most remarkable. From first to last he has his audience in his hand. He sways them as the summer wind sways a field of rye. His personal appearance is all in his favour, casting a spell upon his audience, and riveting their gaze upon him as he speaks. He is a child of nature. He need not tell us that he was born in a field. He has upon him "the smell of a field that the Lord hath blessed." The soughing of the wind, the babble of the brook, the song of the lark in the sky, the autumn light on a shock of corn—it is all in him, and it comes out in his addresses, to the delight of his audience.

But, more than any of these, the Spirit of the Lord God is upon him. One cannot help feeling, in listening to his manly, powerful, persuasive utterances, the Lord hath anointed him to preach good tidings. He is ever in quest of the soul. He has his audience laughing and crying in the same breath; but it is the soul that he seeks. "I am not after your hands or your feet, but your souls," he says, if ever the uncontrollable applause of the people breaks forth. One moment he is "a day of judgment," the next like "the rain on the mown grass." But the end and purpose of it all is to bring men to God. Hundreds passed through the inquiry-rooms, and they were not all women.

Perhaps the most memorable meeting in connection with the mission was the midnight service. Two-thirds of the vast audience were men, hard-headed practical citizens, whose "I will" of decision for Christ rang out clear and firm in response to the evangelist's appeal.

The effect of the mission upon the town is very manifest. Not only are people in the streets singing "Count your blessings," but many are showing greater consideration to one another in their homes: there is a kindlier tone in the voice; the mistress is more patient, and the servant sweeps in the corners. The churches have been quickened. The atmosphere is clearer and more invigorating. Everybody is saying, "God bless Gipsy Smith!" and when he is at liberty he will receive a warm welcome to Brighton again.

D. G.

Another correspondent writes: The Free Churches of Brighton and Hove organized a canvass of the towns, and held preliminary intercession meetings, so that Gipsy Smith found "a people prepared of the Lord." Ministers were well to the fore in all the meetings, and rendered invaluable service in the inquiry rooms.

On Sunday afternoon there was a great gathering of the P.S.A.'s, and the Dome was crowded to excess. In the evening many hundreds had to be turned away. It was a grand sight to see the immense crowd of more than three thousand stand up to sing, and then bow in devotion before the Lord. The united bands of the Free Churches gave their effective help and were a great factor of great force in the conduct of the meetings. Sometimes Gipsy Smith would stop all the instruments and sing a verse with remarkable pathos and power. During his meetings he made frequent use of the verses:—

When I survey the wondrous Cross
On which the Prince of Glory died,
My richest gain I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride.

See from His head, His hands, His feet,
Sorrow and love flow mingled down.
Did e'er such love and sorrow meet,
Or thorns compose so rich a crown?

His rendering of these familiar and beautiful words often melted the vast audiences in tears, and caused many to stand up as an evidence of decision.

Gipsy Smith was loyal to the earnest work done in some churches, but he emphasized the solemn fact that if ministers and members were what they ought to be, there would be no need of his coming to hold a mission. At times when he really abandoned himself to description and persuasion, he reminded one of Reginald Radcliffe when he headed the Great Revival in Liverpool in the year 1855. At that time the writer was converted under Reginald Radcliffe's preaching, and he has seldom known of such intense feeling and power since then, until Gipsy Smith's meetings in the Dome.

On Saturday night a special attack was made upon public-houses, the streets, &c., and the united bands led the procession. Vast numbers were led to the Dome, and the meeting lasted until midnight. Best of all, many were convinced of sin, and sought for the mercy of God.

Barnsbury Chapel, N.

The mission which Mr. Leonard Weaver has been conducting at Barnsbury Chapel, N., has been much blessed during the past few weeks. There have been increased attendances, and the Lord's people have been encouraged, and souls won for Christ. Valuable help has been given by Mr. Henry Varley, whose earnest words proved a great power for good. Mr. J. Bennett Anderson has also taken acceptable part. The spirit of the mission is influencing the churches of the district; some are having mission services with good attendances and blessing, and our prayer is that the work may spread. G. M. W.

A Y.M.C.A. Mission.

Under the auspices of the Exeter Y.M.C.A., a week's mission to men was conducted by Mr. W. A. Boyd, general secretary of the City of Dublin Association, commencing on Lord's Day, February 1. The meetings were blessed by God, and a number of young men have taken a definite stand for their Lord, including several associate members of the Association. Mr. Boyd's discourses were characterized by earnestness and enthusiasm in seeking to win souls, and he made a deep impression upon his hearers, who listened night after night with rapt attention to the simple and lucid exposition of God's word. The Association has undoubtedly received a great stimulus from the mission, and the workers are anticipating a reinvigorated tone in the various devotional meetings.

McClure Street Mission Hall, Belfast.

Miss Evans and Miss Bradley, of the Faith Mission, have just concluded an eight-weeks' mission in above hall. To interest and hold large attendances nightly for so protracted a time is in itself not alone an evidence of the ability of these ladies, but, what is still more important, it showed that the Lord was indeed owning the work, and this was very clearly seen from the beginning to the finish of the mission. Every night the earnest and searching addresses of the preachers was blessed by the Lord in bringing sinners—old and young—to yield themselves, and at the close of the meetings it was gladdening to hear testimonies, which showed that the mission had been made a blessing to sin-burdened souls. Mr. Mulligan, district missionary, is now continuing the work, assisted by a bright band of Christian workers, many of whom found the Saviour at the mission services just held. C. D.

Mrs. Herbert Pout (Grace Pettman) at Stoke Newington, N.

The workers at Matthias Road Wesleyan Mission Chapel are rejoicing with the "joy in harvest," that the Lord has approved and blessed the earnest and faithful labours of His servant during an eight-days' mission at this chapel. Cottage prayer meetings were held, and neighbours and friends were invited and induced to come to the mission; the attendance was very encouraging, and on Sunday evening, the last day of the mission, there was a large congregation. All through the mission the power of the Holy Spirit was manifestly evidenced by numerous conversions, many of the converts being young persons attending the Sunday-schools. We ascribe all praise to the God of all grace for what, in our experience of about twenty years, is the most effective spiritual movement in this mission, and we are praying and looking for continued and increasing blessing.

Mr. R. S. Bradbrook in Lincolnshire.

For the past six weeks Mr. R. S. Bradbrook has been labouring in various churches of the Epworth Circuit (Wesleyan) and his visit has resulted in much good work. In addition to those brought to the Lord, Mr. Bradbrook's untiring efforts to encourage and strengthen God's people, Sunday-school and church officials, as well as to stand by and loyally support the work of the regular ministry, have been highly appreciated—especially by the church at Crowle. Special meetings were held for boys and girls, and the tactful manner in which the evangelist deals with the young, enabling them, as he does, to stand up and publicly repeat from memory not only the texts and subjects, but also the divisions of six or seven of the addresses he has delivered, evidences his strong desire for the permanency of his teaching.

Mr. Bradbrook's gift of song was a valuable adjunct to his preaching; while the lantern lectures given at the close of the mission vividly pourtray the good providence of God. The "Glory Song," recently published in The Christian, and so successfully introduced to us by Mr. Bradbrook, has taken a firm hold upon our church and town. The mission has been a veritable blessing to us. M.

Mr. Newton Jones at Bridport.

Mr. Newton Jones' ten-days' mission at Bridport closed on Tuesday, the 10th inst. Every meeting was rich in power. On the first day young people came out and owned Christ, indicating preparedness and expectation. As the days passed the interest steadily deepened. The Bible readings, illustrated by chalk and blackboard, were times of quiet blessing for Christians. The Gospel of John epitomized on the board seemed a new book to many. It was a glad sight to see young men who had been at the parting of the ways definitely choose Christ. There are many such cases. Young and old rejoiced together, for Mr. Jones is a past master in dealing with both. His plain speaking on the drink evil, worldliness, youthful smokers, &c., told heavily for good. The limelight lecture, "Is Life Worth Living?" with its sermon, pictures, and appeals, held all spellbound. At the closing meeting the large Congregational Church was well filled, and the president of the local Sunday School Union voiced the feelings of all when he acknowledged the extraordinary interest created by the mission, and thanked Mr. Jones for his devoted labours. The appeal to converts and others who had received good to rise in confession evoked a remarkable response. Altogether the Bridport Union has had a time to be remembered long and gratefully.

W. B. Haynes, President, Bridport S.S.U.

Mr. W. H. Jude in Manchester.

During the past week this earnest servant of God has been conducting services at the Higher Ardwick Primitive Methodist Church, Manchester. On the previous Saturday evening a large number of friends and workers gathered together to meet Mr. Jude and engage in a prayer and praise service. It was a time of much blessing; a fitting preparation for the services of the Sabbath.

The memory of Mr. Jude's former mission, two years ago, has remained fresh in the minds of those who heard him, and it was not at all surprising to find the large and commodious church well filled for the morning service. It was an inspiring time.

The church was crowded in the evening, many being unable to obtain admission. The missioner's earnest appeals to forsake sin and turn to Christ, the sinner's only friend, and his forcible appeal through his singing of "Rock of Ages," seemed to touch all hearts, and the voice of the people, as they sang "The Crowning Day is Coming" and "Praise the Name of Jesus," was the voice of triumph.

Interest deepened with each service, the church, with a seating capacity of 1,000, being filled each night. The last night of the mission saw the church literally packed to listen to the life story of Mr. Jude. Truly, a wonderful story, exhibiting the wondrous grace of our Lord Jesus Christ! We thank God for all that He has wrought through His servant, and especially for the wonderful blessings brought to Higher Ardwick through his ministry.

Joseph Ellis.

Rev. John McNeill at Bristol.

Under the auspices of the Free Church Council Mr. McNeill is holding a three-weeks' mission in Bristol. In order the better to "compass the city" the evenings of the first week were devoted to the extremities of Kingswood and Bedminster, where large audiences showed an earnest appreciation of the message delivered. Afternoon services were also held in the central and capacious Broadmead Chapel, and each Sunday night in the People's Palace.

This week Victoria Rooms, Clifton, form the evening rallying ground, Broadmead being also the scene of encouraging "dinner-hour" meetings for business men. Next week the evangelist will occupy the vast Colston Hall.

It will be seen, therefore, that the Council has left no stone unturned to secure and accommodate large audiences such as Mr. McNeill is wont to address, and very encouraging impressions are being recorded. We heard him at Bedminster last Friday night, and were much impressed with the simplicity and force of his appeal. His word-pictures of David's "dark days" under Saul's persecution were most telling, and it seemed impossible to conceive any of the large audience remaining unmoved as he spoke of the apathy of men toward the love of the despised and rejected Saviour.

Local Christians are rallying well to the work, and there is every indication that the seed of the Kingdom will, by the Holy Spirit's power, yield eternal fruit. G.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Clitheroe.

The little town of Clitheroe, in the N.E. Division of Lancashire, has been deeply moved by a ten-days' mission conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, under the auspices of the Clitheroe and District Evangelical Free Church Council (Rev. Lewis J. Shackleford, president), which commenced on Saturday, January 31, with a workers' meeting, the good attendance at which proved a correct forecast of the increasing interest manifested in all the meetings. The U.M.F.C. chapel, seating some 750, proved much too small for the audiences, and on the last Sunday and Monday overflow meetings had to be held in the Congregational Church, seating about 400, which was also well filled.

For the lime-light lecture on "The Bedford Tinker and his Book," given on the second Saturday afternoon, and the meeting, "for men only," on the Sunday afternoon, the Public Hall, a larger building than the chapel, was crowded. The afternoon Bible readings were also well attended, and much enjoyed. The meetings throughout were characterized by deep earnestness, and Mr. Lane's appeal to conscience, the absence of sensationalism, and the sincerity with which he spoke, gained the sympathy of many who usually "fight shy" of evangelistic meetings.

Although some 160 persons decided for Christ, it is evident that this fact represents but a part of the spiritual blessing received through his ministrations; other persons are still sending in their names, and those who were already believers have been quickened to greater earnestness and deeper consecration. The absence of anything approaching sectarianism receives proof in the fact that the greater number of converts were from the Church of England congregations—the rector (Rev. Robt. Railton) taking part in one of the services. We are deeply thankful for Mr. Lane's visit, and praise God for "the power from on high" manifested in our midst. S.

A week's mission has been conducted at Caine Hall, Vauxhall, by the Weaver Tent Mission Band, with encouraging results.

Mr. William Forbes held his closing meetings for pantomime women in the provinces, last week, at Chorley and Burnley. He has been two months travelling on this special mission.

Mr. R. H. Cooper writes from Leeds, that "Mr. Jack Cooke, the Boy Preacher, is having crowded meetings, and, with God's blessing, many cases of blessing every night, while Christians are being quickened into activity for the Master."

Hackney Y.M.C.A. has arranged to continue the Sunday evening services in the Hackney Empire Theatre, inaugurated by Rev. Vallance Cook. The attendance last Sunday night was nearly 4,000. A number professed conversion. Much prayer is earnestly requested on behalf of these services. Singers are invited to bring their Sankey's tune books to-night (Thursday) at 9 o'clock to the Y.M.C.A., 275, Mare Street, Hackney. F. L. P.

Rev. D. M. Cameron, of Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road, S.W., commenced a fortnight's mission in the Wesleyan Church, Looe, Cornwall, on the 8th inst. There have been good congregations, increased interest has already been awakened, and praise is desired for souls that have been pointed to Christ. Four members of a senior Sunday-school class, and an engine-driver were among the first to take their stand on the Lord's side.

In the Free Church at Bures, Suffolk, we have just concluded a ten-days' mission conducted by Mr. C. E. Barraclough, and we are thankful to record decisions for Christ. In every respect this mission is the best since the cause was begun, fourteen years ago. The attendances were good from the beginning, and on the closing nights the hall was crowded. Mr. Barraclough won the ear of the people, and presented the truth tellingly and faithfully. In the closing meeting those who had professed faith in Christ confessed Him by standing up. We shall remember Mr. Barraclough's visit with pleasure and thankfulness.

E. P. Hammond King, Pastor.

Evangelist James Wharton, of Barrow-in-Furness, England, who for twenty-six years has been working among the freedmen of the South in the United States, is again among them on his annual pilgrimage. He has just closed a three weeks' meeting with the First Congregational Church of Atlanta, Georgia. From the first, remarkable power has been manifest in the meetings, cases of decision occurring from their very start. Meetings were held in the Storrs School hard by, and in other places. In all there have been 250 decisions, and the Christians have been greatly revived. Mr. Wharton's coming is always hailed with joy. Henry H. Procter, Pastor.

About Dogs and Lions.

"A LIVING dog is better than a dead lion," said King Solomon (Eccles. ix. 4). It is a curious saying, and one that has come to be regarded as a proverb, easily remembered.

When Henry Stanley went out to Africa to seek David Livingstone, the daily papers were full of his doings; and when, after long and painful journeyings, he found the honoured missionary, his praise was written all over the world, and he was called "the lion of the hour." Sometimes at an entertainment or an evening party there is some one person present whom all the others have come to hear or see, and he is called "the lion of the evening." So you see that to be "a lion," in that sense, means to be a very important personage.

I hope you all have the ambition to become great and useful men and women as you grow up, so that the world may be all the better because you are in it. That is indeed worth living for, and God created you that your life may be obedient to His will, and consecrated to do His bidding.

But the lion that Solomon referred to was not alive, but dead. It had all the outward form of a powerful creature—its grand head, its beautiful mane, its strong, well-made limbs—but its eyes were closed, its life had passed away, and it would never roar again. In fact, it was worse than useless; it blocked up the way, and would become unpleasant if it were not quickly buried out of sight. The only alternative was to stuff it and put it in a museum, and even then it might become the abode of vermin, unless it were put in a glass case. It could no longer strike terror into the heart of the graceful gazelle in the forest; and a tiny lamb could gambol over it without any fear of being eaten up.

Those of you who have read "The Pilgrim's Progress" will remember how afraid Christian was of the two lions that guarded the way to the Palace Beautiful, because they were alive and very terrible. But if they had been dead, he would have had no need to fear. One living dog would have been more dangerous to the stranger than twenty dead lions.

It is difficult to see to what good use a live lion could be put, because he is almost impossible to tame; and a dead one is of no use at all. But a good dog is useful in lots of ways, and sometimes the smaller he is, the better watchdog he will make.

I want you to learn from our text, therefore, that even if you are small and young, you may be of more real value to those around you than a much more important looking person who does not possess the most necessary elements of a useful life.

(1) Do not long to be great, merely that people may praise and admire you. If you do become great in your home or school or play, it will be because you are particular and faithful and true in the little things of life; doing your duty whether people praise you or not, so long as you win the approval of God, as a dog does that of his master. Live to please Him, and you cannot help being great in the best and highest sense.

(2) Do not become hinderers to others who are trying to follow Jesus. There are so many ways of doing this—by sneering or scoffing at those who desire to be good; by surrounding them with a bad savour of evil influence; by making yourselves disagreeable with cross or bitter words, when you might cheer and help them by "scattering seeds of kindness," for Jesus' sake.

(3) Do not be content with a lifeless form, like a stuffed lion, which people look at and pass away, "none the better for seeing you." Let your life be such that people will admire you, not for what you look, but for what you are, alive and ready to say or do anything that will make them and Jesus glad.

(4) Be like a watch-dog, always on the look out to keep others from harm; a bright, pleasant companion, whom your schoolfellows and friends will always be glad to know; a true friend, to whom they will turn in any time of trouble, assured that you will do your best to help.

(5) But to live thus, you must have life, not merely that which is in your body, but the higher life of God in your soul. This is why Jesus came to earth—"that they might have life" (John x. 10), and those who do not possess it are spoken of as "dead in trespasses and sins" (Eph. ii. 1, 4, 5). Boys or girls may be bright and winning in their ways, and a picture of bodily health, and yet be dead, if they have not the true life, for "this life is in His Son" (1 John v. 11).

(6) The opposite of life is death, and it is of this that Solomon speaks in the verse before us. Perhaps some of you are afraid to die. A little boy once asked his father to buy him something out of every shop they passed during their morning walk through the village in which they lived. It was a strange request, and, stranger still, the proposal was agreed to! I expect you would all like a father who would be as nice as that! So they went into shop after shop, and bought boots, a hat, a necktie, a walking-stick, a knife, some sweets, and a wheelbarrow. Then they came to an undertaker's, with a little coffin in the window. The father was about to enter, but the little lad pulled him back, and cried in a frightened voice: "Oh no, father. I don't want to go in there; I'm not going to die." And then he learned some solemn lessons about life and death from his wise and loving parent, who took the opportunity to speak to him about eternal things.

Dear boys and girls, will you not learn them too? Ask God to give you "the life, which is life indeed," and use it for His glory; then you will not be afraid of death, for it will only be to you an entrance through the gate of heaven, into the everlasting life beyond the stars.

The Children's Angels.*

For in heaven their angels do always behold the face of My Father which is in heaven (Matt. xviii. 10).

In heaven above, where angels grand
Serve things of precious worth,
The Lord has one peculiar band
Who watch the babes on earth.

The children's angels come and go,
Amid the stars and suns—
Their holy work to bend down low
And guard our little ones.

How could these tender lambs survive
The dangers of the way,
Did not good angels keep alive
And shelter them each day?

Oh! mystery of lovely love,
That God thus cares for all;
And, from His lofty throne above,
Regards the weak and small.

Church Extension (Acts xi. 19-27).

IN the opening words we are carried back to chap. viii. 4. The ripples of the great convulsion caused by Stephen's death circled out through the world of men, for the greater glory of God and the extension of the Divine kingdom. Surely the good compensated abundantly for the suffering and hardship meted out to the Mother Church. Again and again persecution and suffering have given wings to the Gospel.

Phœnice was that part of the Mediterranean coast which stretched from Caesarea northwards; Cyprus was the great island between that coast and Asia Minor—it was the home of Barnabas (iv. 36); Antioch, on the River Orontes, was "almost an Oriental Rome," and in the first two centuries of the Christian era was much what Constantinople was afterwards. It was natural that men of Cyprus and Cyrene (Luke xxiii. 26; Acts xiii. 1) should come into these parts; and it was fitting, also, in virtue of their birth into the heavenly nature, that they should preach Christ.

But the remarkable matter in the work of these simple, unordained, unnamed people—not apostles, deacons, or evangelists—was that, without waiting for any resolution or direction from any one, they spake unto "the Greeks" (20, R.V.); and in doing so solved the problem whether the Gospel was meant for the Gentiles in their natural condition, as well as for the Jews, as well as for Gentiles who had become Jewish proselytes. There had never been any doubt about the latter. The Jewish Rabbis were quite prepared that Christ should be offered to the Gentiles if they would first enter the synagogue as proselytes, but what they would not brook was that the Gentiles might enter the Church by a direct door, and without going through the Jewish porch. It was on this point that Peter needed so much persuading (chap. x.); and on this account also Paul was persecuted to the end of his life. That devoted servant of God was first brought into this work at Antioch (25, 26), and it is probable that he here was initiated by the Holy Spirit into that sacred secret, of which he felt himself, in after days, to be the special custodian—that Gentiles were welcome to be fellow-heirs and fellow-members of the Body, and fellow-partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus through the Gospel (Eph. iii. 6).

The remarkable results which instantly accrued from the preaching of Jesus to pure-blooded Greeks, were due to "the hand of the Lord," which was manifestly with these simple and unordained preachers. Let us see to it that we never approach the sacred work of winning souls for God apart from that pierced hand!

The Mother Church, realizing the great importance of this new departure, determined on a mission of inquiry, and could not have chosen a more suitable representative than the good Barnabas, a native of these parts, and himself full of the Holy Spirit. Notice what he saw—"the grace of God;" what he felt—"he was glad;" what he did—"he exhorted them to cleave to the Lord." If he had been a narrow-minded man, or a mere ecclesiastic, he would have hesitated to acknowledge a work which had sprung up through laymen and independently of the recognised forms and leaders of the Church; but he was a man of large heart and liberal views; and was destined, with the aid of Paul, to open an entirely new chapter in the history of the Church of Christ (xiii. 1-4). Let us not be always studying precedents, but keep an open mind to the direction and leading of the Holy Spirit, who is always conducting the Church into new and wider fields of service. Note that the people were "added to the Lord." We often talk of additions to our churches, but they amount to nothing unless the souls we enumerate are added to the Head of the Church, and hold Him.

It is interesting to learn that the name we bear was first acquired at Antioch (26). It was evidently given, in the first instance, as a term of reproach (xxvi. 28; 1 Pet. iv. 16). The witty Antiochese needed a label for this novel sect, and discovered it in the name which was most often on the disciples' lips. But what a tribute this is to those new converts, that the heathen who beheld their lives and heard their speech could not help acknowledging that they were Jesus Christ's! May it be so with us! F. Sunday, March 1.

Paul and Apollos (Acts xviii. 24-xix. 6).

Golden Text.—(Luke xi. 13).

THE command obeyed, the promised presence of the Lord experienced (vv. 9, 10); hence eighteen months' fruitful labour in Corinth, a happy leave-taking, and the company of two devoted friends as far as Ephesus. A few days in that city, then Paul went alone to Jerusalem, probably to attend the feast of Pentecost, thence to Antioch, and thus ended his second missionary journey, A.D. 52 (Acts xv. 36, A.D. 49). After a brief rest, he began his third missionary tour, and, passing by the upper districts of Asia, returned to Ephesus about A.D. 53. Meantime Apollos had visited and left that city for Corinth, taking with him a letter of recommendation, the first on record.

Apollos and Paul in Ephesus.

Alexandria was famous as a centre of learning and philosophy, as having a school of oratory, and the largest library in the world. The first septuagint translation of the Scriptures was made there. "An Alexandrian Jew" stood for our term "a university man." Apollos was a scholarly preacher well versed in the Scriptures. Eloquent, accurate, and in advance of his nation in the teaching of fulfilment of prophecy. Diligent, earnest, zealous, fervent, thirsty for knowledge, but humble-minded enough to gather it from homely sources. In the house of two tent-makers the great preacher learned the secret of true Gospel power, and received his Pentecostal blessing. The Holy Spirit illumined his soul, and fired his zeal for the Saviour's service (1 Cor. iii. 6). Revealed the Lord Jesus Christ to him (John x. 13).

Twelve disciples had made a confession of repentance, a desire to lead a new life, hope in a coming Messiah who should "baptize them with the Holy Ghost and with fire" (Matt. iii. 11), but knew nothing of the crucified and risen Christ dwelling in their hearts by His Holy Spirit. The good news of Pentecost had not reached them (R.V.). "We did not so much as hear whether the Holy Ghost was given." (Compare John vii. 39.) "Baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus," having received the witness of the Spirit as in Rom. viii. 16. As in Jerusalem the gift of tongues marked the beginning of the great work in that city, so in Ephesus the same sign was given, and the twelve went forth to proclaim the Gospel with power.

LESSONS.

1. "Speak, for I am with thee." Paul entered Corinth fainthearted and discouraged; his reception was cold and even hostile. Teachers, the class is like that sometimes; but Paul's Master is "this same Jesus" to you "to-day" also. The yoke of service rests on His shoulder as well as yours. Acts xviii. 10—read "class" for "city," and put His promise to the test (John xv. 7.) "Take my lips." (Jer. i. 9.) "Speak through me, O gracious Master!"

2. Not the persuasions of his friend anymore than the threats of his enemies could turn the Apostle from the work of the Lord, or from attending the services of public worship. (Luke ii. 49.)

3. Memories well stored with prophecies and their fulfilment concerning Christ, from Old Testament and New, will be as much needed and blessed in the coming generation as they have ever been. Motto: "My memory for Christ."

4. Boys! Do not be too proud to listen; your younger sister may have a message from God to you. Apollos, the learned and eloquent preacher, would have missed a great blessing to his own soul, and a wonderful field of service, if he had not listened and followed the message Priscilla gave him.

5. Girls! The whispered text from his own sister has helped many a boy round "temptation corner," and proved "the power of God" to draw his soul to Jesus (John vi. 44).

6. Priscilla did a great service for God when she witnessed in her home of the work of the Holy Spirit in her own soul. The great preacher heard, sought, obtained, and proclaimed that blessing in public. The power came from God the Holy Ghost, but the witnessing came from Priscilla's lips and life.

More Monks for Wales.—There is to be a further migration of monks to Wales, the "Black Monks of Finisterre," a branch of the Benedictines—an order which the French Government have refused to authorise in France—having been given a house and sixty acres of land at Pembrey, in Carmarthenshire. It is stated that they have been studying the Welsh language in order to preach in that tongue, but as the order is celebrated for its "scientific agriculture," doubtless the monks will devote themselves strenuously to farming, when they discover, as they soon will do, that Wales has learned to prize an open Bible as the true and only basis of spiritual and national liberty.

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

WHAT A WOMAN COULD DO.

It is remarkable that in the Revised Version the name of Priscilla is placed before that of Aquila; and the reason for the alteration may be that she took a more prominent part in the instructing of Apollos than did her husband. There is a town named Corfe, in Dorsetshire, where a castle is shown to visitors, and it is famous because of the heroism of a woman. During the Civil War this fortress was successfully held by Lady Bankes, and a few friends and retainers, against a large force of the enemy. Many onslaughts were resisted by the courageous defenders, who at one time were actually able to conduct a sortie from the castle. Throughout the Bible there are many women who excelled in times of crisis, and down the ages to the present time they have always been prominent in the cause of Christianity. Even young girls may often expound in their lives the way of God more perfectly, and defend the truth more stoutly, than can the great and strong men of the world (v. 26).

DOING SPECIAL WORK FOR GOD.

As a young man, General Booth received a theological training for service in the pulpit of the Methodist Church. On completing his course, he engaged for some years in ordinary ministerial work, and knowing his nature, one may well imagine his earnest desire for a larger sphere of work. It was not until 1865 that General Booth started his Christian Mission for the benefit of the poor and destitute. That enterprise eventually developed into the Salvation Army, and to-day, after some five-and-twenty years, that work has become almost world-wide in its ever-increasing operations. Like Apollos, General Booth in his early fervour was mighty in the Scriptures. Like him he learnt the way of God that he might follow, and in that particular path has been able to do a mighty and a convincing work, teaching men by the Scriptures that Jesus is the Christ (v. 28). God has given each of us a special work to do. We must be willing to learn of Him, and ready to obey when He says, "This is the way, walk ye in it."

OUR UNCASHED CHEQUES.

Many people are not aware that a crossed cheque may be passed into the Post Office savings bank. In numbers of cases cheques have been held for quite a long time, because the recipients have not known how to realise the amounts for which the cheques were drawn. Is not this often the case with present-day Christians? They know and love their Lord, and He is constantly sending them rich and precious promises—cheques to be realized at the Bank of Faith—that by them we may be partakers of the Divine nature.

SECURED AT A GREAT COST.

In the Natural History Museum at Central Park, New York, a valuable butterfly may be seen. It is estimated that the insect cost its former owner, a Pennsylvanian doctor, at least £2,000. The butterfly is to be found only in a certain part of West Africa, and the gentleman fitted out an expedition and maintained it for more than two years, in order that the rare insect might be added to his entomological collection. If such zeal is shown by one who desires to secure a butterfly, is it to be wondered at that Christians at times display an unusual enthusiasm? The gift of full salvation which Apollos had secured filled him with a burning devotion, and the people of Ephesus, when they heard of the Holy Ghost, were baptized in the Name of the Lord Jesus, and spake with tongues and prophesied (vv. 5 and 6). To work for God we must receive the Holy Ghost. Then no service will be too laborious for the Lord, and we shall be willing to go to the ends of the earth to add jewels to His crown.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

NEATH.

IN no part of Wales has more interest been taken of late years in Temperance work and greater efforts put forth to arrest the deadly tide of drunkenness than in Neath which is the centre of a large industrial and commercial population in the heart of Glamorgan. During the past five years no less than eight great united and highly successful temperance missions have been held in the town, promoted by a strong and active committee composed of representatives specially appointed by the several churches, Temperance and kindred societies labouring in the town, and at such missions many of the most eminent advocates of the good cause have take part, the result being that the temperance question, amid a community that was considered hopelessly apathetic, has made considerable progress and the moral atmosphere of the town has been greatly improved, as was evidenced at the recent municipal elections.

THE BASIS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The visit of Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones had been anticipated with eager interest. In the large Gwyn Hall the opening meetings on the Lord's Day, the 8th inst., were a decided success. The afternoon meeting was arranged for children; the evening for the general public. Both were crowded. Dr. Henry laid down the basis of his mission, and with abounding earnestness made it clear that the movement was founded on Scriptural teaching and the character of God. Reform would come only from the aroused conscience of the Church of Christ. A large number of pledges were taken during the first day of the crusade.

AN EFFECTIVE FINISH.

The subsequent meetings, despite most unfavourable weather, were each of them equally successful and crowded. Interest in the crusade deepened night by night, and the presence of Divine power was felt at each meeting, not excepting the women's meeting on Thursday afternoon. The same evening Dr. Henry lectured on the life-story of the late President McKinley. On Friday he compressed into the space of one short hour the most weighty and unanswerable arguments for total abstinence. Instance after instance, proof after proof, argument followed argument. At the close of his powerful and well-reasoned appeal, a gentleman, both a church-member and a successful tradesman, made his way to the front, and with quivering words declared that in that meeting he had been re-converted. He had to tell the meeting of his feelings, and he offered the committee the sum of £5 to carry on the work. Dr. Henry was quick to take advantage of the offer, and in response to his appeal five additional promises of £5 each were made; and several of various other sums, until the sum of £54 was realized.

THE POWER OF GOSPEL SONG.

The exquisite singing of Mr. Armon Jones was an invaluable feature in the crusade. The people could not get enough of his effective renderings. Mr. Jones is giving back to God his own, returning in consecrated service the rich and powerful voice entrusted to him.

God has abundantly blessed the labours of His servants. May He continue to shine upon them wherever they go. R. A. W.

[Dr. Henry himself informs us that "for moral and spiritual power the closing meeting was the most remarkable he had ever attended."—Ed.]

Rev. F. B. Meyer at Southport.

THE mission for six days, conducted under the auspices of the Free Church Council, has proved to be a most blessed work. The meetings, which began with encouraging attendances, rapidly grew until the place, which was the large Chapel Street Congregational Church (Rev. Adam Scott), became too small, and hundreds had to be turned away.

The programme was a varied and full one, and the wonder of not a few is that Mr. Meyer could do so much. Yet was he as fresh and forceful at his last service as at his first. The social function was quite a feature of the mission. This was begun by the Mayor and Mayoress (Mr. and Mrs. Scarisbrick) giving a tea and reception to members of the Council, and on the next three afternoons quite a number of friends acted as hosts and hostesses; to Sunday-school workers one day, next to officials of Christian Endeavour Societies and Guilds, and then to Temperance committees. Altogether about 1,200 were thus entertained to tea in the schools of the church, which are admirably adapted for such social gatherings; and the tea over, Mr. Meyer questioned the various secretaries about their work, beginning with Rev. Adam Scott, secretary of the Council, as to what it was doing, and then with the others; after this questioning, which was a very pleasant interlude, he addressed wise counsels to the workers and friends.

There was also a breakfast for the ministers, and quite a two hours' Conference following it, at which Mr. Meyer spoke to them as to how their work could best be done. The afternoon addresses from 3.30 till 4.45, which were given for four days running, on the Spiritual Life, were deeply interesting and most helpful to many. Many will follow Mr. Meyer with their prayers in his mission this week at Bacup, and next at Halifax, which closes his Lancashire series of missions.

Welsh Notes.

THE annual meetings of the North Wales Free Church Federation are to be held at Colwyn Bay on April 28 and 29. Among the principal speakers will be Revs. G. Ellis, M.A. (Liverpool), T. Shankland (Rhyl), and J. M. Gibbon (London). Mr. J. Herbert Roberts, M.P., is expected to preside over one of the public meetings.

The Calvinistic Methodists of Cardigan are to be commended for the recent manifestation of their practical zeal in the cause of temperance. Adjoining their chapel is a public-house called the Emlyn Arms. It has now become the possession of the Calvinistic Methodists, who have purchased it at a cost of £300 in order to do away with the licence.

The Welsh Forward Movement gives evidence of increasing vitality. Last week a new hall was opened at Barry Island. This makes the third building opened there by the Church since its commencement in 1899. The first erection was a wooden structure, which was soon set aside in favour of an iron building that in its turn has been superseded by the present hall, which has cost over £1,000.

At the recent meetings of the Avon Presbytery at Llanberis the chairman, Mr. H. Lewis, J.P., delivered his retiring address. Three points were insisted upon —(1) the importance of having the Bible read in day schools; (2) the inculcation of temperance principles; (3) the need of adopting means to increase the efficiency of Sunday-schools. An inquiry was ordered, to ascertain whether preachers and church officers are faithful in attendance at the week night services.

Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Needham.—The many friends of the late Rev. G. C. Needham and his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Annable Needham, will be glad to know that a limited number of copies of the books from their pens are at present available for English readers at the American published prices. They include: Shadow and Substance: An Exposition of the Tabernacle Types. (3s.) Poetic Paraphrases: verses on revealed truth and spiritual aspirations. (3s.) Angels and Demons: a statement of Scripture teaching, with important deductions. (2s.) Looking Forward: (1) Will Jesus Come? (2) After the Advent; (3) The New Earth. (1s. 6d.) The Anti-Christ: a study of prophetic Scripture. (1s. 3d.) Events and Experiences in the Life of G. C. Needham, with illustrations. (10d.) After the Advent: (1) The Millennial Jerusalem; (2) The New Jerusalem. (5d.) The Dead in Christ: a precious booklet. (5d.) (Morgan & Scott.)

About Books.

Darton's Leading Strings could not be brighter. The type is large and the pictures numerous. (1s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.)

One of the most popular of recent autobiographies is Gipsy Smith: His Life and Work. It has already reached its thirteenth thousand, and we heartily welcome the new edition, at a price which brings the work within the reach of a much wider circle of the Gipsy's admirers. (2s. 6d. Thomas Law.)

The Catholic. Last year's parts of Rev. Thomas Connellan's monthly make a very informing budget of facts and principles regarding the controversy with Rome. While welcoming the serial issues, we find the volume full of interest for purposes of reference and instruction. (1s. 10d. post free. Offices: 51B, Dawson Street, Dublin.)

Many readers will welcome the annual volume of Miss Mason's bright and stimulating magazine, Rest and Reaping. As a treasury of evangelical thought and spiritual teaching, this carefully edited periodical has long been held in high esteem, and the 1902 volume is no whit behind its predecessors in strength and variety. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

The Salvation Testament is an ingenious adaptation of the principle of Scripture marking, so that sixteen series of great texts, dealing with different aspects of the plan of salvation, are connected like the links of a chain, and may be turned to at a moment's notice. It cannot fail to be useful to Christian workers, in inquiry rooms and otherwise. (1s. 6d. R. L. Allan and Son, Glasgow; Alfred Holness.)

Hazell's Annual for 1903 (3s. 6d. net. Hazell, Watson & Viney) is published about a month later than usual, the delay having been determined upon in order to include a complete record of the events of 1902, including the Education Act, the Metropolis Water Act, and other matters belonging to the year. The reputation of being thoroughly up to date is once more abundantly vindicated. As a guide-book to public affairs in limited compass, the volume is invaluable.

Talks on Favourite Texts, and Other Addresses to Children. Whether by parents, Sunday-school teachers, or ministers, a perusal of these sermons will prove profitable and refreshing. They are all by Scotch preachers, and will not be found to be above the capacity of the young hearers for whom they are intended. The addresses are marked by simplicity, and are full of striking points, while vital Gospel truths are warmly and affectionately pressed home. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

Messrs. Cassell are issuing in its best form, revised to date, their well-known work The Popular Educator. During two generations this encyclopædia of elementary and advanced education has performed its important ministry, and every reissue has shown improvement when compared with its predecessor. A series of examinations on commercial subjects are being organised in connection with the reissue of the "Educator." The entire work is to be completed in thirty-two weekly parts (6d. each).

Dr. Alexander Whyte has completed his series of Bible Characters in a sixth volume of great value—Our Lord's Characters. (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) Here we have the Parables worked over again; and after that come pages on the Angels of the Churches in the Apocalypse, which place Christian ministry in a very solemn light. The chapters are at once expository and illustrative; and the versatility of the author is apparent throughout. Better still, there is consistent loyalty to Christ as Teacher and Lord.

Palestine for the Jew; or, The Awaking of the Jewish Nation. (Liverpool: C. Tinling & Co., 53, Victoria Street.) Rev. Samuel Schor, a native of Jerusalem, labouring in Liverpool for the London Jews Society, in a pamphlet bearing this title, gives what he regards as the only true and lasting solution of the Jewish question, not only in Russia and Roumania, but also in England, in view of the Alien-Immigration Commission. The pages deal with prophecy and polity, with past history and the present outlook. A sketch-map shows the Promised Land as reaching far beyond the limits of historic Palestine, and presents Israel's title-deeds in the words of Gen. xv. 18: "Unto thy seed will I give this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates."

The facts are presented from the point of view of the Gospel pure and simple, and with marked force and simplicity, in a new series of Protestant booklets—Timely Topics (6d. Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling).

Messrs. Raphael Tuck & Sons have issued a number of new Picture Post Cards. Among others may be mentioned the "Rembrandesque," "United Kingdom," "Country," and "Art" series. One of the most interesting at the moment is a series entitled, "Au Pays d'Armor," issued for the benefit of the famishing fisherfolk of Brittany.

OUR AGED AND DYING POOR.

Some four years since, with the assistance of a few kind friends of Christ's "little flock," a Cottage Home was opened on the South Coast where Aged Christian Widows, Believers of Good Report, who, having NO FRIENDS or resources IN THEIR DECLINING DAYS other than the workhouse, may be cared for till "CALLED HOME."

Three of those thus provided for have already gone to be with Christ, giving joyful testimony and unceasing praise to their Heavenly Father for the comfort of ENDING THEIR DAYS in a Christian Home, among loving friends, rather than in the CHEERLESS WARD of a London Workhouse.

Who, for the Master's sake, who said "Inasmuch," &c., will help us to maintain this "SHELTER IN A TIME OF STORM," for these helpless members of His body, the Church, and enable us to REFILL THE VACANT BEDS?

CONTRIBUTIONS will be gratefully received by Mrs. F. A. BEVAN, 27, Queen's Gate Gardens, South Kensington, S.W.: or, ALBERT A. HEAD, Esq. (one of the Trustees), Corrie Lodge, Wimbledon; or the Director, Mr. WM. CHORLEY, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N.; or may be sent to the Office of The Christian.

Bankers: Barclay and Co., 54, Lombard Street, E.C., to whom Donations may be paid direct if preferred.

☛ Were Funds available the Committee have the option of Purchasing a Freehold "Cottage" rather larger and more convenient than the present, which is only rented on a short agreement.

Personalia.

Dr. BAEDEKER is resuming his labours on the Continent; he left London on Wednesday last for Flushing en route to Russia. Our friend will value the prayers of readers on his behalf.

Dr. THOMAS PAYNE, we much regret to say, has had a relapse. The leg has had to be reset, causing the sufferer much agony. He asks for the prayers of readers that he may be sustained under the affliction.

Rev. J. C. and Mrs. LAWSON, of Aligarh, in order to devote themselves more fully to the development of industrial mission work, have decided to sever their connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Henceforth, Mussoorie is to be their hill station, and they hope by the help of friends in Great Britain, America, and India to secure suitable premises on the plains at once for the large number of orphan boys already under their care. Mr. Lawson writes: "Our undertaking will be known as 'The Industrial and Evangelical Mission,' the industrial element being a means to an end, namely, the evangelization of India's people. We shall become a corporate body with trustees to hold all property."

AMONG THE MANY CASES RECENTLY PUBLISHED, the following will especially appeal to our readers.

A young woman, aged 30, was accidently shot in the eyes when two years old by a sister, and since then has suffered great pain, owing to some of the shots being left at the back of the eyes. Her mother is dead and her father, an old man of 80, is very infirm, and has two other children to support. Contributions to this peculiarly sad case will be gratefully received by Rev. J. Pullein-Thompson, Hon. Sec., The National Blind Relief Society, 27, Tite Street, S.W.; or at the Office of "The Christian."

At Home

Monday Afternoons, 3-5, Feb. & March.

Tea and Coffee.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

In his Magazine, under the head of Personal Notes, Dr. Barnardo writes:—

"TWENTY years ago, when the claims upon my time and powers were much smaller than now, I adopted the plan of reserving two hours weekly on the afternoon of a certain day when Visitors from all parts could see me at the central Home without any previous appointment. I well remember how splendidly the plan then worked, and how often my rooms were thronged on those occasions by Visitors from far and near.

"I now propose to resume this arrangement, for a while at least, and I have pleasure in announcing that the Monday Afternoons of February and March, beginning 16th February, will be set apart for the purpose of welcoming EVERYBODY to Stepney Causeway between the hours of three and five o'clock. No cards of invitation are necessary. All may come: Subscribers, Friends, Critics, Visitors from distant lands, Heads of other Institutions or Societies, Heads of our own Branch Homes, all my Helpers and Fellow-Workers from Everywhere—in short, Everybody, including Opposers, if such there be!

"During these two hours (three to five), the doors will be thrown widely open, and Visitors may come and go when and as they like. Afternoon Tea will be provided and no one will be asked to give. There will be no collection, but there will be a hearty welcome extended to all, and some items of special interest to please all."

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Bishop Thornton, speaking at Liverpool, has strongly condemned the Church patronage system, which results in the congestion of clergy in country places, where they are not wanted, while in populous city parishes clergy are sparse. The system of patronage is, he said, preposterous, and the worst of it all is the traffic in livings—the buying and selling of the cure of souls. The Bishop declared that he will "never rest until he has seen that blot erased from the splendid escutcheon of the Church of England."

Last Lord's Day, the first anniversary of St. Luke's, Deptford, Weekly Men's Service was held. Over 800 men assembled in the church, and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed. The vicar (Rev. Arthur Hart) delivered the address, and emphasized the fact that the success of this men's service is simply due to the plain, earnest preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and that men have been brought to the Saviour solely through this means. The Mayor of Deptford read the lesson, and many local influential men were present.

Congregational.

The debt of £63,000 on the London Missionary Society has been reduced to £7,650 inclusive. An anonymous gift of £1,000 was received last week.

The church at Gospel Oak, N.W. (Rev. Henry Le Pla) reports a prosperous year. The Sunday-school has increased in numbers, and meetings for men have been started with encouraging results. About £950 has been raised for all purposes, including £240 for thorough renovation of the church and schools, and £47 for the L.M.S.

Baptist.

Pastor Tait has recovered his health sufficiently to resume Gospel labour. An "Ebenezer" meeting place will be built when sufficient funds are in hand to warrant a commencement.

In connection with the Pioneer Mission, a new church is to be erected in Queen Street, Godalming. The building will seat 250, and cost £962. At the cutting of the first sod £31 was collected.

At the East London Tabernacle, Burdett Road, E., the annual thankofferings will be received on Monday, February 23. Pastor Edwin H. Ellis will be in the vestry all day from seven a.m. to receive free-will offerings.

Methodist.

"Harrogate Wesleyans," says the Methodist Recorder, "have been taking an active part in a fight against attempts to obtain a drink licence for a hotel at Oatlands Mount, a village just outside the town, where there are a Wesleyan Chapel and Sunday School." One of the two applicants lately made his seventh attempt, and, being resolved at all costs to win, brought down from London a distinguished K.C. The licence, however, was refused.

At the Albert Hall Wesleyan Mission, Sheffield, despite great attractions elsewhere, huge congregations are maintained, and God is abundantly blessing the work. On Lord's Day week the great hall was well filled in the evening, and a most impressive service was conducted by Rev. Albert F. Hall. At the close about twenty people gave themselves to God, and one young man found peace with God in a tramcar on his way home.

The presence of Rev. John McNeill at the anniversary meetings of the Loudoun Square Mission, Cardiff, attracted large audiences. The Scottish evangelist preached in the afternoon at Roath Road Chapel on "The Pharisee and the Publican," and at the evening meeting in the Park Hall, dwelt on "Family Religion." The missioner, Rev. R. F. Broomfield, reported that a shelter for girls was shortly to be established in connection with the Mission, which has experienced a year of steady progress.

A Foreign Missionary Convention for Wesleyans in the Liverpool District has been held, the chief speakers being Professor Banks, Dr. Jenkins, and Rev. W. H. Findlay. Dr. Jenkins closed an impressive speech by emphasizing the truth that fellowship with Christ is the true source of missionary enterprise. Mr. Findlay asked the Convention to consider the place of prayer in the work of saving the world. It is no imagination, no pleasant delusion of the spirit, that prayer offered here might effect results thousands of miles away. It is a fact proved every day. Every missionary knows what it is to be compelled to say, "They have been praying for me at home." The old story is true still. The holding up or hanging down of the hands of the man of God upon the mountain decides the issue of the battle in the plains below.

Presbyterian.

At the annual meeting of the Leytonstone congregation the attendance was larger and the spirit heartier than on any previous occasion. The reports of the session and managers indicated some progress in all directions. The congregation unanimously agreed to the erection of an iron hall, and there is good ground for hoping that it will be opened a few weeks hence clear of debt.

The annual social and business meeting of the congregation of Clapton Church was held on the evening of the 12th inst., Rev. Andrew Fallon, the recently-inducted pastor presiding. The reports submitted on behalf of the various organizations showed that the work of the congregation is being pursued vigorously. A protracted vacancy has left its mark, but already there are many encouraging signs of progress. Not the least hopeful feature of the congregation is the unanimity and enthusiasm prevailing among the membership.

Rev. Dr. Meharry presided at the annual meeting of the Crouch Hill congregation. Mr. David White reported that the congregation was now absolutely free of debt, and suggested that the members should consider more seriously the claims of the Sustentation Fund, the Foreign Mission Fund, and the Andover Road Mission. In point of membership, Crouch Hill heads the list of English Presbyterian Churches. It is now nearly fifteen years since Dr. Meharry came to Crouch Hill, and the office-bearers congratulate themselves that at the end of another year's work they can once again report an undiminished membership, and that the tie which binds pastor and people in sacred fellowship is still so strong.

Society of Friends.

William Hobson has held a series of meetings in the Treville Street meeting-house, Plymouth. During the visit he was present at the usual meetings for worship on each first-day, and addressed the adult school, the junior school, and the mothers' meetings, besides holding a special meeting on each week-day evening. At one of these meetings he delivered his lecture on "Quakerism, its Roots and its Fruits," which was listened to with much interest by an appreciative audience.

Salvation Army.

A cablegram from Philadelphia received at the Salvation Army Headquarters states that "General Booth's reception at Washington has been remarkable in the religious and philanthropic history of America. The General and Commander Booth-Tucker lunched at the White House with President Roosevelt and three Cabinet Ministers. The President expressed warm approval of the work of the Army, commending especially its colonization, rescue, and prison work. The following morning, accompanied by Senator Hanna, the General proceeded to the Capitol, having been invited to open the Senate with prayer. At the invitation of Senator Hanna, the General subsequently met twenty-two of the leading statesmen of America. For over an hour the General held his distinguished listeners in rapt attention, and at the conclusion of his address one after another rose to assure him of their deep and earnest interest."

The annual gathering of the congregation at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road, S.W. (Pastor D. M. Cameron), was held on the 3rd inst., and was deeply interesting. The reports that were read showed advances in all branches of the work. A correspondent writes:—"What most impressed me was the spirit of prayer and unity pervading the meeting, and the earnest hope that was expressed of coming revival."

From its inauguration, some eight months ago, the Burlington Street Mission, Birmingham, has given promise of meeting a much-felt need in the district. By means of outdoor work, evangelistic meetings, sick fund, and similar agencies, enthusiastic efforts are being made to secure the confidence of the people. The workers realize that great and numerous opportunities of usefulness are before them, and arrangements are being made for a vigorous open-air campaign during the summer of 1903.

Mr. John Elliott, of Torquay, although still suffering with his throat, now preaches on Lord's Days, and for week evenings, being prohibited from speaking, utilizes a gramaphone. Finding it difficult to get suitable "records" for Gospel work, Mr. Elliott succeeded in making a large number of his own, singing, reading the Scriptures, preaching the Gospel, and relating cases of conversion that he has witnessed during his twenty-four years of evangelistic work. He recently gave this service at the Gospel Hall, St. Marychurch, Devon, to an attentive congregation.

The annual report of the City Mission Hall, Weston Street, Bermondsey, where Mr. W. Narroway has laboured for some years with much encouragement, tells of several instances of blessing in the course of the work. Mr. Narroway writes: "Some months since I met a young girl seventeen years of age, who, with evident joy, told me how she had been led to Christ in our mission hall, and is now a member of Barry Road Chapel, and in a good situation at Dulwich. Again, a man working at a brewery, who, while suffering from deliriums, attempted to murder his wife, was induced to attend our services. He became impressed with the truth, and is now living a new life, having a new home and new furniture, and is a frequent attendant with his wife and friends at the Central Hall."

Fallen Asleep.

At Cannes, on February 4, Miss MARGARET WELLINGTON, of Evian-les-Bains, after a long and painful illness.—Rev. H. BURNSIDE, at Chesham, aged fifty-eight. In 1869 he was sent by the C.M.S. to Ningpo, and was transferred in 1870 to Nagasaki. Here he spent five years, coming home in 1875. In 1880 he began his work at St. Saviour's, Forest Gate, first as curate of the district and then as vicar of the parish. Here he worked with devotion for many years, but latterly his health gave way.—Mr. JOSEPH RADLEY, of Pardshaw, Cumberland, for twenty-five years superintendent of the Friends' Ulster Provincial School, Lisburn. He was an acknowledged minister among Friends, and beloved and esteemed by a wide circle outside as well as within the Society.—Aged seventy-one, Mr. W. S. WILKINSON, Elder of the Presbyterian Church at Morpeth.—The American Marathi Mission has suffered a severe loss by the death at Ahmednagar, on January 14, of Dr. GEORGE WINTHROP HARDING, aged twenty-seven. His love for missionary work, his fitness as a physician, his surgical success, his genial nature, and his calm and just judgment, together with other accomplishments of unusual attraction, had given promise of an exceptionally useful career.

For cottage meetings to be held by members of the Duckpool Road Baptist Chapel, Newport, Mon., also for services to be conducted by Rev. A. T. Jones.

For Mr. Swanston Smith, who remains seriously ill, that he may be delivered from the, at times, acute pain, which has necessitated another consultation of the surgeons.

Praise.

For blessing at Caerleon Baptist Chapel in the ingathering of many souls.

For much blessing on the fifteen days' mission at Holy Trinity Church, Oswaldtwistle, Lancashire, conducted by Mr. T. Goudir, of the Evangelization Society.

"These Thirty Years."—Friends far and near will welcome with more than usual interest the January-February number of Regions Beyond, which appears under the title of "These Thirty Years." While not pretending to be the full story of the work which now has Harley House for its centre, it is an absorbing review of the far-reaching endeavours of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union since its inception. In many lands the name of Grattan Guinness is held in high esteem, associated as it is with undertakings which have become conspicuous in the annals of foreign missions. The years have indeed been freighted with Divine mercies innumerable, and a perusal of this record will do much toward quickening the faith of Christian workers in a prayer answering God.

Notes & Comments

 Messrs. Morgan & Scott receive, acknowledge in The Christian, and transmit, donations sent to them in aid of any accredited Societies and Missions. To avoid misapprehension, it is added that no charge of any kind is ever made on such donations.

A New Christian Spirit. We cordially agree with Rev. J. D. Jones, of Bournemouth, in his analysis of the basal facts revealed in the Church census, that alterations of method will not accomplish much in the way of revival; what is wanted is a new spirit:—

> We urgently need an altogether new conception of the office and function of the Church. What does the Church of Christ exist for? Not merely to pay its way, nor to provide a comfortable building wherein those may worship who attend its services. The Church exists for the salvation of society. The Church is primarily and supremely a great evangelistic agency.

Revivals always begin with the Church—it is the Divine Law. "Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion . . . so the heathen shall fear the name of the Lord." Revival is the quickening of languishing life. When life is vigorous, it always makes an impression. It is limpness that men pass by unheeded. Those outside the Church will be compelled to hear when the Church is animated with a new spirit—the spirit of persistent, earnest solicitation for the salvation of men. At present that spirit appears to possess the few only.

Picking and Choosing. Dr. Torrey has been discussing in the Christian Commonwealth some "Hard Problems of Scripture"—frankly dealing with the difficulties alleged by sceptics and others. One remark he makes touches the secret of a great deal of scepticism:—

> There is no more pitiable object intellectually than the man who accepts the authority of the Bible on doctrines he wishes to believe, and rejects it upon doctrines he does not wish to believe.

To many people the secret of all their trouble lies here. It is a too common state of mind to make one's own wishes the measure of what is true or false. But if this can be justified, where does revelation come in? The authority of God surpasses the reason of man.

Conceding too Much. There must be, in the necessity of the case, a limit to the concessions made by apologists to their antagonists. Sometimes it is wise to concede an expression or a minor point if there is nothing vital about it, and if it constitutes an obstacle in the way of accepting truth. But when vital truth is reached, its trustee can allow no tampering with it. It is often urged, that—

> The Christian faith does not stand or fall with the trustworthiness of the Gospels. If it could be proved that the Gospels were the work of the second century, and of little value as historical documents, the Church would lose one line of defence, but others would remain.

This line of argument has been more freely adopted since the appearance of Dr. Dale's "Living Christ and the Four Gospels," and it has its value from a psychological point of view. None the less it is perilous, for it surrenders to the foe the solidity of historic testimony in favour of personal experience; and the latter would soon disappear if the former were discredited, for what is the value of experience not based upon fact? It is not for us to concede, but for the critic to prove his position, and this he has not done, and never will do.

Imagination and the Bible. Dr. Waddy Moss, the Wesleyan professor, in writing recently upon the theological outlook, admirably hit off the situation in the sphere of Biblical Criticism as expounded by certain destructive critics:—

> In the handling of their materials, and in their reconstruction of history, no mental faculty plays so large a part as that of the imagination. They are artists rather than critics, and out of a hint they will evolve a picture, with a confident assertion that every part is a true, and the only possible, reproduction of nature. . . . To call this scientific criticism is to misuse both words; it is simple fiction, of the most undiluted quality, and often even farther remote from actual fact than romances in which boys delight.

If we will take the trouble to ask, when we read such astonishing criticisms—"How much of this is proved and how much imagined?"—we shall soon see how the balance turns. Long ago the prophet Jeremiah charged some of his contemporaries with dreaming dreams and passing these off as the Word of the Lord. A dream accomplishes nothing, but God's Word is a hammer and a fire—it carries with it Divine force.

The Miracles. Professor Wright, of Oberlin, dealing with the subject of what have aptly been termed "mediate miracles," places great value upon a definition given by Dr. Robinson in his "Biblical Researches in Palestine and the Adjacent Regions." Dr. Robinson says (and the passage is worth remembering):—

> Miracle is represented as mediate; not a direct suspension of, or interference with, the laws of nature, but a miraculous adaptation of those laws to produce a required result. It is wrought by natural means supernaturally applied.

As Dr. Wright adds, proper attention to the distinction will serve to free the Bible narratives from many difficulties popularly attributed to them, and at the same time to enhance the impressiveness of those miracles in the Bible which conform to a stricter definition of the word. There are miracles, however, in the domain of grace, which are less apparent, but no less real than the others; and as Rev. Norman Startup has said, the greatest miracle to-day is not that of the alleged transubstantiation for the present of the elements of bread and wine, but the continuous one of the change in the soul of the believer, effected by the power of the Holy Spirit.

The Christian Miracle. The Christian miracle par excellence is our Lord Jesus Christ. Nothing that He did, in the way of wonderful works, can be compared for prime importance to the miracle of His Person. It is not surprising, therefore, that the rationalistic attack is being shifted from the wonders recorded in the Gospels to the Central Figure Himself. The most subtle attack of all is that which professes to retain in some way the "Divinity" of our Lord, while carefully eliminating the supernatural at the commencement and the termination of His human life. Professor Barclay Swete deals with this attack in the current number of the Expository Times, and says:—

> The miracle of the Conception is felt to be embarrassing by those who have lost faith in the Incarnation. But where the mystery of the Incarnation is heartily accepted, the miracle of the Conception is seen to be a fitting corollary to it. . . . Thus belief in the Incarnation and belief in the miraculous Conception will be found in the great majority of cases to stand or fall together.

This verdict will be approved by logical minds. There is abundant evidence that when men begin to qualify the miraculous in the Person of Christ, He soon fades out of their lives as Redeemer and Lord.

The Witness of Prophecy. Dr. Pierson deserves the heartiest thanks of all Christians for the splendid line he is taking at his weekly lectures in Exeter Hall. Dealing with "The Oracles of God," he has devoted several nights to the subject of Prophecy, that being the key of the arch, and the preparation for a reasonable faith. Quite too little attention has been given to the witness of Prophecy as affording the most striking proof that the Bible is the Word of God. We are afraid that many have been scared from the subject by the lofty saying of the critics that "prophecy is *forth*telling, not *fore*telling." The refutation of this inadequate representation of the fact is open to all who will carefully study the Scriptures. The argument from Prophecy is simply unanswerable. If men would read their Bibles more closely, they would find themselves fortified against the attacks of unbelief. If Dr. Pierson did nothing else during his extended visit, than call attention once more to this neglected study, he would accomplish a grand work.

Ethics and Christ. That old question of Evangelical versus Ethical preaching, was discussed the other day at an important meeting of ministers, the writer of the paper laying the chief stress upon the need of ethical preaching to-day. That there is great need for the insistence upon righteousness no one can deny, for conduct is the thing that tells in practical life. Yet there ought to be no "versus" in the question. The preaching of Christ leads to righteousness; and the preacher who, like John the Baptist, enforces ethics, should, like him, cry, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." Evangelicalism and ethics are the two sides of the shield—there must not be the one without the other. The true apostle of Jesus Christ can easily find a way from every subject to His Master, and, begin where he may—at housing, or temperance, or gambling—he will not rest until he has brought his hearers to Christ. Mere ethical preaching skims over the wound, and leaves the sore within unhealed.

Sunday on the Railways. The question of Sunday labour on the lines of railway is essentially one for solution by the shareholder. It resolves itself into that of the dividend, a lesser one with the workers at rest on the Lord's Day, or a larger one secured at the cost of those overworked officials whose divinely ordered Sunday is taken from them. The recent presentation by Prebendary Webb-Peploe of a memorial to the directors of the Great Northern Railway Company praying for a decrease of Sunday goods traffic, and of the system of Sunday excursions and special trains is, therefore, a very healthy sign, for the document was signed by no fewer than 870 shareholders, who, very properly, see in the profits derived from the facilities for Sabbath Day travelling afforded to the Sunday League and to theatrical companies, an undesirable source of income. It was stated that, in six months of 1901, upwards of 3,700 theatrical companies travelled on Sundays, a fact which speaks for itself. In these matters, the Continental countries set us a noble example, Belgium, for instance, having discontinued 2,227 out of 2,514 Sunday goods trains. Surely England should not be behindhand in respecting the Fourth Commandment.

The Publican's Friend. It has so often been urged by "the Trade" that the drunkard is not the drink-shop keeper's best customer, that it is quite startling to find a case reported in the papers in which the New Act is given as the cause of a publican's bankruptcy. This person stated before the judge, that since the new law came into force he had done practically no business, his "takings" on the previous Sunday having been 2s. 1d. only. What a light this throws upon the alleged "public needs," and the "Sunday facilities" of which we hear so much!

Drug or Drink. The action of the London Temperance Council in vigorously opposing applications for and confirmations of licences to chemists to sell "medicated wines," is one which should be generally followed by other associations throughout the country; otherwise, the New Act will leave a door wide open to those who are addicted to drink. It was stated in one case that the licence was applied for "in order to supply wines that did not contain a sufficiency of drugs to comply with the formulæ of the Pharmaceutical Society," and apparently the magistrates shared this view, for all the applications were refused. It is through such channels that many tipplers, and females especially, obtain their intoxicants under the guise of medicine; and public interest demands that the habitual drunkard, and those who are in imminent danger of falling into the slough, should have this innocent-looking source also cut off.

A New Boundary Line. The French officials have given us another very admirable object-lesson in Temperance work. In one of the busy provincial centres recently, the municipal authorities have prohibited the opening under any circumstances of any place for the sale of alcoholic drinks within a distance of at least 220 yards from a place of worship, hospital, or school, and the police have been directed to see the order strictly enforced. Unhappily, we are far from such desirable local legislation in these islands, and those who desire to join in Divine worship must needs be offended by the unholy sights and sounds of the public-house, which, State-sanctioned, is empowered to obtrude its glaring temptations and abominations within sight of the House of God. When will our Christian bodies awake to the crying need for a great Sunday-Closing agitation?

The Housing Question. At last a first movement has been made by Parliament towards dealing with the burning question of housing the poor. A Bill has been promised for this session. From the general tone of Mr. Long's speech, we do not expect very much in the way of reform at present, but to obtain anything at all is an advance to be grateful for. Although no mention of the subject was made in the King's Speech, Parliament has soon perceived the wisdom of doing something, and that at once. This matter, thoroughly dealt with, will open up new work for the Church. Every worker in the slums at present feels the terrible hindrance to the progress of the Gospel which insanitary housing offers. To send converts back to places worse than stables, is to force them into temptation. Under new conditions the work of evangelization will be rendered much easier and more effective. The downward pull will be broken, and the excuse of bad surroundings removed.

Living Water. Rev. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, in a somewhat autobiographical paper upon "The Water of Life," has pointed out that, in the words given in John iv. 13, 14, Jesus said "drinketh;" not "whosoever has drunk," and he remarks:—

> In this, as in many other passages, it is important to mark the force of continuous habit expressed by the present tense of the Greek verbs. There is full and deep satisfaction at the first draught of the Living Water, which, however, is a perennial supply for constant use. This the Lord brings out more fully when He says, "But the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into eternal life." These words explain why the partaking of the Living Water is not followed by renewed thirst. The Living Water becomes a well, not only leaving no room for thirst, but overflowing for the supply of the need of others unceasingly.

The Christian Use of Social Life. Now that the air is all alive with questions concerning ways and means of attracting men and women to places of worship, it is well to call attention to the fact that very much of our Lord's work in soul-winning was done through the medium of social life. It was at a supper table that He told the story of the great supper; at a midday meal that He spake the parable of the forgiven debtors, and also forgave the woman who was a sinner. At meals and in private houses He met many publicans and sinners, and saved them. All this is in the highest degree suggestive, and leads us to ask whether we make the highest use of social life? If great wisdom is employed, our social gatherings may be occasions for bringing men to Christ. It is work that needs great delicacy, but it can be done without violating the laws of hospitality. Every Christian man and woman has a circle of unconverted friends, who are at present not amenable to public religious influences, but who might, in private life, and under the shelter of social functions, be brought to face the supreme questions. At least, we should leave no stone unturned in order to accomplish such a desirable end.

Both Small and Great. It is not unusual, especially in moments of despondency, to fancy that we should be able to do great things for God if we had greater gifts and more numerous qualifications. The giants in the Old Testament generally were fighting against God's people, and the one "of great stature, whose fingers and toes were four and twenty" (1 Chron. xx. 6), doubtless found the additional endowment an encumbrance in his fatal contest with David's brother Jonathan. The best work of the world is done by the ordinary people. It is for the Christian to do, contentedly and happily, the duty which lies nearest to him, and God undoubtedly will see to the blessing and the increase.

*Christian Stewardship.

(Lev. xxv. 23.)

By Rev, Principal Rainy, D.D.

THE prohibition ("the land shall not be sold for ever, for the land is Mine") implied that the Israelite was not to claim absolute ownership, nor was he to act as if he claimed it. If the land were his in absolute ownership he could give it away absolutely to whom he would. But that was not to be so. He had a use of it, under restrictions, but the land continued to be the Lord's; the Lord had the abiding possession; the Israelite only a transient use as a stranger and a sojourner with God.

Just so now, with the things of sense and time. The portion of these which comes to you, if you are a child of God, is ordered down to the smallest element by a Father's care. It is given to you for your sustenance—also for your discipline. It is provided for you by covenant. It is given to you generously, by One who giveth liberally, and it is to be taken in the same spirit. It is no pleasure to your Father that you should hold it and use it in a narrow, timid, slave-like spirit. Take it and use it with thankfulness and gladness. Nevertheless, you must lay this to heart, that it is not yours. You have a use for it, but it is not yours. It is not your portion; it is not your inheritance; therefore, also, it is to pass from you. In all your use of it, and disposing of it, lay that to heart: "The land is Mine, ye are strangers and sojourners with Me."

For, my brethren, there is something else that is yours, your own: so your own, that the more you claim it, the more you refuse to part with it, the more you incorporate it with your personal being as an everlasting possession, the more is God glorified, and the more you yourselves are made true and good. Much of what this includes the future must disclose. But here and now faith embraces it; and an earnest of it, a foretaste, a glad beginning of it is sealed upon our souls. That great salvation with its eternal inheritance is yours—your own. But for the rest, "the land is Mine; ye are strangers and sojourners with Me."

What is, and what is not ours.

I would not be misunderstood. Believers are, here and now, children of God; and because they are His children their Father will provide for them. He will provide not only the better country, but also the things of this life, giving you daily bread, and everything of this kind which is good for you, and filling all with His fatherly goodwill. So He "giveth us all things richly to enjoy." And yet these things are not yours—though you have a use of them; not yours as Christ is yours, as God is yours, as heaven is yours. As to your own inheritance, the more your heart awakes to it, the more you set your heart upon it, the more you strive to appropriate it, so much the better. But as to these things of time, take them cheerfully, use them thankfully, yet hold them with a loose hand. . . .

And you are sojourners so that you are also stewards. These are your Lord's goods. Administer them for Him. Now a good Lord does not grudge His steward an honourable maintenance in His house; but He expects stewardship—honest and faithful stewardship. For your own training, for your family, for the poor, for the direct interest of the cause of God, be stewards—be stewards that shall not fear the reckoning. It may be little, very little, that is committed to you—all the more be yours a cheerful fidelity. For he that is faithful in the least is faithful also in much. "If ye have been unfaithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to you the true riches? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who will give you that which is your own?"

* From Sojourning with God. The sermons of which the volume is composed are worthy memorials of a long and useful career in the front rank of stewards of the mysteries of God. Principal Rainy has been much more than a college professor and principal; for more than a generation he has done much under God to guide a great evangelical denomination in a pathway of service richly owned of God at home and abroad. These are sheaves from the field of a ripe Christian life. Comfort and consolation are the dominant notes. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The Prophet and the Child.

II.

IN grateful relief to the sad incident considered last week stands that of the Shunammite lad referred to in 2 Kings iv. 18-37. Here Elisha appears in his more congenial and accustomed rôle of benefactor, and a true type of the bearing which all should cultivate to whose care young lives are committed for teaching or for training.

We have before us, not a little hooligan—reckless, wild, defiant of restraint—but one in whom his parents found delight; with happy heart and springing step, accompanying his father to his work; in health, rejoicing in his society; in weakness, finding solace in his mother's tender love.

What father who reads the story does not appreciate the sense of paternal insufficiency revealed in the word: "Carry him to his mother!" What mother's heart but beats with maternal sympathy as the good woman nursed him on her knees, until his little life panted out within her arms, and the spirit returned unto God who gave it! These are touches of nature that make the whole world kin.

Then follow with vivid realism the hasty search for the prophet, the ineffective use of the official staff, the fastened door, the solitude with God. Then the intimate, sympathetic contact—mouth to mouth, eyes to eyes, hands to hands—the sneeze, indicative of life renewed; the open gaze of consciousness restored.

Ah, how often have we, parents or teachers, relied upon some well-worn method of influencing our little ones, or entrusted them to some Gehazi—a nurse or servant-maid! We need to descend to the children's level, to speak in language that they can understand, to see with their eyes, to stretch out our hands to theirs, to measure our instruction by their receptive capabilities, to walk in anguish to and fro, and ponder what more we can do to lead them into life. If, as Jesus said, to "become as a little child" is essential to our own acceptance with God, how much more do we need to adapt ourselves, actually and practically, to the child-life around us, if we are to appear before Him in company with the children whom He has given us (Heb. ii. 13).

A TACTFUL VISITOR.

There are children and children. Of course, every mother deems her own the best! I know a gentleman who, when district-visiting, found himself in a strange dilemma. Each mother in the village expected him to extol her baby as the finest and the prettiest in the place. Being a truthful man, he could not conscientiously satisfy each fond parent's wish; yet he was not daring enough to oppose it. So he adopted one formula for every case. Regarding the baby with an admiring smile, he raised his hands and exclaimed with enthusiasm: "Ah, now! That is a baby!" Needless to add, he became the most popular man for miles around.

Moses is spoken of as "a proper child"—not "proper," perhaps, in the painfully old-fashioned sense that a child must not laugh or cry, nor enjoy the luxury of making mud-pies, as he may have done on the Nile bank. But he was bonny and pleasing to the eye, "a goodly child," as he is also called. This means, literally, "fair to God," or "divinely fair"—a double suggestion of physical grace and a religious spirit.

It is naturally a joy to parents to possess children who excite the admiration of others; it is an added charm if they show a disposition and desire for that which is good. They may not be perfect; we must not expect them to be angels—if they were, they might fly away too soon! To develop their characters, that they may grow "in favour with God and man"—this is our privilege; this is what the words imply—"a proper child," "fair to God."

Yet how irritable we sometimes are with even the best of them! If God so treated us, and bestowed His love upon us only when our faces were bright and our tempers sweet, we should stand a poor chance for a place in the City of Pearl. Why does the Lord "like a father pity His children?" Because "He knoweth their frame; He remembereth that they are dust"—liable to be blown hither and thither by the gusty influences around them. The rock, or even the stone, can stand against the blast; but the dust is strengthless against even a mild breeze. The very reason why a babe in arms is a special object of maternal care, is because of its utter helplessness.

Yes, but the dust is troublesome at times! It pains our eyes and soils our clothes. Yet that is the fault of the wind, not of the dust. Even Moses "wept." A crying child gets on the nerves sometimes. But why does it cry? Because the influences around (or within) are vexing it; or because it wants something; and the mother's business is to find out what that something is. And is it not equally true that childish waywardness (and often, disobedience) indicates a want of something in the soul? We know what that something is; let us seek to satisfy the need in Christ.

ROYAL ENCOURAGEMENT.

We read of Abijah, the youthful King of Israel—the godly child of a godless father, Jeroboam—that "in him was found some good thing toward the Lord God" (1 Kings xiv. 13). What was it? Faith? Hope? Love? We do not know. Did he despise the golden calves? Did he long for God in his childish way? We cannot tell. It is not for us to probe for mature definitions in the infant mind. If the seed be there, let us thank God and take courage.

How did it get there? His father was idolatrous, his mother a heathen. Was it a faithful nurse who pointed his eyes above? We are not told. Enough that the sun shone, no matter when the dawn began. And this in spite of dark surroundings.

"Some," not every, good thing! He was but a sapling, not a tree. Are we too exacting? Do we sometimes expect too much from our little ones? Do we always make allowance for their natural immaturity? (Again we are brought to the wisdom of the prophet's method—that of adaptation.) We are so prone to dig the ground to see if the roots are growing. Is it not enough to know that the seed was "in him," an integral part of his being, and therefore bound to grow; that it shaped his life "toward God," as the sunflower turns its face to the orb of day; that He "found" it?

Our Lord said of the husbandman who cast seed into the ground, that whether he slept by night or rose by day, "the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how"; but when the fruit appeared, immediately he put in the sickle to reap. This is our work: to watch for development, and rejoice in the result; to sow our seed in faith—in tears, if need be—and having sown it, and fulfilled all necessary conditions day by day to aid its growth, removing the stones, the briers, and the thorns that would choke and hinder, to leave results with Him who is more anxious for our children's souls than even we can be.

The conversion of children is a subject that at times has perplexed us all, and in many cases does so still. If a boy at school is noticeably more wild or vicious than his fellows, it often transpires that he is the son of pious parents, and it seems as if his Christian training has been thrown away. Again, many a lad who in early days has manifested tokens of deep and earnest piety has been found in later years to wander far into worldliness and sin, and to renounce his former profession of godliness.

In the first case, the boy has become familiarized with Gospel truth, but has not realized its saving power; in the second, the seed was perhaps truly sown, but thorns sprang up and choked it. Yet from either class are found numbers who have ultimately lived holy lives, devoted to God and the spread of His Kingdom. Some of the wildest have grown up earnest Christian men; and we have known many who, though they backslid for a few years after leaving school and home, are now busy in the Master's vineyard.

The Shunammite's child was born of prayer and reared in piety. His great and noble mother's heart was torn with grief as her boy died, but prayer was still her chief resource. Whether we consider the unconverted children of pious parents, or those in whom indications of spiritual life exist (be their parents Christians or no), God is equal to every case. "He is faithful that promised." "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous (parent) availeth much." Be of good cheer.

And should these lines be read by one who has the care of other people's children in the home, a glorious ministry is yours, if you are a child of God. The little ones are more with you, perhaps, than with their parents, and your influence and opportunities are great indeed. Master or mistress may imperfectly realize your worth, but "One is your Master, even Christ." To Him let your faithful service be rendered. Fulfil it to the best of your ability—"not with eye-service, as men-pleasers," not with Gehazi-like formality, but with earnestness and grace, obedient to His bidding: "Take this child, and nurse it for Me." So shall your little charges rise up some day and call you blessed.

To one and all—parent, teacher, nurse—comes the lesson of Elisha's act, to adapt ourselves to the circumstances, the requirements, the limitations of child-life, confident that He who hath promised is able also to perform.

Christ in the Home.

"They constrained Him, saying, Abide with us . . . and He went in to abide with them" (Luke xxiv. 29, R.V.).

He enters, and the wondrous Guest
Becomes the Host, as at their board
He takes, He blesses, and He gives;
And with glad hearts they know their Lord.

Such joy is theirs who daily pray,
At morning as at eventide,
With burning hearts—constraining love—
"Dear Lord, with us and ours abide!"

All other wishes hushed, before
The wish that He should honoured be,
That through the sanctities of Home
All may His love, His beauty see.

In humblest, as in holiest things,
He shows Himself afresh to such,
And every gift, and every meal
Shares in His sacramental touch.

He takes, He blesses, gives again
All that they lay at His dear feet;
And through the hours of fear or pain
He holds them in communion sweet.

O happy hearts! O hallowed home—
Rich in your wealth of love and prayer!
Love on! Pray on! The message shines
From your glad portals—"Christ is there!"

Christ in Prophecy.

LECTURE BY DR. PIERSON.

THE sixth lecture of the series being delivered at Exeter Hall, by Dr. Pierson, on the subject of "The Oracles of God," was given on Friday evening, before an audience that was even larger than on any previous occasion. The discourse was an able exposition of Old Testament prophecies concerning the Messiah, and their fulfilment to the letter in the events recorded in the Gospels.

At the outset, Dr. Pierson reminded his hearers that the Bible is a precious casket; its chief value lies in this, that it contains the Pearl of great price. The greatest question of all is, whether Jesus Christ is the Son of God and the Saviour of men. This the Bible supremely makes an absolute certainty. The Old Testament is pervaded by prophecies of Christ. Calling attention to some of these, the lecturer first turned to Gen. iii. 15. "And I [Jehovah] will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel." Immediately after the fall of man comes the first promise of a Redeemer, and is the germ of all the prophecy that follows to the Book of Malachi. In this magnificent metaphor, we see a colossal figure with heel on the head of a colossal serpent. It is crushing the life out of the serpent's head (the higher part), while the serpent plants his fangs in the heel (the lower part) of his victor. If we take this figure and draw it in outline, we shall find that all the prophecies of the Old Testament foretelling Christ are there engermed. Here is an unmistakable suggestion of the priesthood and kingship of Christ.

PROPHET, PRIEST AND KING.

Passing to Deut. xviii. 15-19, another prediction is found foretelling the arising of a great Prophet, who should come out of the tribes of Israel. He should bear a likeness to Moses, and be invested with special authority as the mouthpiece of God; to reject His utterances would be to bring the soul into eternal judgment. Here we have the suggestion of the coming Messiah as a Prophet. Coming to Psalm xxii. we are told of One whose hands and feet should be pierced, who should be mocked, endure mortal agony, attended with extreme thirst. Here is the cry from the cross —"My God! my God! why hast Thou forsaken Me?" All the seven sentences from the cross are suggested in this psalm. Moreover, it is a psalm of sobs, a series of ejaculations. It drips with tears and drops with blood.

Looking into Isaiah ix. we find a prophecy that none would associate with the Messiah were it not quoted in the New Testament. "Unto us a child is born" is the human side; "a son is given" the Divine. In chapter liii. we have the one prophecy that sets forth His vicarious sacrifice for men. It is a chapter we cannot understand until the cross has been erected, the sepulchre burst open, and the Son of God who came down to die goes up to reign. These passages bring before us the Great High Priest who "offered Himself without spot unto God," and the conqueror of death, who is for ever glorified as King—"the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand."

TIME AND PLACE.

Other prophecies touched upon by the lecturer included Dan. ix. 24, indicating the precise time when the Messiah should come, and Micah v. 2, telling the exact place. The wise men from Persia possessed the word of Daniel, but not that of Micah. They knew that the time had come for the world's Redeemer to appear, but not knowing the place they trusted to the guiding star. It almost seemed, however, that Micah's prophecy would not be fulfilled, for the virgin mother was not living at Bethlehem, but at Nazareth. But the system of taxation instituted involved the removal of strangers in the land to the place of their nativity, and the whole Roman world was set in motion to take a virgin mother from Nazareth to Bethlehem, and thus to fulfil the prophecy of Micah.

In gathering up the results of these studies of prophecy, to vindicate the authenticity of the Scriptures, the speaker referred to the fact that 400 years elapsed between the Old and New Testaments, rendering impossible any collusion between the writers in bringing to pass the events foretold; while the minuteness of detail and novelty of combination which mark the prophecies, dispose of any such theory as that their fulfilment was by chance. No infidel or doubting Christian can remain such after studying the Messianic prophecies. It breaks the hearts of some of us to feel that Christ is being wounded in the house of His friends, and newly crucified before the world. Unbelief is impossible to a candid mind when an appeal is made to Old Testament prophecies; they authenticate the Bible as the Divine Book and Jesus Christ as the Son of God. As a regiment of soldiers salute in passing their general, so the centuries, moving in procession past the Person of the Son of God, pay homage to Him "whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting."

At the accession of Queen Victoria there was a series of festivities to mark the event. The last was a performance of Handel's oratorio, the Messiah, at which the Queen presided on her throne. She was told that it was customary for the audience to rise during the singing of "The Hallelujah Chorus"; but for her to do so would be a violation of royal etiquette. At the first chord of the majestic chorus the multitude rose, and as the stately music proceeded the young Queen yearned to stand with the audience and confess her allegiance to Him whose anthem it was. But remembering her instructions, she seized the sides of her throne and remained seated. When the last part of the chorus was reached, however, and the words pealed forth "King of kings, and Lord of lords," she forgot her court instructions, discarded her royal prerogative, and rising to her feet, folded her arms across her breast, and bowed in adoration the head on which was the crown of empire. Shall not we too ascribe glory and honour to Him who sits on heaven's throne, and crown Him Lord of all?

Which Would it Be?

Should an angel whisper to you,
Ere you close your eyes to-night,
"Jesus is coming to-morrow,
He'll be here ere morning light—"

What would your heart-felt response be?
Would you with rapture arise,
Saying, "I'll watch His appearing—
Meet the first glance from His eyes?"

Or would you, with feeling of sadness,
Wish He would longer delay,
That you might begin in earnest
To labour, and love, and pray?

Would you feel that, though He saved you
In the days so long ago,
You had never wholly followed—
Never sought His will to know?

Content to accept salvation
From the penalty of sin;
Not seeking a real heart-cleansing,
Or striving the lost to win?

Christian, awake from thy slumber!
See that thy "garments are white;"
"Buy gold" of Him, "tried in the fire;"
Walk—as He walked—in the light.

Cruel Sport.—There can be absolutely no justification for such inhuman "sport" as that which ended in the drowning of the deer at the run of the Surrey Staghounds last week. The poor beast, to escape its tormentors, rushed into the sea and was drowned; but this last act was preceded by a chase which reduced the fine animal to a pitiful state of exhaustion and terror. And to what end? Merely for the amusement of a crowd of aristocratic idlers. It is the refinement of cruelty to subject a highly-strung creature like the deer to such barbarous treatment. It is more than time that deer-hunting should follow bull-baiting and other barbarities into oblivion. "A merciful man regardeth the life of his beast," but these cruel sports excite any feeling rather than that of mercy.

One-by-One Working Band.

THE work of this band is widening, and the prayer-life of many of its members is deepening. This means a spiritual revival which must have its influence upon all with whom the quickened soul comes into contact. The home, the Church, the world, feel the power. God gets to Himself the glory.

In a letter to Mr. Hogben, Dr. Torrey says:—"I believe heartily in the 'One-by-One' plan of reaching men with the Gospel, and the 'One-by-One' Band. One reason why my own church has been so successful in the winning of souls to Christ, is that my people are trained to do personal work on the 'One-by-One' plan. I doubt if there has been a day for years in which somebody has not been saved in or around Chicago Avenue Church. The world will never be evangelized by public preaching, only by individual effort."

An inspiring letter, with a jubilant ring that warms one's very heart, comes from Vancouver, B.C.: "It is with the deepest sense of gratitude that I forward my report for 1902, as a member of the "One-by-One" Band. God has most graciously heard and answered prayer. As I look down the pages of my little 'Throne of Grace' book, I find over forty names marked with the 'answered' sign. This does not include all the good that has come from waiting upon God."

A PRAYING MOTHER'S STORY.

A fine instance of how faith is honoured and love crowned, is found in the following wonderful story sent to Mr. Hogben some time ago by a member:—"A praying mother had a son who was very far from God. She prayed earnestly for him, and gathered one or two Christian friends to join her. But he seemed to go farther and farther away from God. He had gone to sea, and one day the mother heard that the ship in which he had sailed had gone down with all hands. Sending for her praying friends, she said to them: 'You must join me in praising God. I know He has answered my prayers, and saved my son.' They thought her mind must be affected, as there had been not the slightest token of any change in him before his voyage. But she insisted, saying that she knew God must have answered prayer, and she would not doubt His faithfulness. Weeks passed. One day the mother received a letter from her son, written from hospital in a distant port, telling her the joyful news that he was not only alive (he and another having been saved from the wreck), but that while he was in the water Christ had come to him and saved him, and he was rejoicing in His Saviour!"

Since Christmas last over 300 letters have been received, telling of answered prayers and lives uplifted to higher Christian altitudes. Meetings have been held in various cities, towns, and villages in Great Britain for the purpose of inviting members of the band to more earnest and effectual service, and for bringing before those yet uninterested in definite intercession the inestimable privilege of this exercise. These have been productive of encouraging results, and Sister Vera Edmeades has joined Mr. Hogben as deputation secretary to further extend this work. Applications for missions should be sent to Mr. Hogben, Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

Falmouth.—The Sailors' Christian Floating Endeavour, at the Bethel and Institute, is being much used of God amongst seamen of various nationalities frequenting the port. Several striking cases of conversion have recently taken place, one of them being a young able seaman saved from the wreck of the s.s. Mohegan, in 1898, who attended a Sunday evening service a few weeks ago, and boldly confessed the Lord Jesus before a crowded congregation. Another had been brought up in a bright Christian home, but fell into bad company, and took to drink; for six years his mother knew nothing about him; he turned up at the Mission in a destitute condition, where he was fed and clothed. At a morning prayer-meeting he was converted to God, his aged Christian mother has her son restored to her, and for some weeks he has been an earnest helper in trying to win his shipmates.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, March 1. 2 Chron. xxxiii.

BECAUSE he was only a youth, Manasseh may have been more easily influenced by the reactionary party, who came back to power on Hezekiah's death, much as the Royalists succeeded the reign of the Puritans. But in his manhood he pursued still further the evil track on which he had commenced to walk, and made Judah and Jerusalem to err. Warning voices sought to arrest his progress, as men might cry to a young oarsman in the upper waters of Niagara, but in vain; and there was no alternative but the chains and fetters of the King of Assyria (10-12 R.V.). In this distress he besought the Lord his God.

Ah, how good it is to have been afflicted! What the prison-cell was to Manasseh, that to many of us has been the chamber of sickness and death. We all need "a lull in the hot race" in which we chase flying and elusive shadows; we all need to get to some quiet loch, where we may quietly adjust the compass of our life with the eternal verities; we all need to climb the hills, and become aware of the source where our life arose, and the sea to which it goes. "Now, no chastisement for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward" . . . "And God was intreated of him" (19). What comfort those words have brought to myriads of souls! Why should you not "take with you words" and return to Him? Make right, so far as you can, all that lies behind; seek forgiveness of God through the blood of Christ, and of man through confession and restitution; turn your back once and for ever on the graves where the dead years lie buried, and build up the altar of the Lord with its sacrifices of thanksgiving.

MONDAY, March 2. 2 Chron. xxxiv.

Josiah exerted a wonderful power. He purged his kingdom from all the monuments of idolatry which had been erected during his father's short reign, and did the like throughout the northern kingdom, from which the ten tribes had, speaking generally, been removed. He repaired and restored the Temple, and led the whole nation into an act of repentance for the past and of consecration for coming days. "He made"—such is the remarkable statement of v. 33—"all that were found in Israel to serve the Lord their God."

Josiah was evidently one of those men who have found their centre. Centred in the Infinite God, such a man becomes attached to the great power-house of the universe, and draws from thence the power which passes through his nature to energize and quicken all other natures with which he comes into contact.

Why should you not surrender yourself to God? He waits to use all whom He can use. There are temples which need repairing; priests and people who require to be directed and exhorted; nations which should be brought back to the God of their fathers. Only let your heart be tender, and humble yourselves in the dust before Him, that He may make you the instruments of bringing men back to Himself!

TUESDAY, March 3. 2 Chron. xxxv.

This was a memorable Passover (v. 18), not for the imposing grandeur of the ceremonies only, nor for the concourse of worshippers, but because of the unusually strict adherence, even in the minutest particulars, to the form of observance prescribed in the Book of the Law. Josiah was the soul and life of the movement, encouraging the priests, exhorting the Levites to bring the Ark out of the side chamber, to which Manasseh or Amon may have relegated it, and then to address themselves to help the priests; and finally leading his princes in munificent offerings, so that all the multitude might be supplied.

The people seem to have been admitted in batches, according to their families, into the sacred courts. The gates were closed as soon as these were filled. Thus all the fathers' houses came, one after another, in solemn procession, to the altar, offering such part of the sacred victims as was required, and receiving the part which was for their own consumption. In the meanwhile, the Levite choir was chanting Psa. cxiii. to cxviii. How good it is to turn from the slaughter of these 37,600 paschal lambs and kids to the blood of Him, who, as the Lamb of God, was once offered to bear away the sin of the world.

Dear dying Lamb, Thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power.

What a misfortune that such a reign should end so disastrously! Josiah opposed Pharaoh, because Palestine was under the tutelage of Babylon; and it had become the cockpit between these two great nations, as they contended for the mastery of the world. The lamentation for Josiah's death became proverbial (Zech. xii. 11). His reign was the last gleam of light on his doomed country. Earth cannot rest or satisfy the soul. It was better for Josiah to be away before the storm burst!

WEDNESDAY, March 4. 2 Chron. xxxvi.

Here was the final catastrophe. It had been long predicted, and at last it befell. The Jewish kings were mere puppets, and instead of turning to the Lord God of their fathers, they followed each other in headlong precipitancy of crime. "They stiffened their necks, and hardened their hearts, mocked God's messengers, and despised His words until there was no remedy."

As long as there is a remedy, God will not go to extreme measures. If digging about the fig-tree will make it fruitful, well and good; but if not, it must be cut down.

Jehoahaz was deposed by Necho, who hoped to have a more obsequious tool in his brother Jehoiakim. Jehoiakim was deposed by Nebuchadnezzar, because he was Necho's nominee. Jehoiachin was carried away by Nebuchadnezzar, because he was the choice of the people, and Zedekiah because he rebelled. These are the superficial reasons for the changes that followed each other with such terrible rapidity. But, if we turn to the pages of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, we find that there were other and deeper reasons, of which we have also some account in verses 14-21.

What a long process it was to bring the Hebrew people into a condition, by which the whole world might be blessed through their instrumentality! What pruning this stock was exposed to, ere Christ came of it! Evidently we are in the midst of a vast process, during which we are being fitted, as individuals and nations, for mighty destinies.

THURSDAY, March 5. Ezra i.

The Lord works by means, and the human instrumentality for stirring up the heart of Cyrus was probably his venerable prime minister, Daniel. Josephus expressly tells us that he showed Cyrus the prophecies of Isaiah, in which the King was designated by name (Isa. xliv. 28; xlv. 1-4; Dan. x. 1).

The main burden of the royal edict was to grant permission to the Jewish exiles, in every part of his kingdom, to return to their native land, and to urge those who remained in Babylon to assist the poor and feeble by their gifts. Note that God, who stirred up Cyrus, stirred up the people also (v. 6). They were settled comfortably in Babylon. It is clear, from the gifts that they were afterwards able to make to the Temple, that they were fairly affluent, but the love of fatherland burnt like a fire in their soul, and God stirred up the faintly-glowing embers to burst out into a flame.

We are reminded of the words of the old saint: "Where men are enlightened with the true light, they renounce all desire and choice, and commit and commend themselves and all things to God; and there abideth in them a perpetual desire to get nearer Him, to come to a clearer knowledge, a warmer love, a more comfortable assurance, perfect obedience and subjection." May the Lord stir us up, that we may never be content until we too have built Jerusalem in our own dear land.

The vessels here mentioned amount to 2,400, out of 5,400 (v. 11) so that, probably, only the larger ones are enumerated. Sheshbazzar (fire-worshipper) was the captivity-name given to Zerubbabel (Zech. iv.). He led the first band of exiles; Ezra and Nehemiah subsequently led others.

FRIDAY, March 6. Ezra ii.

It was a very desolate country to which the Jewish exiles returned. In our own time the desolated fields of South Africa, to which repatriated families are slowly returning, must present a similar appearance. Still, it was their own dear country, the land given to their fathers, the place where Abraham had lived in tents, and David had kept his flocks. Each family came to the city formerly occupied by their ancestors, or perhaps there was a fresh allotment of localities. But the number of the returned exiles was a very meagre and sparse handful in the land, which once had been able to send 300,000 soldiers to war.

We are reminded of those magnificent words of Isaiah (lviii. 12), "They that shall be of thee shall build the old waste places." Are there not plenty of waste places still? Vast areas of our cities and towns, wasted by the trade in strong drink, by the accursed selfishness of the landlord, by the hot sirocco of impurity, call for the efforts of our noblest Christians. O children of God, awake, awake! Why live at ease in Babylon when the waste places call for you to make them rejoice and blossom as the rose? Are you doing all you might? Are you giving all you might? Are you praying all you might? Are not the wastes a call to the sons and daughters of God to repair and rebuild? Were we not redeemed and sent into the world for this? Is not this the work which God has given us to do?

Note that the would-be priests, who could not show their fathers' houses, were not allowed to officiate; and it is certain that you cannot intercede for others, unless you know something of the witness of the Spirit of Adoption, assuring you that you are a child of God.

SATURDAY, March 7. 2 Ezra iii.

The exiles left Babylon in the spring, and for some time they were occupied in rearing their homesteads and planting the land. Then as the seventh (the sacred) month drew near, they set themselves to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles. Wherever men have gone, they have built altars. One of the deepest instincts of our nature is to pray. If an age becomes materialistic, there will be an almost certain reaction to spiritualism, or theosophy, if true religion be not there to give the Bread of Life. If you have wandered, or been carried into captivity, but are now returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls, be sure to raise the altar of thanksgiving, of prayer, and of entire surrender to God.

When the foundations of this second temple were laid, there was a great manifestation of emotion. In the first place, exuberant thankfulness and joy. The priests with their trumpets, the Levites with their cymbals, joined with antiphonal bands of choristers in the ancient refrain, "For the Lord is good, and His mercy endureth for ever." Notice the addition of the words, toward Israel. This is always the result of chastisement and sorrow, when rightly borne. We realize that God has been specially good to us. We insert our own name as less than the least of all saints, and therefore the more amazing and conspicuous example of what God's grace can do.

There was weeping also, as the elder men contrasted the smaller size and the poorer materials of the new Temple with those that enhanced the glory of its predecessor. But the prophet Haggai predicted (ii. 9) that its spiritual glories would more than compensate. A face may be plain, but it may be lit up with a marvellous expression; and the structure might be poorer in its outward appearance, but God Incarnate would stand within its courts.

Other Lands.

The Madeleine and the Mission Hall.

By H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

BOTH situated in the Rue Royale, in the centre of Paris, close to the open space where the Champs Elysées terminate in the Place de la Concorde, the majestic Madeleine, seen of every eye, towers above the humble Mission Hall, whose only designation is, "Numero 23, Rue Royale." Yesterday morning, accompanied by my younger son, Dr. G. Whitfield Guinness, recently rescued from the jaws of death in China, I attended the high mass in the crowded Madeleine, and then the simple Gospel service in the Mission Hall close by. The contrast between the two places, the two congregations, the two conceptions of the religion of Christ, the two modes of worship, the two presentations of the Gospel of salvation, was in every way striking and instructive.

THE CHURCH AND THE PRIESTS.

The Madeleine, surrounded by its lofty columns, and approached by an imposing flight of steps, stands like a Grecian temple at the end of the Rue Royale. The vast interior, adorned with noble sculptures, is seen partly by daylight, partly by the illumination of countless candles burning on the great altar at the far end of the building, where a crowd of priests, moving to and fro, and bowing in reiterated acts of worship before a set of gaudy and glittering objects of idolatry, intone the Latin service; bass and treble voices, aided by organ music, swelling into loud harmonies, or faintly dying away into silence, broken by the sharply accented triple ring of the silver bell at the elevation of the consecrated Host, adored with bowed head and bended knee by priests and people, as the body, blood, soul, and divinity of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is offered anew on the altar as an atonement for the sins of the living and the dead.

Refusing to bow to the Babylonian idol, we cast our eyes over the kneeling crowd, impressed not so much by their sin in worshipping the wafer as the living God, as by the awful responsibility and wickedness of the Romish Church in leading ignorant multitudes astray, blinding them to the truth, and prostrating them before priestly performances and lying deceptions. As we watched it all, the money box was carried round to every worshipper, and a pressing demand made for payment for the use of seats. A priest, attired in sacerdotal vestments, moved through the throng offering little holy loaves of bread about the size of a marble, "pains bénits," which the superstitious people carried away with silent satisfaction. The whole thing, with its incomprehensible Latin, its absence of the exposition of the Word of God, its gross externality and blasphemous idolatry, painfully impressed one as an immoral pantomime of sacred things, surviving from past ages of superstition; a Satanic counterfeit of the faith and worship instituted by the Redeemer of the world. Who can wonder that such exhibitions should have alienated thousands from the profession of Christianity, and have filled France with infidels?

THE MISSION HALL AND THE GOSPEL.

From the proud church of the Madeleine, we passed into the unpretending Mission Hall, entered by an arched passage, whose services are announced as "Conférences sur l'Evangile." A small but deeply serious and attentive audience nearly filled its seats, set in a semi-circle in front of the preacher's platform. The hymns were full of Gospel truth and Christian feeling, many of them being translations from well-known English pieces. The Word of God was read, and simply expounded and applied. Several speakers took part, Mr. Soltau presiding. M. Morel gave a searching address on "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith," showing what it was to be a Christian. My dear son spoke briefly through translation on the marvellous way in which God had preserved his own life, and the lives of other fellow-missionaries, in the recent Boxer riots in China. The prayer that followed, offered by the French evangelist, was evidently the spontaneous outpouring of a Christian heart, and it was a joy to remember that for nearly thirty-five years such services had been conducted on this spot, and that every day, without intermission since 1869, the Gospel had been preached here to audiences gathered from the crowded streets by personal invitation—Romanists, Rationalists, atheists, the worldly and the wicked—as well as to thousands of inquirers, Protestants and Romanists, feeling their way to the arms of the Saviour of mankind.

No priestly pretensions had marred the services; no lying superstitions had degraded them; but the "truth as it is in Jesus" had been preached in the spirit of faith and love, finding its way to countless hearts, with saving effects. In the evening we attended the service in the much larger church of our beloved brother, M. Saillens, and heard him deliver a most impressive and admirable discourse designed to meet the errors of Parisian infidelity. A large number of the class he sought to reach had come to listen to him. We were filled with gratitude to God as we remembered that twenty-eight years ago this earnest and eloquent preacher had been a student at Harley House, and rejoiced in the evidences before us that our labour in his case had "not been in vain in the Lord."

"Thou Mayest Not Hide Thyself."

(Deut. xxii. 3.)

IN the present day, one may say, there is not much fear of anyone wishing to hide himself. But you recollect it refers, not to self-advertisement, but to one who, seeing the animal belonging to another straying, does not want to be delayed and troubled to secure and return it, so is fain to hide himself from the need and pass on about his own business, so, too, says the passage, with anything which thy brother hath lost and thou hast found. In North Africa many things have been lost, especially the Gospel; this we have found, but with it we find a duty to give it back to them again.

We may not hide ourselves behind our many calls or responsibilities—is not their dire need, itself, a call from God? Neither may we hide behind the lack of immediate conversions. I heard lately that a Christian student remarked, "I think it is a waste of time and money to try to convert Moslems." How different this from a young Moslem woman here last week at the Medical Mission; she had heard the joyful news, I suspect for the first time, from my wife, and, with beaming eyes, she cried, "You must tell ALL Moslems about this, for they don't know it."

WORK AMONG MOSLEMS.

How different, too, from a Moslem woman now staying here, who heard the good news quite four years ago, and alone in her distant village, without one soul to help her or one book to read, she treasured up the message of love, and now is still possessed of faith and hope in Jesus. Or, again, this young Moslem now staying with us, who has received healing of body and food and shelter through the Gospel, and well nigh daily preaches Jesus to his fellows as the only Saviour, the one in whose name God answers his prayers and gives him victory over temptation. How wide he would open his eyes, I fancy, if he heard that a true Christian could say "it is a waste of time and money to try to convert Moslems!"

But perhaps our student friend would be surprised to hear that even Mohammed, the false prophet, himself does not agree with him, for is it not written in the Koran that if Moslems make friends of Christians they will become like them? "We were in darkness till we came here and heard about Jesus," said a Moslem woman to me lately. Yes, darkness, gross darkness—e.g., last Sunday, a poor girl dying in our hospital, the Moslem carter would not have the body in his cart without there was an iron chain upon her feet, because, said he, the devil fears iron, and without this piece of iron the corpse would become possessed with the devil during the night, and sit up, and try to seize anybody near it, and if it did, that person would surely die! The carter's friends believed it too, for they all went next day to a shrine to implore a dead "saint" to shield their friend from harm.

Surely God, after sending His own Son, must think it worth while that His Gospel should be preached "to every creature," and Jesus must say again, when He hears the word "waste," "She hath done a good work; she hath done it unto Me."

Prayer and sympathy are needed to provide medicines, food, and Gospels for this Sousse Medical Mission to Moslems, and will be gladly welcomed by the Hon. Secretary, North Africa Mission, Paternoster House, E.C.

Pandita Ramabai's Work.

WRITING from Mukti, Kedgaon, Poona District, India, a helper of the devoted Pandita Ramabai says:—

We have so much to praise God for! We magnify His grace as exhibited in the gracious woman, Pandita Ramabai, whom He has called and fitted for this great work. I never expected, this side of the pearly gates, to meet with an Indian sister so clothed with humility, and so filled with love, gifted and yet so humble, willing to take the lowest place, and be anything or nothing for Jesus.

We all love her dearly, and it is grand to see how her girls crowd around her. She rises very early in the morning (about 4), to meet with God alone, and then all through the busy day she is ready for every call that comes. We are greatly encouraged, from time to time, by the visitors God sends us. Two or three rooms are always in readiness for the Lord's guests, and High Church or Low Church, and no church in particular, are among the folks that come here.

Not long since, we had an interesting visit from the Father Superior of the Cowley Fathers—he baptized Pandita into the Christian faith many years ago in London. He came only for a day, but he was so much interested that he stayed on; so also were we interested in the simple, helpful talks he gave to our children. And I should like just to append what he wrote in our guests' book:—"By invitation from my honoured friend the Pandita Ramabai, I came on a visit to Mukti November 26, 1902, intending to return the next day; but I found the manner of life and the work here so interesting and unique in its character that I remained over the following Sunday, rendering such help as I was able to give. I am profoundly impressed with the importance of Mukti as an aid in the regeneration of India. It is on a large scale, but it is the scale of faith in the living, loving, personal God, and therefore not to be measured by human conceptions in its present working or as to its future results.—R. L. Page."

Young Women in Rome.—For a long time a great need has been felt of an "International Home" in Rome for young women without friends and protection, as well as for those who come to study or to seek situations. Many of these have had to find lodging where they could, and often in very undesirable surroundings. More than one suitable house for that purpose is available. The outlay will amount to £8,000, part of which is in hand, but £2,500 must be raised quickly, if the house is to be secured. Realizing the necessity of such an "International Home," the leading Evangelical ministers of Rome cordially support an appeal for funds. When once established, the home will, it is expected, be self-supporting. The house will be purchased in the name of the Right Hon. Lord Kinnaird, president of the World's Y.W.C.A., but the funds must be found entirely by the Roman Branch.

Missionary Association Conference.

REALIZING the need that is constantly arising for a re-statement of those vital truths which should form the basis of all preaching of the Word, the Missionary Association arranged a two-days' Conference last week at the Police Institute, Adelphi Terrace. At the opening meeting on Wednesday afternoon Mr. Henry Varley presided (in the unavoidable absence of Mr. R. C. Morgan), and, in a few well-chosen words, directed attention to the subject to be considered. This was found in Rom. i. 15-19. He gave utterance to the conviction that, apart from the Gospel, God has no power to save. As the moral Governor of the universe He could not justify the criminal. God does not let sin alone; He could not occupy a neutral position. One weakness of the preaching of the Gospel at the present day is that the dangers to which sin exposes us are not brought home to the conscience and understanding. Having commented briefly on the Apostle's definition of the Gospel, given in 1 Cor. xv. 1, Mr. Varley emphasized the importance of embodying every factor of the Gospel in preaching to men. If any factor is omitted the Gospel is compromised. A word of exhortation was added based on our Lord's command to "Go into all the world," &c. Here is revealed the exceeding breadth of the sphere in which the Gospel is to accomplish the purposes of God.

LEVITY AND PRESUMPTION.

A thoughtful address followed by Sir Robert Anderson. While being increasingly impressed with the greatness and solemnity of the Gospel, he felt that its exponents were more than ever in danger of giving way to either levity or presumption. He had no sympathy with people who speak of the "simple Gospel": it is as unfathomable as God Himself. Many have an idea that certain men only could preach the Gospel; but God's way is, "Let him that heareth say, Come." It is a delusion to think that because we are not ministers we have no responsibility in the matter of preaching the Gospel.

Concerning the methods to be adopted by preachers, Sir Robert pointed out how much could be learnt from our Lord's plan, as seen in John iii., iv., v., and vi. It should always be remembered that the Gospel is God's "good news" concerning His Son Jesus Christ. It is the same to everyone.

A brief interchange of views followed, and among those who spoke, Mr. Varley and Pastor Fuller Gooch dwelt on the need for preachers of the Gospels being anointed with the Holy Ghost.

At the evening session, Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and the chief speaker was Rev. Dr. Morris, who, at the outset of his address, dwelt on the fulness of power of the Gospel, delivering from the penalty and power of sin, and, proceeding, said that the Gospel has two glorious pillars—Atonement and Anointing. How many, alas, lean on the one, but neglect the other. Let us ask ourselves the question, "Is the Gospel one of salvation to the uttermost, and have we put in our claim for it personally?"

Several striking anecdotes were related by Dr. Morris in order to illustrate the power of the Gospel and its practical effects upon the daily life and walk.

PAYING OLD DEBTS.

"I once preached in a church which was attended by the daughters of a duke, and who had a reputation for leaving their debts unpaid. They thought apparently that, in virtue of their position in society, they need not trouble about such matters. I was quite a stranger to them, knew nothing of them or of their presence, but in my sermon I instanced paying our debts as one practical outcome of accepting this Gospel of power. Next day the ladies astonished the townspeople by paying all they owed. Yes, it is a practical Gospel. It brings holiness of life.

"Philanthropy and organization have their place, but they must be channels only for the power of God. I was once directed to a church where I was to preach by a lad who, when I spoke to him on spiritual matters, said that he 'had left the Wesleyans and gone to the Church of England.' And the reason he gave was that the plum cake at the church teas was superior to that at the Wesleyans'! If we were to take away the teas and the prizes, would there not be a great falling off in attendances at our Sunday-schools? Do we not need to rely more upon the power of the Gospel?"

"BEGINNING AT JERUSALEM."

A man of God was inducted as vicar of an English parish. There was trouble at once, and twelve of the members complained to the bishop that the vicar had abolished the Saturday night dance for communicants (held at a public-house), and also the "Punch and Judy." "The vicar," they said, "was interfering with the machinery that had worked so well!" The bishop sent his wife down to interview the vicar; but the latter, after some conversation, engaged in prayer, and the lady admitted, "you are in the right." The congregation shrank almost to nothing, and on the Lord's Day the vicar, instead of preaching, spent the time in prayer. A work of God broke out. The twelve remonstrators were converted. Six of them are now in the foreign field—the leader, in India. When the Bishop visited the church he asked the caretaker, a humble Christian, 'How many communicants are there?' The reply was, 'Well, I can't exactly say, but the church is always filled.' 'What!' cried the Bishop, 'how do you do it? Have you got a guild?' And the caretaker's awswer was, 'Well, you see, the vicar gets the people properly saved, cleansed, and filled. The Holy Spirit keeps the people.' They have no passionate appeals for money, although the people are comparatively poor. There is just a box at the door, but a voluntary offering for foreign missions brought £150 on one Lord's Day. This is the way; we must 'begin at Jerusalem,' with the individual, the home, the church, and then the blessing shall flow out to 'the regions of Judæa and Samaria.'"

THE POWER OF CHRIST'S RESURRECTION.

Dr. Cronin occupied the chair on Thursday afternoon, and introduced the theme for consideration—"The Power of Christ's Resurrection"—by reading Phil. iii. 10-21. The address given by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch was of a particularly informing and helpful character. The speaker protested against the idea of the resurrection being regarded as a mere theory. It is a vital, experimental fact in the life of every believer. Some had come to regard Phil. iii. as the record of an abnormal experience. But the Apostle's experience is one to which every child of God can attain, for the knowledge of which he speaks is not exclusively Apostolic, but the experimental result of the Holy Spirit's working in the heart of the believer. Only as we have a personal knowledge of Christ can we grow into His likeness. The Apostle speaks of the resurrection of Christ as one of those certitudes about which there can be no rational doubt.

The fact that the Resurrection doctrine has been the means of quickening dead souls unto newness of life is, in itself, a proof of the reality of the truth. After speaking of the sacrificial and judicial power of the Resurrection, Mr. Gooch dealt with its vitalizing and evangelistic power. While the Apostles constantly proclaimed Jesus it was their testimony that He had risen from the dead that was most effective in awakening dead souls into spiritual life. These great Gospel facts, and testimony to them in the power of the Spirit, are instinct with life.

A conversation on points arising out of the address followed, and numerous questions, touching Christian life and experience, were dealt with by Pastor Fuller Gooch and Sir Robert Anderson.

The consideration of the subject was continued in the evening, when a stirring address was delivered by Mr. Henry Varley. In convincing terms he pressed home the fact that all men are under the wrath of God; but between the passing of the sentence and its execution the Gospel is presented. According to the Apostle the three great factors of the Gospel are (1) Christ died for our sins; (2) He was buried; (3) He was raised from the dead. The Resurrection is the first great positive fact. When Christ died for our sins He was dealing with our condemnation. We need to be thankful that He was buried, for it shows the reality of His death. Emphasizing the place that should be given in all preaching to the Resurrection, he impressed upon his hearers the fact that if Christ has not risen from the dead we have no foundation for our hope. The Resurrection is indeed the citadel of the Christian's faith.

Persecution in Spain.

AN interesting chapter of experience comes from Malaga, Spain. A fortnight ago three of the best preachers of the evangelical cause (E. Blanco, Pimental, and Bonachera) were unlawfully imprisoned at Archidona, near Granada, where, forty years ago, Manuel Matamoros was confined for two years and a half. The incident came about in this way. At Villanueva del Rosario, some thirty miles from Malaga, we established, nine months ago, a new centre of work, and our meetings have been so well attended as to diminish the numbers present in the Roman Catholic chapel. The enemy looked on with jealous eyes.

About the same time, a new Alcalde was sent, a fanatic and a strong opponent of our cause. He set about the work of suppression, beginning by ordering our Hall to be closed. Through the Governor of the province of Malaga we got leave to reopen the building, and the three evangelists above named attended the new inauguration. The Alcalde, getting word of the coming of the evangelists, sent police and apprehended them all, sending them to Archidona prison!

The wonderful care of God for our dear brethren was strikingly exhibited. A cobbler named Podadera belonging to the congregation at Villanueva, who had himself escaped imprisonment, came in here. He had previously been a prisoner for six weeks at Archidona, and his behaviour was so thoroughly Christian that the gaoler became his friend. Intervening at this juncture, he asked to be allowed to get good beds and food for the prisoners. This was permitted, so that the three prisoners fared as well as if they had been at home!

The Evangelical Alliance took a lively interest in the prisoners, and according to Acts xii. 5, "Prayer was made without ceasing unto God for them." The expected results followed. God wrought a great deliverance, and gave us a perfect triumph over the fanatic Alcalde. Like brave men, the prisoners marched back to Villanueva. May those who read this account of intolerance, pray for this important work at Villanueva, as there is a prospect of much blessing at this place.

It is a pleasure to report the substantial reduction of the debt on the Malaga Gospel Hall. There is still a balance of about £31. It would be great joy to clear this, that the work might proceed without financial hindrance.

Rome and St. Francis.—The "International Society for Franciscan Studies," which recently formed an influential branch in England, apparently forgot the Pope in appointing M. Paul Sabatier to the post of president, for that distinguished scholar is a Protestant and a man of liberal views. The Pope's newspaper organ has hastened to point out that it is undesirable there should be any communion between M. Sabatier and Roman Catholic students, and a Papal prohibition of the proposed conference at Assisi has been promulgated. Possibly this action will not surprise Professor Collins and Rev. James Adderley, the English presidents, for they must be familiar with the methods of Rome, and they must know that the order which St. Francis desired to found was not one of a body of monks, but a world-wide one of "all Christians, whether men and women," for the winning of souls for Christ.

The late Mr. James Salmon.

"NEW JIM."

IN many parts of the country the name of the late Mr. James Salmon will be cherished as that of an earnest evangelist. He was, indeed, "a brand plucked from the burning." During the earlier years of his life he had pursued a career of wild dissipation, but the grace of God, by which "all things became new," was so manifested that he became known and designated as "New Jim."

Born in 1855, young Salmon grew up into manhood a typical Londoner, acute and versed in the struggles of life in the great city. Temptations abounded, and he gave way to them; sin gained an increased hold upon him, and he plunged into the excess for which London presents so many opportunities. His favourite haunts were the public-house bar and the boxing-saloon; his friends were the debased frequenters of the tap-room and the "champions" of the prize-ring. He boasted, too, in his infidelity; but over these years of flagrant sin and rebellion against God the veil of silence may well be cast.

ALL THINGS BECOME NEW.

The Holy Spirit was dealing with him again and again, and one evening led him, sinful as he was, into the St. James' Hall, where Mr. Hugh Price Hughes was preaching. The energetic Wesleyan missioner spoke with his accustomed force and pungency, but the preacher was forgotten in the message. The Word of God still proved, as in ancient days, to be His power unto salvation; and there and then, lifting up his heart in penitence, and venturing all on the precious blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, Jim Salmon realized that he was "born again."

AN ACCEPTABLE EVANGELIST.

With characteristic thoroughness he at once began to manifest in practice the word which says, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Boxing-gloves, pipe, and tankard were put aside for ever, and Jim began at once to preach the faith he once despised. He began with open-air work near his home, a sphere which soon enlarged as his remarkable powers came to be known, and he was invited to take up regular missions in various parts of the country. His delight was ever to be among the common people. He was one of them; he understood their attitude, and believed them to be accessible to the Gospel. Certainly he lost no opportunity of proclaiming to them the Way of Life. He was one of the first to stand by Mr. Josiah Nix on the Epsom Racecourse, where hundreds had known him well prior to his change of masters.

These were days of hard but fruitful labour to Jim Salmon, when the workers who gathered amid those vast throngs were gladdened by seeing men of all classes, both book-makers and their victims, holiday-makers and the riff-raff of "camp followers" who are to be found at most race meetings, were subdued by the power of God.

THE KENSAL RISE MISSION.

In London, his principal work was the founding, about ten years ago, of the West London Gospel Open-Air Mission at Kensal Road, W. Almost every evening, all the year round, wet or fine, the members of this Mission sallied forth, with unabated earnestness, to proclaim the Gospel, and God has crowned the work with rich blessing.

Many a stormy scene, too, can be recalled when, after one of our friend's stern and yet loving denunciations of sin, efforts were made to disturb the meeting. On one occasion, on a Boat-race day, he had a crowd of many hundreds gathered round him, and was arrested for causing an obstruction. In the police-court, after a police-constable had given evidence, Jim was given leave to speak, whereupon with great relish he began: "I was having an open-air meeting, which I opened with the hymn, 'O happy day that fixed my choice—on Thee, my Saviour . . .'" The magistrate here interrupted, saying, "Never mind that." "Well," continued the evangelist, "while I was preaching, two men were convicted." "What do you mean?" asked the magistrate. "Why," was the reply, "they were Roman Catholics, and they were cut to the heart by the Spirit of God." With such a prisoner little could be done, and after the magistrate had made some kindly remarks, he concluded by binding the "offender" over to "keep the peace" for six months.

Last summer, Jim's mind gladly seized upon the proposed Royal Coronation days, in June, as being specially suitable for sustained Gospel effort. The writer will never forget marching through the street with "New Jim," on whose clothing were fastened cards with pointed Gospel texts printed on them. Then ensued ten hours of hard work, singing and speaking to ever-changing, yet always large crowds, with manifest tokens of real soul work. A brief interval was taken for tea-time, when the workers entered a small coffee-shop, Jim insisting that grace should be sung, much to the interest of the other customers, all of whom were spoken to about eternal things. So our friend continued with unwearying labours for his Master, instant in season and out of season.

THE HOME CALL.

On January 16 last he started for Batley on what proved to be his last mission. On the Lord's Day he preached five times, with twenty precious souls for his hire, and on the following days twice daily, with similar effectiveness. On the Thursday he had tea with a friend, and then started for the open-air meeting. Beginning to ascend the hill leading to the spot, he suddenly stood still and complained of being in great pain. His friends carried him into a surgery close at hand, where Jim, with great joy, realising that his end was near, began to praise God, alternating with deeply affecting prayers for grace to bear the great physical pain that he was suffering. The Lord a few minutes later unloosed the cords that bound him to the earth. At the inquest the verdict was: "Death from heart failure, aggravated by the extreme cold weather and the exertion of climbing the hill." His funeral was a never-to-be-forgotten sight. In spite of a heavy fog, a huge crowd was present, and loving witness was borne by many to the great blessing his life and words had been to them. Christ was preached simply and faithfully, and then amid the singing of one of Jim's favourite hymns the coffin was lowered into the grave.

It should be added that his autobiography, which he had just completed, is shortly to be published by Messrs. Fearnsides, of Batley, and that the profits will be devoted to the support of his widow and six young children. The work at Kensal Rise, a monument of the devotion of the departed worker, is being maintained under the superintendence of Mr. George Willis.

"Public Morals."

THE hands of Christian workers who are personally engaged in the battle against social evil have been materially strengthened by the publication of Public Morals (1s. net. Morgan & Scott). The dark cloud of impurity which hangs over our own and other lands has long been like a continual nightmare to faithful ones who had boldly penetrated the gloom. Worse than all else, it is no over-statement to say that the pall has seemed to grow thicker and heavier during the past generation. Obloquy, abuse, and even persecution, had to be faced by the pioneers in this effort to rescue sisters and brothers from an awful pit of degradation, suffering, and shame. Recruits have not been lacking for the ranks of the workers, and in the direction of legislation and official recognition progress has been marked. From the peculiar nature of the struggle, combined with a reticence arising from true modesty, much must be done which can never be published abroad.

One desideratum has been a popular manual, which would state in succinct form the present position of affairs and the immediate as well as the ultimate aims of the leaders. This has been well done in the book before us. Leading Christian workers, philanthropists, physicians, and legislators have summed up the matter from different points of view. Dreadful as the offences of impurity are against others, the sin against God is so great as to overshadow all else. So it is fitting that the duty of the Christian Church should be placed in the forefront. After examining the general call to the Church, which comes not only from her Master, but from the world, and applying it to moral questions, Bishop Barry adds:—

> There is in regard to all our social evils a demand—urgent and, I think, always increasing in urgency—that the Church should do that duty to the utmost, if she would justify her existence and claims. That demand is not only an utterance of the public conscience, but an implied tribute to the supreme influence of the religious force—all the more striking in face of the many doubts and perplexities of modern thought.

The attitude of the Free Churches is summed up by Rev. Dr. Townsend. Mr. W. A. Cooth has contributed a thoroughly informed and up to date paper on "Law and Morality," which will place readers abreast of the present law, and acquaint them with the progress of recent years. It is worthy of note that one specially gross sin can be punished in Scotland, and yet apparently committed in England with practical impunity. The influence of modern literature has been dealt with by the well-qualified pen of Mr. Percy W. Bunting.

Turning to preventive measures, Rev. F. B. Meyer gives—under the heading "The Nurture of the Home"—wise and well-tested advice to parents and others who are responsible for the upbringing of youth for the pointing out at the proper time and in the proper way of the rocks against which so many lives are wrecked. Canon Lyttelton takes up this from the more scholastic point of view.

Only women can fully appreciate the wrongs of their sisters. Some specious arguments which have been tolerated far too long are swept aside by Mrs. Ormiston Chant in "Women and the Streets." Mrs. Bramwell Booth puts in brief form a well-considered statement on the "Principles of Rescue Work." Those who have any lingering doubt as to the value of the regulation of vice may well read "Public Morals and the Public Health," by Miss Blanche Leppington. As physicians, Dr. Harry Guinness and Dr. Barnardo have observed with more accuracy than the ordinary Christian worker, and their papers on "Men in Relation to the Problem of the Social Evil," and "Out of an Horrible Pit," have a special value from the personal and aggressive points of view, respectively.

The subject is not an agreeable one; the contemplation of the fruits of sin never can be to the Christian or even the moral mind. Yet here we have the expression of a great cry which is entering into the ear of God, and to which His people dare not be deaf if in the Great Day they would hear His "Well done."

A Methodist Missioner.

Rev. JOSEPH JOHNSON, St. George's Hall, S.E.

AMONG the many Methodist missions to the people, which of late years have accomplished so much for the cause of Christ among the masses, that of the Primitive Methodist body at St. George's Hall, Old Kent Road, S.E., occupies a conspicuous place. Founded by Rev. James Flanagan, this important undertaking is at present under the direction of Rev. Joseph Johnson, a minister whose reputation stands high, not only in his own Connexion, but with all who follow with interest the battles of Christianity with the many forms of gross evil which hold sway in the slums of our great cities.

Mr. Johnson was born at a small Derbyshire village near Chesterfield in 1860, and was privileged to enjoy the sheltering care and instruction of godly parents. His way in life was uneventful until the moment of his conversion. For the encouragement of the great army of local preachers, it should be recorded that it was an awakening sermon, preached by one of their number in the village chapel at Marsden Moor, which was so used by the Holy Spirit to the blessing of young Mr. Johnson. The outcome of the event was remarkable. The young man became a "burning and shining light" in the district, and an ardent helper of the cause. Called of God to the ministry, his earliest work was in Knighton circuit, Radnorshire. In 1888, after filling several country appointments, he was called to London, being the youngest superintendent minister in the Metropolis. His appointment was quickly justified. The hard and difficult circuit of Stoke Newington included three chapels; two were heavily in debt, and the third was attended only by a handful of people. At the former the debt burdens were removed, and in connection with the third the work of God was so revived that a new building became necessary, and a fine sanctuary, a busy hive of fervent "Prims.," was erected. Moreover, extension continued to be the order of the day, and a mission was commenced at Stamford Hill, N.

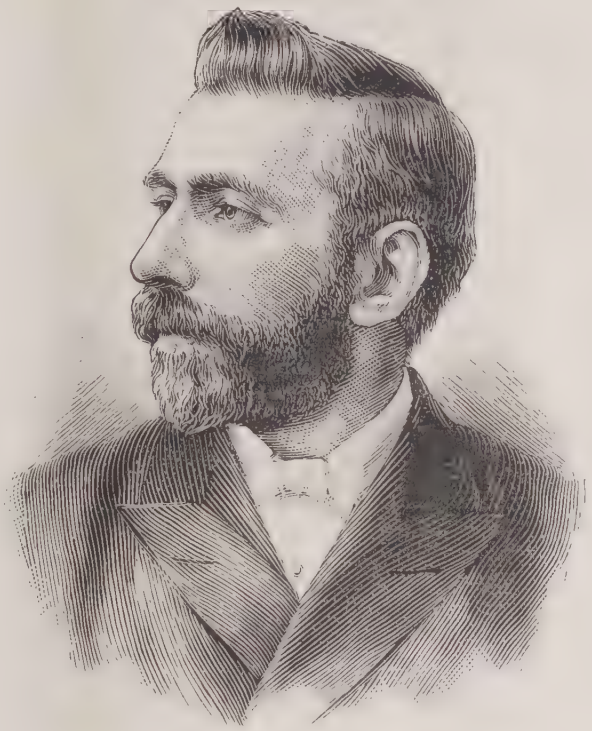
Behind these evidences of progress was the minister's strong, earnest toil in the spiritual upbuilding of the Church. The numbers of one society rose, during Mr. Johnson's fourteen years in the circuit, from sixty-seven to 300, and the combination of evangelistic effort with pastoral care was demonstrated by the large numbers who joined on conversion. The most popular gatherings in the circuit were the class meetings and the love-feasts. Questionable means were left entirely alone. "We believe," said Mr. Johnson, "in the power of the everlasting Gospel."

After giving these proofs of his ministry, Mr. Johnson was naturally in the minds of his brethren in Conference when, in June last, they were called upon to find a suitable head for the work at St. George's Hall, the headquarters of the S.E. London mission, the superintendent, Rev. Jas. Flanagan, being released in order that he might devote himself to raising funds for the purchase of the freehold.

The story of Mr. Flanagan's labours in that squalid neighbourhood is one of the most fascinating in the record of evangelism. Many will recall the progress of the Mission from the days when it comprised only a few people meeting in a small, incommodious building, to the time when the present splendid pile of buildings—a busy centre of Christian work—was erected. Drunkenness prevailed to a lamentable extent. Some temperance workers who placed fifteen public-houses under observation on a particular Lord's Day, reported that 16,470 persons, of whom 3,852 were children, were seen to enter, and it was, therefore, specially encouraging to such when the new building was erected, partly on ground which had been occupied by a well-known public-house.

The gulf was bridged between the masses and the sanctuary, but the maintenance and development of an undertaking of such magnitude involved heavy responsibilities. These Mr. Johnson has fully met; his appointment has been more than justified; the Mission grows apace.

The agencies operate, as we have seen, in what is a London plague-spot. Part of the old "Pilgrims' Way"—the Borough High Street and the Old Kent Road—runs through a network of alleys and "mean streets," some of them respectable despite the poverty which abounds, and others the home of the hooligan and the professional thief. Southwark and Bermondsey, too, form the poor City warehouseman's and labourer's home in preference to any other places in London, and these worthy toilers are the "aristocracy" of its residential population. Lower in the social scale are the costermongers, the poorest of the dock labourers, and a great crowd of nondescript characters who gain a precarious living by minding horses, carrying parcels, or undertaking any "odd job" that is to be found on the streets. Shattered humanity crowds the "shelters," "models," and common lodging-houses for which the district is so well known. To walk through some of these slums is almost enough to chill the heart. Human beings are huddled together, in scandalous fashion. The drink shops with their glitter and warmth, are a powerful temptation, and vice in varied forms of allurement is rife.



REV. JOSEPH JOHNSON.
From Photograph by Mr. Hawkins, York Road, Ilford.

At St. George's Hall itself, large congregations and earnest attention to the message demonstrate the effectiveness of an evangelistic mission. At the same time, the strenuous nature of the struggle for bread, renders it imperative that the Mission should give attention to social problems, particularly in the winter time, when so many are seeking work in vain. By means of prudent relief, and temporary assistance in cases of misfortune and need, Mr. Johnson has helped a thousand families to tide over difficulty and "keep the wolf from the door." Thousands of waif children, too, during the past winter have found Mr. Johnson a sympathetic friend, and provision has been made for bringing brightness and blessing into their lives. The annual waifs' festival, inaugurated by Mr. Flanagan twelve years ago, was held last month, to the delight and profit of upwards of 1,100 ragged little ones.

In connection with these efforts, the Poor Children's Mission demands recognition. It is in constant touch with at least 1,400 of the poorest of the young folks of the district, and quite a number of them have been led to the Lord Jesus Christ, and give promise of devout and earnest Christian lives. It is hoped soon to provide a home in the country or by the sea for the sick and afflicted among them.

Conspicuous among other agencies is the Sisters' Settlement, the objects of which are (1) ministering to the poor, nursing the sick, and helping the afflicted in mind and body; (2) to educate and qualify Christian young women for the work of evangelization, visitation, and instruction of the people in matters of religion, temperance, thrift, and health; and (3) to provide a sphere of work for young women who desire to devote part of their time to a practical ministry among the poor. During the past year, going in and out among homes where squalor, drunkenness, and vice run riot, or where honest poverty suffers in silence, the sisters have ministered to at least 6,000 families.

Another remarkable branch is the Lodging-house Mission, an essential in such a neighbourhood. Its labours have been well described by one of the evangelists, who writes:—"It had been a terrible day of cold wind and rain, one of those searching days that make you shudder, even when well clothed, and hurrying along with the prospect of 'Home, sweet Home.' Alas! many of these outcasts have never possessed a home. They are children of the homeless. Others who have once known a home are homeless now, and have had to bear throughout the day its cold and rain, foodless, footsore, and hopeless. At last night has come down upon the city, and they must shelter somewhere, or be found, like many are, dead upon the city street. They have paid their last pence, and are here in the common lodging-house, in the darkest alley in the Borough. How many in the one place! Fourscore or more, men, women, and children. While they are thus shut in with their misery, within twenty yards of the house is the broad highway of the city, along which worshippers are hurrying, this Sunday evening, to their pews in the various churches.

"When we entered the lodging-house, it was full to the doors! It was so full, indeed, that we could only just enter and occupy speaking room. What a congregation! Men, women, and children, together in all possible wretchedness. Waiting, as it seemed, for death, as lepers wait, having lost all hope of life. Despair on well nigh every face! The children were the only exception—oh, how they welcomed our singing! How interested they became in what we sang—'She only touched the hem of His garment,' 'Blessed be the fountain of blood,' and 'Though your sins be as scarlet.'

"At first they only listened, but as the warm truth from loving hearts touched them, they opened their lips, and soon the place was filled with song. How fitting was the hymn:

'There is a fountain filled with Blood.'

"'Shall we speak?' I asked. 'Yes! Yes! Yes!' they replied.

"We told the story of our common sinfulness. We told the story of the blessed salvation which is in Christ. We gave our own experience; and in many a face we read: 'Shall I, even I, be saved?' 'God be merciful to me, the sinner.'

"We were about to close the service, when a friend said: 'I must speak.' And from a heart touched as Christ's heart was touched when He saw the multitude, he spoke of Jesus and His love, and His yearning to save sinners.

"'Shall we come again?' I asked. 'Yes! Yes! Yes! And please sing 494 before you go.'

'God be with you till we meet again.'"

Many are the other organized efforts by which, in the open air, in the mission chapel, and in the homes of the people, it is sought to proclaim the glad message of Divine love. The Mission is full of possibilities of increased usefulness. During the past twelve months it has reaped a bountiful spiritual harvest, and every week other sheaves are being gathered.

Protestant Demonstration

AT ST. JAMES' HALL.

A LARGE and enthusiastic assembly of Protestants came together on Thursday last at St. James' Hall, at the invitation of the Church Association, to protest against the extensive Ritualistic practices at present obtaining in the Church of England.

Lord Portsmouth, who presided, contended that the questions at issue are the defence and maintenance of the Protestant faith. He expressed the hope that, in order to avoid a violent religious controversy, those concerned in the management of the Church of England, between now and the time when the legislative proposals come before Parliament, would arouse the Episcopate, and give the clergy to understand that in this matter the people of England are in earnest. The maintenance of the Church of England depends upon the true acceptance in spirit and in loyalty of the principles upon which the Church was created.

A telling speech was also given by the Hon. Arthur Brand, who set forth arguments for the resolution: "That the continued and persistent neglect on the part of the Bench of Bishops to suppress the celebration of the Mass, or to check and discourage the introduction of the Confessional within the Established Church, as well as their habitual promotion and protection of clergymen who publicly violate the law as laid down by His Majesty's Judges, constitute a grave scandal, and that the time has now arrived when the Government should be called upon during the present Session to redeem the pledge given in Parliament nearly four years ago, when the House of Commons, by an overwhelming majority, declared 'that if the efforts now being made by the Archbishops and Bishops to secure the obedience of the clergy be not speedily effectual, further legislation will be required to maintain the observance of the existing laws of the Church and Realm.'"

Mr. Brand's speech secured unanimous support, and indeed, the meeting from beginning to end was full of earnest determination to maintain Protestant truth. There is certainly a large section of the people whose hearts are sorely burdened and deeply stirred by the aggression of Rome in our midst.

Rev. F. B. Meyer.

AS I come to the end of my seven weeks' missions to as many Lancashire towns—Manchester, Barrow, Bury, Bradford, Southport, Bacup, and Halifax—I desire to express my great thankfulness to God that I was ever led to undertake them, and I would like those who pray for me in all parts to enter into my joy. At the conferences with different bodies of workers I have been able to discuss freely the best methods of operation, and to brace up the machinery. At the afternoon conferences on the spiritual life, I have been able to discuss the deepest of all questions; and in overflowing meetings at night, to win many for Christ.

The experience has shown me what a vast field of labour lies in these directions, to which I may perhaps some day return. But now, all my heart turns to Christ Church, to which I must give my best, for so long as strength of heart and mind and body permits.

Between this date and April 1, I go to Germany, and shall be thankful if my friends will remember me—Berlin, March 1-7; Breslau, 8-13; Frankfurt, 15-20; Wiesbaden, 21-24; Düsseldorf, 24, 25; Hamburg, 26-29.

As He has sufficed, so He will suffice; but to man, the task in front seems the most difficult of all.

I confidently ask my friends for their continued earnest prayer. F. B. Meyer.

THE BACUP MISSION.

ONE of the series of missions arranged by the National Council of Free Churches to be held in Lancashire and Yorkshire was held at Bacup from the 14th to the 19th inst., and has been attended with great spiritual quickening. Rev. F. B. Meyer was the missioner. Into the short space of six days, he crowded nineteen services, and it is generally held that they have been unique in the history of the town.

Each evening there was a rally of the various church workers, except on Thursday, when Mr. Meyer preached the closing sermon. Each afternoon a chaste and beautiful address on the spiritual life was given, at which the attendance steadily grew. The Sunday gave Mr. Meyer the opportunity for four remarkable services, commencing in the morning at eight with a meeting for Sunday-school teachers and lay preachers. In the afternoon the Mechanics' Hall was crowded for a men's meeting; and after all the services in the churches, the largest Wesleyan Chapel in the town was filled for a Gospel service.

The various representative conferences were held in Ebenezer schoolroom. Saturday was temperance evening; Monday, Free Church Council evening; on Tuesday the Sunday-school Union gathering was held; and Wednesday was devoted to a Christian Endeavour and Guild Rally. Mr. Meyer wisely employed the ancient Socratic method, and thus elicited from the officers of the various organizations much valuable information as to work and methods. He admitted he had something to learn from Lancashire on some points—and the sound and sane counsel he gave will result in greater activity and more vigorous propogandism. He found each organization well alive, though there are still "worlds to conquer" in every case. At one noon hour Mr. Meyer held a large evangelistic service in one of the mills, and had an attentive and appreciative audience.

The object of the Mission, as stated in the circular letter issued by the Free Church Council, was "to lead ministers, church officers and members, to enlarged consecration of life, and fuller equipment for service." It is certain this has been accomplished, and it is believed that the result will be seen in days and years to come. The eager attention during the last address will not soon be forgotten, for probably 1,000 people consecrated themselves afresh to God and His service. The prayers of the whole of the twenty-three Free Churches in the town of Bacup will follow him in his succeeding work. J. E. S.

From Our Readers.

"AN INDIAN PRIESTESS."

DEAR SIR,—I have been reading with the greatest interest the account of "Chundra Lela," the Indian priestess, in The Christian of February 12. I feel I must write and tell you that I never in my life read anything like it; it is the most marvellous story ever written, I should say. It shows how vain is anything we may try to do. "Only Christ can satisfy." I never heard of a woman baptizing in such circumstances. But why not? If a follower of the Master, I am sure He blessed that service with His presence.

I have been a reader of The Christian many years, and follow up Mr. Meyer's notes and reading every day, and find them most helpful. But I have never read anything to equal the story to which I refer. I have copied it out, and shall, by God's help, make use of it to the edifying of others when I have an opportunity to speak, as I sometimes do. The account of that heathen woman makes one feel utterly ashamed of oneself. Having had the privilege of living in a Christian country all my life, what have I suffered for Christ? Nothing at all! I trust many of your readers may be blessed through reading the account of Chundra Lela.—I remain yours, &c.,

THE FOURTH GOSPEL.

DEAR SIR,—In your impression of February 12, you mention Dr. Torrey's interview with a man who assured him that "all the leading scholars had given up the Johnannine authorship of the Gospel of John." These scholars, alike in early ages and more recent times, considered that Gospel as a work of fiction, of the second century; some dating it in the first half, and some in the latter half of the century. It is much to be regretted that, of late years, some from whom it was not to have been expected, have again opened a question which has been so fully discussed as to deserve being regarded as settled, once and for ever.

What is certainly an argument of no small weight against the theory of its being a fabrication, may be drawn from the consecutive chapters which give the narrative of two conversations of our Lord, in each case with a single individual. These are recorded in the third and fourth chapters of the Gospel. There could not possibly be a greater contrast than is presented in these two conversations, in all the circumstances of each respectively, but most of all, in the characters of the two with whom our Lord conversed. The one was a "ruler of the Jews"—recognized by Jesus as "the teacher of Israel"; the other was an abandoned woman, coming, for very shame, to a well-mouth at noon, when she would be sure to meet none of her countrywomen, and she—a Samaritan.

On the theory that the Gospel is a fiction, to whom would the writer have made our Lord say, "except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God;" "Marvel not that I said unto thee, 'Ye must be born again'"? And, to whom would he have made him say, "God is a Spirit; and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth?" Can anyone conceive of a writer of fiction putting these words as they are addressed respectively in the Fourth Gospel? The question answers itself. The argument that must be deduced is so strong, that very possibly it may have found a place in the discussion on the authorship; but if so, it has escaped my limited observation. When Mr. Moody was here in 1883 he was much impressed by it. The narrative as we have it was recorded, because these conversations took place.

The question of the authorship of the Gospel of John is far more than one of merely literary interest. The disposition on the part of some writers to question whether the writer of that Gospel was "the disciple whom Jesus loved" in the days of His flesh, when he could lay his head on his Master's bosom, and who in his old age—all his fellow Apostles gone—could still say, "Truly our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ," is matter of deep regret—a regret too sadly justified by what will recur to the memory of readers who have watched occurrences in recent developments of New Testament theology.—I remain yours, &c., David McLaren.

Licensing Opposition.—The National United Temperance Council has issued a cheap edition (3d.) of the "Handy Guide to Licence-Opposition," by Mr. C. Pinhorn. The work is an excellent means of obtaining information in concise, practical form for those temperance workers who are specially devoting themselves to this phase of the movement. The grounds on which new applications and renewals may be opposed are set forth, and practical hints are given within a small compass as to the best method of engineering the opposition so as to obtain the most effective results.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

THIRD WEEK OF THE SCOTTISH CAMPAIGN.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.)

THE mission is touching every class of society in the city. Men and women have been hopefully dealt with at the Drill Hall Free Breakfast, of whom none anticipated any good outcome save those who were filled with amazement at the grace of God to themselves. Several girls have professed to find the Saviour at the evening services, whose homes are among the most questionable surroundings in the city. On the other hand, the records of the meetings on the afternoon and evening of the Lord's Day tell of persons of education and refinement being led to seek and find salvation in just the same way as the outcast and the wanderer.

Men and women alike came to the Empire Theatre in such numbers as to crowd every corner long before the time. Those who had been blessed before brought friends for whose salvation they had been praying; while signs abounded that women and girls had been labouring hard to fill the men's gathering with their brothers, sons, husbands, and friends. Dr. Torrey is no believer in easy ways of bringing men out into open confession for Christ. "What it costs to be a Christian" was shown to be a great deal, but not worthy to be compared with what is gained at the Cross. The decisions for Christ at each meeting were numerous. Between the two meetings considerably over a hundred names were registered, and the persons placed in communication with ministers of congregations near their homes; but it is known that as many more hopefully professed a change of heart, of whom no record was obtained.

TYPICAL CASES OF CONVERSION.

Throughout the days that followed requests for prayer sent in showed how many were giving true evidence of the new-found life by a yearning for the souls of their dear ones. Parents were rejoicing in many quarters. A few days later, a gentleman sat down in a tram car, and told out of a full heart how his boys of seventeen and eighteen had both come home on Sabbath evening to tell him the good news of their conversion. At the women's meeting, a nurse from the country, who had come to the city for the week-end only, was among the converts. Her sister and another friend who accompanied her shared the blessing. The latter went home and persuaded her two sons to go to the men's meeting, and the three spent the time in prayer for the two boys and their father. The worker who dealt with these three spoke to another young lady who had also come for the first time, and left rejoicing in the Lord Jesus. Christian medical men and others tell of those who have not been at the meetings, and who scarcely know what is meant by spiritual blessing, who are yet filled with a longing to live better lives than they are doing, and are unusually ready to talk about the matter.

One of the touching events of the week was an invitation to any workers who could find it convenient to attend the funeral of a young man converted at the theatre on the Sabbath of the week before. Being suddenly taken ill with appendicitis, he passed to his rest, with a clear testimony to the nearness of his Lord in the hour of trial and death.

From Monday evening onward it was necessary to lock the gates some time before the hour to begin the meeting, large numbers being turned away. A touching sermon was preached from the text, "Ye will not come unto Me, that ye might have life;" and the truth appeared to be specially effectual as it was driven home along the line of absolute personal responsibility for remaining out of Christ. "No man is lost because it is the will of God that he should be; therefore, if any man is lost it is his own fault. It is not because you cannot come that you are outside: it is because you will not come." In describing the cause which keep men away from Christ, a terrible picture was drawn of the working of hate in the human heart, and its effects in dragging down those who nourish it. Pride was spoken of as causing more people to be lost than open sin.

In many ways Dr. Torrey's anxiety to see professing Christians actively at work comes out. Asking those to show it in some way who were burdened in heart for the salvation of others, and receiving a ready response, he remarked, "Friends, if this is true, we shall see a great work in Edinburgh yet." The preached Word had been with power, and by the grace of God the front benches were better filled at the after meeting than on any previous week evening. Throughout the mission there have been many more coming out to profess actual decision than going to the inquiry room.

Tuesday evening brought a letter about a woman who had been converted at the theatre on Sabbath, and her husband at the hall on Monday. The text for the evening was, "What shall I do then with Jesus?" The things that depend on our answer and action are (1) acceptance before God—John iii. 18; (2) finding peace—Rom. v. 1; finding joy—1 Pet. i. 8. Do the right thing with Jesus Christ, and you get everything that is worth having for time and eternity. Among those who professed conversion, as on the previous evening, the youthful element predominated; but there seemed to be a thoroughly intelligent appreciation of the nature of the transaction with God. One case was that of a man of maturer years. His wife had persuaded him to attend three or four times, but he never came quite sober. She persevered in prayer and effort, and at length her faith was rewarded, and her cup filled to overflowing, by hearing from his lips the words of confession of Jesus.

On Wednesday the outside crowd was so great that Dr. Torrey once more made a direct appeal for Christians who were in the hall to go and hold a prayer meeting, that some more of the unsaved might be accommodated. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved" was the message; and the outcome was unto life eternal in a number of cases. In addition to those who were led to definite decision, and to another company who went to the inquiry-room, the workers found among those who lingered in the hall a readier disposition for spiritual conversation.

A BACKSLIDER'S JOY RESTORED.

A woman who left on Wednesday without giving her name told on Thursday of the blessing she had received. Converted many years ago, she had found her way back, but had been long without peace or comfort. Having now yielded fully she was basking in the blessedness of the family of God. "Why tarriest thou?" was Thursday's text; and at the very outset Dr. Torrey asked for a few moments of silence, during which he charged every one who was not a believer in the Lord, to face the question. He then dealt with typical answers, representing those who (1) are not convinced, (2) wish to enjoy the world a little longer, (3) are waiting for feeling, (4) are waiting for more conviction of sin, (5) are waiting till the approach of death. In one bench five young men sat down together, and as soon as the opportunity for confession was given, four of these rose to their feet. When praying ones were asked to join them the fifth rose also, showing that the band were now united under the one Master. A grey-haired woman near them could not see how the way could be so simple; but her hungry, yearning look proved how near the kingdom she also was. When thanking God for the women, the young men, and the children who had been saved, Dr. Torrey voiced a great cry to God for the men of the city. On the Sabbath evenings there has been a movement among the men, but many have come forward at other times.

ANSWERING QUESTIONS.

At the meetings for men in the middle of the day Monday and Tuesday were devoted to "Infidelity; its Causes, Consequences, and Cure." The audiences continued to be good; but on Wednesday the church was filled. Dr. Torrey had intimated for some days that he would answer questions connected with the inspiration of the Bible, intellectual difficulties of belief, and kindred topics; and a large number of letters had been sent in.

Before taking up the questions, a letter was read from a young man who said that a number of those known to him, whose minds had been unsettled by present-day influences, had been attending the noon meetings, and admitted that they now saw things in quite a different light. At another meeting one of the converts stood up and said that the lectures on the Bible as the Word of God had been the immediate cause of his yielding to the Saviour.

The first "difficulty" was that of a man who urged that, instead of teaching that the Bible "is the Word of God," Dr. Torrey should say that "the Word of God is to be found in the Bible." "It is!" he cried. "But where in the Bible is it to be found? Everywhere! This is a favourite refuge of those who wish to sit on the fence, ready to get down on either side at convenience."

"Whole writings in the Bible are not, nor ever can be God's Word. In some parts you have the word of the devil." Dr. Torrey replied that when it is said that the Bible is the Word of God it is not meant that everything is quoted with approval. "We do not say He said it, when He says the devil spoke; but we do say He spoke the truth when he told how it was done. The Bible is an infallible record of what different persons have spoken. What the devil said is not true, but it is true that the devil said it."

"There are some passages you cannot read in public." "That is true, and it is one of the good things of the Bible. There are some things you need to hear that cannot be told to you in public. The Bible deals with sin, and pictures it just as it is. I have a book which I wish every married man and woman would read, but I would not read it in public."

In one letter the names of several well-known writers and teachers were quoted as differing from Dr. Torrey on certain points. "It is not a question of human authority. That is one of my objections to the present school of criticism. They always appeal to authority when there is not one of their arguments that depends on Hebrew scholarship. It is a question of literary criticism; and they have introduced into Biblical criticism methods which have been rejected in every other department of literature."

ATTITUDE TO EVOLUTION.

To a correspondent who thought it a help to faith to regard the early chapters of Genesis as mythological, in the same way as the Parable of the Prodigal Son, Dr. Torrey replied, "No. It is a dodge to get out of a difficulty. Wherever there is parable, interpret it as parable; but wherever anything is given as history, interpret it as history. If it cannot be interpreted in that way, discredit the book in which it is contained." Taking up the declaration that "no man who knows what science or history is would dream of saying that Genesis i. is either science or history," Dr. Torrey quoted Sir W. Dawson's declaration that the chapter is scientifically accurate; and James D. Dana's expression of belief that the Bible is the Word of God because of the wonderful accord between Genesis and the latest discoveries of science. "I have not blindly scoffed at Evolution, because I can see how a man can believe in evolution and be an orthodox Christian. Progress from lower to higher forms is taught as plainly in the Bible as elsewhere. But I have given up Evolution, because there is not, and in the nature of things there could not be, a single established case of observation of the passage of one species into another."

With regard to the interpretation of Jonah as allegory, Matthew xii. 40 was quoted as showing that Jesus Christ pronounced it to be history. If that is allegory, the story of the Resurrection is allegory.

On the point of putting the Bible into a secondary place, with the Holy Spirit as the living power behind the Book, Dr. Torrey asked, "Where is the voice of the Spirit to be found if not in the words of the Book?"

Speaking of the reappearance of Samuel to Saul, it was pointed out that the woman of Endor only undertook to use her arts, that she was as much scared as Saul was when Samuel appeared, and that Samuel refused to speak through her.

"You have made no allusion to what are termed the limitations of Christ." "Whatever these may be, it is plain in the doctrine of the Kenosis that Christ emptied Himself of His glory, not of His knowledge (John iii. 34; vi. 38; vii. 16, 17; viii. 28, 29; xii. 49). Jesus Christ claims absolute infallibility as a teacher, that His doctrine was directly given Him of God, and that He spoke the words of God."

Realizing the primary importance of the subject in dealing with a body of men among whom religious doubt is represented in many forms, Dr. Torrey devoted the noon hour on Thursday and Friday to a discussion of the question, "Did Jesus Christ really rise from the dead?" His hearers followed him with the closest attention as he pointed out the various classes of Christian evidences by which this fact can be as thoroughly attested as any in the history of the world.

HYMNS THAT ARE BEING BLESSED.

At the afternoon meetings the work of the Holy Spirit has continued to engage attention. On Monday the topic was "The Renewal or Regeneration of Men by the Holy Spirit," and as the Divine plan was unfolded by which men are made new creatures, it was brought home to some as never before that the presence in the world of a Person possessing this power is one of the most cheering truths in the Word of God.

On Tuesday some interesting testimonies were given by those who had received blessing. One lady told how she had come to a meeting in great trouble, and found deliverance during the singing of the chorus, "The Best Friend to have is Jesus." Mr. Alexander explained that on the particular occasion referred to the hymn was sung at the request of a worker who knew two people who had been blessed by it on a previous day. Among other hymns which had been used as channels of blessing it was specially interesting to hear mention made of such an old favourite as "Come to the Saviour, make no delay." But the audiences were more reticent than those which the evangelists had met in America, Australia, and elsewhere. "You Scotch people," said Mr. Alexander, "must get to talking more about these things." Dr. Torrey mentioned that among those who came out to the front on the previous evening were four members of the staff at the hotel where he was living. A Christian of seventy-four came forward afterwards to tell how he had been helped to a clearer view of his privileges as a child of God. "It is glorious to have the victory; but victory must always be in the power of the Spirit."

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE OF DR. TORREY.

The announcement that on Wednesday and Thursday afternoon "The Baptism of the Holy Ghost" would be explained, drew larger audiences than before. Dr. Torrey carefully explained, as he had done before, that he was not standing out for the use of any particular word or phrase; he would rather have the right thing by any name, than the wrong thing by the right name. His teaching was the outcome of a personal experience, and that again, the outcome of study of the Word of God.

The points taken up regarding the gift of the Spirit were (1) its definiteness, shown by the fact that the disciples knew when the days of waiting were over; (2) its distinctness from regeneration; (3) its connection with testimony and service; (4) it is not given primarily with a view to our own holiness, but with reference to others. The steps by which the experience may be obtained—(1) acceptance of Jesus Christ as Master and Lord; (2) renunciation of all sin; (3) open confession; (4) obedience (Acts v. 32); (5) thirst (John vii. 37-39); (6) asking (Luke xi. 13); (7) simple faith (Mark xi. 24). No matter how definite the promise, the gift is not yours until you believe it (1 John v. 14).

CHILDREN BETTER WORKERS THAN MEN.

Fresh ground was opened up by the evangelists on Friday afternoon, when the Central Hall (Tollcross) was packed from floor to ceiling with young people of all ages and classes. At the outset Mr. Alexander won all hearts by singling out two little boys, and persuading them to sing a verse of "Tell me the old, old story" by themselves. The Scripture lesson consisted of the memorizing of Isaiah liii. 5; and after this had been done "our" was changed into "my," and "I am" substituted for "we are," causing the teaching to be of the most personal character.

The topic of the address was, "What a child can do" (2 Kings v. 3). In simple, telling words the truth was driven home, the faces and close attention of the children showing how clearly they entered into the spirit of the message. One touching reference was to a meeting at which a man had protested against children of ten or twelve being encouraged to go to the inquiry room; but found his own nine-year-old girl weeping and begging for leave to go in, because "He was wounded for my transgressions." Taking Polycarp's confession at the age of ninety-five that he had served the Lord for eighty-six years, his Christian life must have begun at the age of nine.

Dr. Torrey's points were (1) that children can be Christians; (2) that they can pray; (3) that they can live beautiful Christian lives; (4) that they can give testimony for Christ; (5) that they can plead with others. After every precaution had been taken to prevent the boys and girls from simply following one another impulsively, about three hundred professed to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour, Lord, and Master. Telling this to a crowded adult meeting in the evening, Dr. Torrey said he believed this meant much more than the conversion of the same number of adults. After comparing the average length of service which may reasonably be expected from a child of ten and a grown man converted at the same time, he said he had been told that a man can do so much more, but in his experience a Christian child did more than most Christian men. Men will go to church, and go to church, and nothing for the good of others will come of it, because they never open their mouths for Christ. On the other hand he had never known a converted child who did not get to work.

CALL TO PERSONAL WORK.

"Excuses" (Luke xiv. 15-24) was the subject of a powerful closing address for the week; and at the close Dr. Torrey spoke some of the plainest words he has yet addressed to the Christians who are attending the meetings. They come in such numbers as to prevent the unsaved from getting in—a specimen case having just been reported of the genuine seeker who three evenings in succession was turned at the gate. After a pointed appeal to bestir themselves in the quest for souls, a marked change was seen; and Dr. Torrey added, "You are doing better than I have ever seen you do; but there is less personal work in Edinburgh than in any other city I have visited." Mr. Alexander said afterwards that as soon as the workers busied themselves with those round about, an entirely new spirit came into the gathering. All through the hall there was grain ripe for the sickle, and before the after-meeting closed a goodly number of men and women, young and middle-aged, had found voice and words to express allegiance to their new Master.

OVER A THOUSAND STUDENTS.

The Edinburgh University Christian Union obtained from the senate special permission to hold a meeting of students last Sabbath in the McEwan Hall, where some years ago Mr. John R. Mott addressed a similar gathering.

An audience of over a thousand young men had now met to hear about spiritual things. "The Man Christ Jesus," was presented to them as the only One who meets the need of educated men; and, while all was not plain sailing, the students showed in their own fashion their approval of the clear and logical argument. Nowhere in this country have the evangelists found a more appreciative audience, as the Gospel was simply preached in song and sermon. Dr. Torrey was naturally more at home in the scholastic surroundings than his colleague, as he recalled his own student days at Yale and in Germany. The simple, frank way in which he related the circumstances of his own first confession of Christ made it plain to the young men that here was a preacher who could fully enter into the difficulties of University life.

After the address, Dr. Torrey explained that he himself was not quite satisfied about the wisdom of asking men to stand up there to confess Christ; he could not conceive of a harder place. When, however, he did so, not a moment was lost. Man after man rose to his feet, acknowledging Christ as Lord and Master for the first time.

In the Empire Theatre, messages of thanksgiving were received for past blessing. The requests for prayer showed how the present movement is touching all classes. A prominent minister in the city sought that God would give him every member of his large Bible class. "A Sinful Woman" expressed her longing that she might be saved from the power of sin. Yet another evidence of the depth of the work was a cry for reconciliation between the members of a family.

In an address on Faith and Confession, Dr. Torrey said: "Real faith always leads to open confession. The faith that does not lead to confession will not lead to salvation. That may not be your Scotch way, but it is God's way; and He is not going to change His plans even to suit any man."

EFFECTS IN THE HOME.

There was a rich harvest after each meeting, the professed converts after the men's meeting alone numbering over two hundred. Mr. J. Farmer Brown related the circumstances under which two men and their wives, who were in the habit of going to the Drill Hall Free Breakfast, were all brought to the Lord. One of the families was Roman Catholic. After hearing the evangelists on Sabbath morning, and receiving an invitation to the other meetings, the husband declined; but the wife went on Friday, and yielded herself to the Saviour. On the Tuesday following the husband was persuaded also to go, with the same blessed outcome, and their home was transformed. Soon the children detected the difference, and questioned their mother as to what was the matter that she should be so happy now, which opened up the way for telling them also about Jesus.

Among the poor children who had confessed Christ last Friday evening, Mr. Farmer Brown questioned one little girl as to the difference it had made. She was shy at first; then said she had been in the habit of calling her little brother bad names, but would not do so any more!

An elder of one of the churches had met Ex-Bailie Brown, and when asked what he thought of the meetings, answered that he approved of everything except the dealing with the people at the close, which he did not like at all. When the name was given him, however, of one prominent citizen whom he knew, and who had undergone the great change, he admitted that there might be something in it after all.

"Dead—yet Speaketh."

A Reminiscence.

By J. W. C. FEGAN.

IT was twenty-six years ago—in the earlier history of the work—when our headquarters were at Deptford, with its long-shore shipbuilding yards (where Peter the Great wielded the adze), its soap factories, its chemical works, its firewood depôts, &c.—where some old friends, from force of habit, even now address letters to me, which finally come to hand with Post Office endorsements "Gone Away," "Try Southwark Street," &c.

In one of my all-night cruises in search of homeless waifs, I had found myself in Whitechapel, and while exploring some carts, bull's eye lantern in hand, discovered a boy so sound asleep that I had to shake him well to wake him up, and so benumbed with cold, that when I did succeed in waking him I had to lift him on to his feet and hold him for some minutes, swaying to and fro till he got the use of his legs, while he kept knuckling his eyes, dazzled by the glare of my lantern, to see whether I was a policeman or watchman or what not.

When I asked him if he was ready for a cup of coffee and a chunk of cake at a night coffee-stall, he grinned. When we got to the coffee-stall, and the steaming coffee was poured out, and a substantial slice of cake was put into his hand, he grinned still more. A remarkable feature in that boy's case was his perennial grin, morning, noon and night—getting up and going to bed—bathing and drilling—at meals and in school—at play and at work, the same nonchalant, imperturbable grin seemed to spring from the corners of Willie's mouth and spread all over his face.

On our way home, he confided to me that in two large yards, in which a number of railway vans were drawn up for the night, a lot of boys used to sleep, but they had been frightened out of one yard through a ferocious yard-dog, and had been disturbed and kicked and cuffed by a fresh watchman, who had not yet fallen into the easy-going, laissez faire habits of his class in the other yard, so that the most venturesome only had just begun to make it their sleeping place again.

The next night, in company with one of my boys in uniform, I was surveying this latter yard with its boarded fence, perhaps eight feet high, when a policeman on his beat sauntered up and asked if he could be of any service.

When I told him my quest, he pooh-poohed the idea that any boys could be sleeping out in the vans in that yard at all. "Watchman always about, sir. Besides, fence too high, couldn't get in, sir."

However, I felt perfect confidence in my informant's good faith, so I said, "Well, we can soon settle the point. If you don't mind, constable, stooping down, I'll put my handkerchief on your coat not to dirty it, just step on your back and be over the fence in a jiffy." He smiled good-humouredly, and, bending down, said,

"ALL RIGHT, SIR. OVER YOU GO!"

From the top of the fence I could step easily to the floor of one of the vans, which almost filled the yard. Presently I could hear the heavy breathing of some boys sleeping under the tarpaulins, and every now and then the convulsive gasping for breath of others not so well protected, as they shuddered with cold in their slumbers.

I carefully woke up the first boy I discovered so as not to disturb the others, and gently reassuring him of my friendly intentions, led him, as I thought, to the point where I had climbed over, but I had slightly miscalculated the direction in the maze of vans, so that when I looked over the fence I had to whistle to the constable and whisper, "Halloa! Look out, constable, here's one," as I gently dropped my quarry into his hands.

I was soon back with another, and another—till at last the constable was guarding eleven ranged with official precision against the fence, when I dropped over the fence without having caught a glimpse of the zealous watchman.

Very soon I had chartered a four-wheeler—eight boys inside, three on the roof. My boy and I sat with the driver. It was a raw night, and I was cold and weary after a busy day's work and a preaching engagement afterwards—but I preferred the outside!

This was a most encouraging haul, and after I had got eight of these boys settled down in the Home, and had restored three of them to their relations, I fixed upon a night to explore the other yard, and took with me a friend, my superintendent, and, at his urgent request, my protégé, Willie.

We had searched a lot of vans without any trace of a boy, and were beginning to thread our way back, when suddenly we heard savage growling and deep baying, then in the distance. As the ominous sounds grew nearer, we rushed to the fence with some very painful knocks en route from projecting portions of the vans. I clambered up a van, jumped on to the fence, and dropped over first—my friend, who was shorter than I, followed a second or so later, and just as he drew his last leg over and dropped, a huge dog, mad with rage, flew at him, and missing him scrambled up to the driver's dickey, and glared and barked at us in furious frenzy. I have had much more respect for watch-dogs than watchmen ever since!

Willie soon settled down, and with his insinuating smile became a great favourite with officers and boys. His appearance improved wonderfully. He was very eager to learn, and made capital progress in school.

After he had been with us a few months my office-boy came to me one day with word that a clergyman wanted to see me. I told him to show him up to my little room, which answered for office and sitting-room, while a corner partitioned off, which my friends dubbed "the kennel," served as my bedroom.

Presently, with a couple of strides or so, an athletic-looking man stood at my side and greeted me in a voice that you would expect to hear on the quarter deck, and with an iron hand-grip that made me wince. He was the strangest man, for a parson, I had ever met. I took him all over the Home, and was struck with his shrewd but kindly queries—his bluff but sympathetic comments. I, in my turn, looked him up and down, and came to the conclusion that he was a splendid fellow.

Then he blurted out, "Look here, Fegan, I can't go back to my bachelor parsonage with its empty rooms and leave you living here overcrowded with these boys from kitchen to attic. I can't do it. I shouldn't be able to rest. I must relieve you of one boy at any rate. I must take him at once. I can't go home without him—but, I say, pick me out an easy one, old fellow."

I sent for Willie, who turned up of course with his chronic smile. In about a quarter of an hour he was outfitted and was trotting by the side of my clerical caller, who was striding along at a five-miles-an-hour gait to the railway station.

WHO WAS IT?

Who was my breezy, sympathetic visitor? James Hannington, the martyred Bishop of Eastern Equatorial Africa. Five or six years afterwards he left home, wife, children, friends, all that a man naturally clings to, that he might bear the Gospel torch into the centre of the Dark Continent.

What of faith and prayer, toil and suffering, adventure, sickness, and deliverance was crowded into the following four years I cannot here even outline. It forms one of the most thrilling and pathetic records in the glorious roll of missionary heroism.

On October 29, 1885, after eight days of indescribable agony, as a sick prisoner in a pestilential native hut infested with rats and vermin, the end came. He was led out from the village into the forest, where he found his caravan men, from whom he had been separated, surrounded by soldiers. He was stripped. He knelt to commit his soul to God. A signal was given. The native warriors fell upon the Bishop's carriers with their spears, while two of them, stationed one on each side of him, plunged their spears into his body—and, as Stephen under the stones that beat the life out of his body, so James Hannington, under their spear-thrusts, "fell asleep."

"He being dead yet speaketh."

What message have the life and death of the saintly hero—James Hannington, the Bishop-martyr—for us? Do they not speak to us of the worth of souls, the preciousness of the Gospel, the passion of self-sacrifice?

This hitherto unpublished incident in his noble, generous life—will it not find an echo in many hearts? For his sake, will not many pity the waifs to whom his heart went out in such chivalrous impulse?

What a heritage to one's children such a life!

I was much touched a few days ago by a letter from the son of an old friend, which ran thus:—

"I know that my father used to help you. I should like to follow in his steps and do as he did, and therefore I enclose you a cheque for £10 for the relief of the poor during this cold weather, and will also undertake to supply the necessary funds for the maintenance of one waif in your homes."

May home-life in many fireside circles be sanctified by such kindly thoughts and loving deeds that will be, in years to come, inspiring memories. May it be said of all of us, when by-and-by we are recalled to memory, that in hearts enthused and lives influenced through treasured words and deeds of ours,

"He being dead yet speaketh."

Personalia.

Mr. J. T. Leafe left Tilbury Docks in the P. and O. s.s. Australia, recently, for Sydney, N.S.W., having accepted an invitation from the Wesleyan Central Mission to conduct a mission tour through New South Wales. He will make a prolonged stay, and his address will be—Care of Rev. W. G. Taylor, Centenary Hall, York Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

Rev. J. Gregory Mantle is expected home early in May, after his tour in India, Burma, and Ceylon. Mr. Mantle has secured a great variety of striking pictures of missionary scenes and Eastern life, and will deliver lectures throughout Great Britain describing his tour, illustrated by cinematograph and dissolving views. Application should be made early to his secretary, 58, Lewisham Park, London, S.E.

The many friends of the work founded by the late Mr. Quintin Hogg at the Polytechnic, Regent Street, W., will learn with satisfaction that the Council have unanimously decided to elevate Mr. J. E. K. Studd to the presidency of the institution. There are now 15,000 students at the Polytechnic, with an average evening attendance of between 3,000 and 4,000. Mr. Douglas Hogg, the eldest son of the founder, takes Mr. Studd's place as vice-president.

Rev. Edward Isaac is returning from Australia, and expects to reach London the last week in March. During a residence of twenty-two years in Melbourne Mr. Isaac has held the pastorate of three influential churches, and great blessing has attended his labours. He filled the position of President of the Baptist Union in 1897, and up to the time of his departure from Victoria has been an active member of its principal committees. Mr. Issac will be glad to supply vacant Baptist pulpits. His address is 44, Coolhurst Road, Crouch End, London, N.

Miss McLean.—It is a pleasure to record that, on December 20, on the recommendation of Baron Hayashi, Japanese Minister in London, their Imperial Majesties the Emperor and Empress of Japan were graciously pleased to confer on Miss McLean the Order of Ho-Kwansho (the Crown of Jewels), in acknowledgment of her devotion to the squadron attending the Coronation of King Edward, and all crews of the many warships built in England. The Order in question is the highest given to ladies of the Empire, and Miss McLean is the first and only English lady to hold it.

Lectures on Romanism.—A series of lectures in reply to Romanist propaganda have been delivered in Kensington Town Hall. Rev. W. C. Minnie recently dealt with "Romanism, its Claims and Crimes." A number of written questions from Roman Catholics were handed to the Chairman (Mr. S. W. Brett) at the conclusion of the lecture. These were answered to the satisfaction of the meeting by Rev. C. Stirling, Mr. W. Walsh, the Chairman, and the lecturer. On the same evening Mr. D. S. Hyslop delivered a lecture, "Why I am not a Roman Catholic," in the Congregational Church, Lancaster Gate, W. Rev. A. Giles presided.

THE STORY OF GOLDEN SISTER.*

THIS is the title of one of the chapters of a book named "The Light of the Morning," and as I think you may like to hear about little Golden Sister, I will try to put the story into language which you will understand.

Golden Sister was born and lived in China, the Chinese translation of her name being Geng-Mue. But though she had a pretty name, she was a very unhappy little girl. When quite a child she was sold to a woman who wanted a wife for her son. As her boy-husband grew older he treated her unkindly and roughly, for in China they think girls and women are of no account. Golden Sister had to pass through a time of great suffering when her feet were bound, to make them what the Chinese consider the correct size for a woman. Her toes were crushed and broken more and more each day, and you can imagine how that would hurt; but these poor heathen people don't know any better until they have been taught, and so thousands of little children are suffering untold misery.

One day a missionary came to the house where Golden Sister lived, and told them about the true and loving God, who wanted to make them good and happy. Golden Sister's mother-in-law listened, and for a while gave up her idols, but, alas, soon went back to them. It is easy to start following God, but hard to keep steadily on. One day, on waking up, the mother found herself nearly blind. Her friends put it all down to the visit of the missionary, saying they knew harm would come to all those who listened to the "worshipping-God-person." They quarrelled about it, and in trying to separate them Golden Sister was knocked down, and her arm badly hurt.

For eighteen months it was allowed to get worse and worse, and nothing was done for the poor girl, whose health became quite broken. How different is this to the treatment which you receive. Why you do not have to wait eighteen minutes when you hurt yourself before something is done to help you!

Having a bad arm, Golden Sister could not do much work, and, in addition to the pain, she was each day taunted with being useless. Her husband hoped she would die, but as she did not, and her crying annoyed him, he thought he would take her to the "healing-sickness sister" (as they called the medical missionary), and leave her there until she was cured, and able to come home and cook his rice.

Poor girl, she stood before the missionary sobbing and crying, "For me have pity," fearing to look up, and not thinking that anyone could possibly want to love and help her.

She was sent to the hospital, but was a rather trying patient. She was delighted at the kindness she received, but refused to have a necessary operation performed on her arm. Each day she was taught about Jesus and His love for her, but though she listened attentively, all she would promise was, "If my arm gets well, I will worship the true God."

Don't you think that sometimes you and I act just like this? We want to go our own way and do just as we like, and yet we expect God to bless us as much as He does those who are truly walking in His ways. We as good as say, "If God will give me what I want, then I will love and serve Him." Let us learn a lesson from Golden Sister.

Of course her arm did not get cured, as she continued to hold out against the operation. One day her husband appeared at the hospital, and said he had heard of a god who could cure his wife's arm. Geng-Mue believed him and went to seek this wonderful idol.

For some months the missionary lost sight of her, but was one day able to visit her home. The mother-in-law opened the door. "May I see Geng-Mue," he asked, but before the mother had time to reply an eager voice from within begged him to enter. There in a very dirty room (the Chinese think if they clean their houses it will disturb air and water spirits!) lay Golden Sister. She was very weak and ill. For months she had tried cures which gave her great pain and only made her worse, and now she was dying. But a very happy thing had taken place. Finding how useless had been the idols to help or comfort her during the nineteen years she had spent on earth, she had now made up her mind to worship the true God. All her wilfulness had broken down, but the Doctor had not been sent for, and it was now too late to cure her. Her mother-in-law said that instead of crying and complaining, Geng-Mue was now quite happy and contented, and loved to sing over and over again the hymns she had learnt at the hospital. One of her favourite ones was, "Jesus loves me, this I know." Most of you children have sung this hymn many times. I wonder if you understand its meaning in the same way that Golden Sister did! If so, it will make you glad and happy, too.

Before she died, she asked her family to gather round her bed, and pleaded with them to give up their idols, and worship the true God, and we hope that some, at least, will do so.

So ended Golden Sister's life, but it was such a happy end, that we need not be sorry for her, but only need to pray that many others all the world over may learn the secret of her happiness. May all Uncle Tom's Searchers learn it too; then

> Closer yet, and closer the golden bonds shall be,
> Enlinking all who love our Lord in pure sincerity;
> And wider yet and wider shall the circling glory glow,
> As more and more are taught of God that mighty love to know.

Children's Patience.

Must I be patient while a child?
Do you expect that I can be
So perfect now, while I am young,
As ne'er to speak impatiently?

Parents, of course, should patient be,
Though I so oft their patience try!
They need not scold nor punish me
E'en when I in sad tempers fly!

My teachers, too, I really think
Should patient be with girls and boys
Who do not care for learning much,
But like to play and make a noise!

Oh, yes, the older people, all
Must make allowances for me!
And, when I am grown up and wise,
No doubt I then shall patient be.

. . . . .

But "Ye have need of patience, child,"
Speaks clear a little voice within;
And Conscience says the "text is mine"—
To learn it you must now begin.

You must be patient with your task,
Whether at home or school 'tis set;
You must be patient, even though
The other children tease or fret.

. . . . .

Oh dear! I fear 'tis very hard
To practise patience every day!
I'm sure 'tis quite impossible
Unless to God for help I pray.

Impatient words are sure to rise
When I am called from play to task;
Or, when friends much too busy are
To give me all the help I ask.

Yet, there's another text I know—
"My God shall all your need supply."
So, when God says I patience need,
'Tis just to Him I have to fly.

So patiently I'll do my work,
And patiently I'll suffer pain;
And, as I often talk too fast,
My tongue to patience, too, I'll train.

Although this seems so hard at first,
In time, no doubt, 'twill easier be;
And then to God I'll give the praise
For teaching me so patiently.

Christ's Teaching about Blessedness. (Matt. v. 1-12).

HERE are eight Beatitudes—an octave of Blessedness! The Lord lived inside the City of Blessedness, and He here reveals to all men the eight gates by which the city may be entered. In the midst of this busy world, that calm and holy city stands; one of its gates is opposite each one of us, and we have only to go straight in front of our own door to enter, that we may go no more out for ever.

For myself, I cannot go in by the Gate of Poverty of Spirit, for I am not humble enough; nor by the Gate of the Mourners, for I am not grieved enough for my own sins, or the sins of others; nor by the Gate of the Meek, for I resent injury; nor by the Gates of Mercy, or Purity, or Peace; but I think I may claim to enter by the fourth gate, for I hunger and thirst after Righteousness. And as I creep in by this gate, I find myself inside the city, and in the company of all holy souls that have entered by any of the other gates. For in the Heavenly City, to enter by any gate is equivalent to having entered by all; and one grace, inwrought by the Holy Spirit, will ultimately lead on to all the rest.

What is Blessedness? According to the Lord's teaching, it is a condition or state of heart. Outward circumstances are not mentioned, unless it be reproach and persecution, as though they were matters of perfect indifference. A beggar, like Lazarus, may be in the City of Blessedness, while he lies at the rich man's gate; while Dives, lolling on his damask, may be for ever excluded from its gates of pearl. Blessedness is altogether independent of our outward lot, whether prosperous or perplexed, rich or poor.

Blessedness begins and ends with a contented recognition of the Royalty of Christ (3, 10). It consists in comfort; in the power of seeing the good in everything, and so inheriting the earth; in being satisfied, in obtaining mercy, in seeing God and being called His sons and daughters. Is it not worth while to strive to enter in at the wide-open doors, which stand open day and night, and at which angels wait to welcome? And if you can say that you really do yearn after better things, hungering and thirsting for more likeness to Christ, and more meetness for His kingdom, and if that desire is something more than a passing whim, and really represents the purpose of your life, you may account yourself as being already admitted within the gates of the Blessed Life.

When the Master spoke as He did, we must not suppose that He allocated the award of Blessedness to the possessors of certain attributes with an arbitrary and royal prerogative. He simply declared what was true in the very nature of things. He did not say, If you are pure and merciful, I will step into your life and make you happy and blessed; but He unfolded what is true in the very nature of things, and said, To be true, pure, merciful and meek, is to have in your possession the seed-germs of the harvest of Blessedness. In the bud is contained the fruit. It is not that if we are good and pure we shall be some day blessed, but that to be good and pure is to be blessed here and now. In the possession of these virtues, we are blessed. To be pure, to be lovely, to be sweet and gentle—is to be blessed. Heaven begins here; if it doesn't, it is a grave question whether it will begin anywhere.

Will you turn from this wonderful enumeration of Christian qualities to Gal. v. 22? You will find all of them, though with other names in the list of the fruit of the Spirit. In fact, they are all the product of the Spirit's work. We shall never be able to realize them apart from Him. May He secure in us and through us a well-balanced and full orbed character. F. B. M.

Paul at Ephesus (Acts xix. 13-20).

Golden Text—Acts xix. 17.

EPHESUS was at this date (A.D. 53-56) the most important commercial city in Asia Minor, and was surrounded by eight or nine flourishing towns. It was famous for the Temple of Diana and the practice of occult art. Population two-thirds Oriental. Paul had to encounter there not only the intellectual and refined superstitions of Greece, but the gross and darker imaginations of Asia, for the whole city was swayed by astrologers, magicians, and agents of evil from all parts. An emporium for the devil's business (Eph. ii. 1-8. The gospel of truth was preached, men and women "sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise" (Eph. i. 13), "the Word of God circulated and became a power in the lives of the people (Heb. iv. 12), and Ephesus became one of the three greatest centres of the Christian faith, and remained so for over three centuries—Jerusalem, Antioch, Ephesus. At Ephesus Paul worked with the tentmakers, preached in the synagogue; when driven thence, opened a mission in a schoolroom where Jew and Gentile would be alike free to attend.

Miracle. Magic.

Demoniacal possession, always a reality, was evidenced mostly during the time of Christ on earth and His apostles. Why? (Rev. xii. 12, with Matt. viii. 29.) Paul's credentials (Mark xvi. 17-20) inflamed the avarice of the exorcists. Ephesus was the hot-bed of magic and the black art; training-school for superstition and spiritualism; and the market-place for charms, amulets, and receipts for witchcraft. The "Ephesians letters," famous in history, were slips of parchment bearing mystic signs copied from the image of Diana, worn for success, even by noted wrestlers and generals in battle.

Failure of Fraud.

Motive, hope of glory to themselves, and gain. Personality of the evil spirit (vv. 13, 15; Mark i. 24, 34). "Know" two Greek words, "recognise" as Supreme Being, "acquainted with" as His servant (James ii. 19). "The spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience" (Eph. ii. 2; v. 16). Example forecast of the wages Satan pays for his work (Rom. vi. 23).

Who were the sons of Sceva?

(1) By descent of the chosen race (Ex. xix. 4, 6). (2) Sons of a Levite, separated to God for sacred service (Deut. xxi. 5). (3) Witness for the Lord among the heathen. What were they in Acts xix. 14? (1) Aliens, avowed enemies of God. (2) Weapons, service, and language of Satan. (3) Sons of a Levite sunk more deeply in sin than the idolaters on whose ignorance they had traded. (4) Blasphemers (Luke xii. 47). Their impotence made patent to all. Sin separated from God. What is meant by "backslider?"

Triumph of Truth.

"The word of the Lord Jesus" proclaimed (10). The power of His Name proved through faith (Acts iii. 16). "The name of the Lord Jesus was magnified" (v. 17), (not that of His instrument). The judgment on the Jewish exorcists sounded the danger signal, the enemies daunted, and the adversary's scorn roused even to testimony. Half-hearted believers, searched by the Holy Spirit, laid aside entanglements of their old life, public confession, genuine repentance. Full allegiance at any cost! (1 John i. 9).

The Name of Jesus.

All power to forgive (Acts x. 43)
All power to save (Acts iv. 12).
All power to heal (Acts iii. 6, 16).
All power in prayer (John xvii. 23, 24).
All power in praise (Heb. xiii. 15).
Our rule on earth (Col. iii. 17).
Our diadem in heaven (Rev. xxii. 4).
Our new song in glory (Rev. v. 9, 10).
Phil. ii. 11. Dare we trifle with that Name? (Eph. i. 20).

Lessons.

1. The Lord endued Paul with special power for special circumstances. He can give you exactly the wisdom and grace you need for where you are and now.

Take the Name of Jesus ever,
As a shield from every snare;
If temptation round you gather,
Breathe that Holy Name in prayer.

2. The longer you hold back from joining the ranks of the soldiers of Christ, the firmer hold the enemy will get over you in heart, and will, and habit; and the more stubbornly will he fight to hold his fortress. You are losing grand opportunities for service, too. The sons of Sceva would have learned the Scriptures when they were young. "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found."

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

ONLY COUNTERFEITS.

The authorities at the Bank of England exercise great care to prevent the circulation of counterfeit bank-notes. Steps are taken to stop not only the imitations made for the purpose of defrauding, but anyone issuing an advertisement or travesty of any kind of the notes is liable to be punished. Orders are at once given for the destruction of the lithographic stones from which the offending imitations have been printed, and an undertaking has to be given that the copying shall not be repeated. The Jews who professed power to expel evil spirits were counterfeits; and as cheats, practising unholy fraud, were unmasked and denounced. They were not by any means genuine, and the man in whom the evil spirit was, leaped on them and overcame them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded (v. 16). A tree is known by its fruit. Be genuine, be true, not counterfeits.

MAGNIFYING HIS NAME.

Not long ago a contractor returned to Bulawayo from a trip to the locality of the Victoria Falls. He stated that, while travelling on the Zambesi, an old native took him to Livingstone Island and directed his attention to a tree there, on which were cut the letters, "D. L.," the initials of the great missionary-explorer. The characters were quite distinct, and typified in their clearness the lasting effect of Livingstone's work among the African tribes. His name is still magnified, because throughout his noble life he magnified, by word and deed, the name of the Lord Jesus (v. 17). May it be our ambition to live in the memory of others, as those who have aimed to display and magnify the Name of our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Let each of us determine that "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death."

CONSECRATE YOURSELVES.

Nearly thirty years ago there was a revival among the native Christians of Basutoland. A zealous leader, Asher by name, was full of apostolic devotion, and his addresses had a marvellous effect on his fellow-countrymen. At one meeting an old man rose and said, "We have had enough of talking, let us do something;" and, going up to the Communion table, he laid upon it a half-crown. The whole assembly followed this example, and the movement spread from station to station. On one occasion men, women and children gathered round a Communion table to lay upon it their consecrated offerings, and in a very short time £500 was raised among these native converts in cash, without counting all the cattle contributed. Thus was founded the Barotse Mission. So in our present lesson the converts brought their books together and burned them. When the heart is full of love to God, all that we possess of a worthy nature is consecrated to Him; all that is unworthy we consign to the flames.

THE POWER OF GOD'S WORD.

During the struggle for religious freedom in Scotland, the Protestants for a long time worshipped in private. In 1559 they resolved to publicly declare their faith, and John Knox was chosen as the mouthpiece. The people gathered at St. Andrews, and then at the last moment their hearts failed them. Armed forces lay all round, and the Archbishop wrote that if the preacher dared to enter the pulpit the troops would fire upon him. All quaked except the one man threatened. On June 14 Knox went into the pulpit and addressed the people of St. Andrews, and, through them, the people of Scotland, on their duty to profess the Gospel, notwithstanding all hindrance of idolatrous authority. The town instantly responded, provost and bailies leading the people. The flame spread until town after town, and city after city, became fastnesses of "The Religion." Thus was Scotland saved, and mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed (v. 20). The Gospel is as mighty to-day as of old, and will prevail if we have the faith to rely upon the might of the Lord.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

NEATH.

LATER intelligence from Neath shows that the town was mightily moved by the recent mission. A correspondent of the Neath Gazette wrote to that paper:—"The success of the crusade was assured from the very start. The elements making for success were the splendid oratory of Dr. Henry, the most capable singing of Mr. Armon Jones, the large and sympathetic crowds present, the high order of the choral and congregational singing and sound organization."

READING.

The mission at Reading aroused much interest, not only among abstainers, but on the part of the general public, the impassioned addresses of Dr. Henry, and the effective singing of Mr. Armon Jones, attracting such attention that the meetings steadily grew in attendances and power. By Thursday last the fine Town Hall was crowded, and it is believed that the meetings as a whole were the largest and most influential held in the city for the past twenty years. A large number of people consecrated themselves to Christ for service. Two or three of the ministers nobly supported the movement, and without doubt they helped to make the much needed impression that the churches are responsible to wage war against the evil of drink.

SUNDERLAND.

On Saturday last the missioners commenced services at Sunderland, which were full of promise for great results. The first meeting, held in the evening, was a large gathering of workers. On the Sabbath morning Dr. Henry preached in the Grange Congregational Church to a deeply-interested assembly of about a thousand people. The afternoon saw an audience of over 3,000 gathered in the Palace Theatre. All available space, even for standing room, was occupied. The evening service was held in the Villiers Institute, when the audience was estimated at 1,000 persons. During the day nearly 100 pledges were taken, and the number of people addressed could not have been fewer than 5,000.

Dr. Henry's subjects, doubtless, tended to intensify interest. In the morning his theme was "Passion for the Kingdom," and in the afternoon he spoke on "The Slavery of Drink, the scandal of the modern world." At night the address was on "Partnership with the Publican," and was of an awakening character. The missioner cited many horrors for which indulgence in strong liquor has been responsible, and asserted that anyone who helps the brewers, distillers, or publicans by drinking the liquors they make and sell is a partaker of their evil deeds, and shares in the responsibility. "Drink keeps millions from the churches," said Dr. Henry, and he proceeded to give statistics to prove his assertion, adding that that fact should arouse every Christian to do more for the destruction of the traffic. "You are helping the publican by criticising temperance work," "You become a partner of the publican by doing nothing," "The time is coming when God will destroy the drink like He does every other evil thing," were some of the concluding sentences of this telling address.

Mr. Armon Jones contributed greatly to the services by his singing of "Counted in," "My Mother's Prayer," and other solos.

During this week the meetings are being held in the Victoria Hall.

Death of a Spanish Pastor.

WE regret to announce the death of Rev. J. J. Rial, minister of the reformed Church of Osuna, in Seville, which occurred after a brief illness. Senor Rial was ordained by the Roman Bishop in Cadiz, and when engaged on the American Mission took part in a public discussion on the Bible as the rule of faith. The light streamed into his soul during the controversy, and he publicly threw off his cassock, saying he would never again say Mass. He came to England, where for some years he gained his living as a teacher of Spanish. Feeling that he owed a sacred duty to his own land, he returned to Spain, became a school teacher in Seville, and was afterwards put in charge of the congregations in Monistrol and Osuna. His devotion may be judged by his voluntary surrender of £1 per month out of the £5 sent him by the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society. He recently spent the savings of a lifetime in furnishing his church at Osuna. Senor Rial was a whole-hearted servant of Christ, and it will be difficult to fill his place.

Oxford Notes.

A THREE-DAY festival of the Oxfordshire Band of Hope Union has been held during the week in the Town Hall. The Union comprises 100 Bands of Hope. At the Annual Licensing Sessions the Chief Constable objected to no fewer than ninety-six licences.

A great and successful gathering in connection with the Church Missionary Society was held in the Town Hall a few days ago. The Regius Professor of Divinity presided. The speakers were the Principal of the Divinity College, Poona, and Rev. G. T. Manley (Senior Wrangler 1893). The amount collected for the C.M.S. by the Oxford Auxiliary during the past year was £727.

One of the most interesting of the Oxford Y.M.C.A. gatherings for men of the University and city was that of Sunday last, when Sir John Kennaway was the speaker. The attendance was good. The subject of a very beautiful address was "Loyalty to Christ as Saviour, Master, King."

The Bishop of Liverpool, in the course of the University sermon at St. Mary's on Sunday, preaching from the words in Nehemiah, "So did not I because of the fear of God," said that like Nehemiah Christians should dare to be singular—singular with regard to truth, especially when the truth was unpopular; singular with regard to matters of right and wrong, because it was the safest course, the manliest course, the wisest course, and because it was in accordance with the fear of God.

Pure Literature.—Miss Kate Warren has just issued, under the auspices of the London School Board, an interesting pamphlet dealing with the subject of four years' work of the thirty or forty lecturers engaged by the Board to teach English literature in the evening schools. It is interesting to read of large classes of working men and boys in the East End studying great poets and historians. Doubtless elevation of character must result from such a course of studies, and if the lecturers cannot take the place of that still higher teaching, which aims directly at the well-being of the immortal soul, yet they must, as Miss Warren has claimed for them, "check the supply of cheap and nasty literature by decreasing the demand for it."

The British and Foreign Bible Society enters upon its 100th year in March. To mark the occasion, great Inaugural Centenary Meetings will be held on Friday, March 6, at the Mansion House at 3 o'clock, the Lord Mayor being in the chair, and at Queen's Hall at 7.30, the Marquis of Northampton presiding. Among those who have promised to address the meetings are the Prime Minister, the Right. Hon. A. J. Balfour, M.P.; Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P.; Bishop Welldon (who will speak on "The Bible at Home"); Sir Andrew Wingate, K.C.I.E. ("The Bible in India"); Rev. J. Webster ("The Bible in China"); Rev. F. Langham ("The Bible in the South Seas"); Rev. E. J. Peck ("The Bible in the Arctic Zone"); Rev. F. W. Macdonald ("The Bible and the Future"). At the Queen's Hall meeting a special choir of 600 choristers will give a selection from the Oratorios. Owing to the demand for tickets, early application should be made to the Secretaries, Bible House, 146, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

About Books.

Trusting and Toiling on Israel's Behalf, the organ of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, edited by Rev. Samuel Wilkinson, makes an interesting annual volume. The contents include papers on Scripture teaching, as well as records of evangelistic work among the Jews. (Marshall Bros.)

Carmel's Hero: or, The Life and Times of Elijah. By Thomas Champness. (2s. Rochdale: "Joyful News" Book Depôt). This is a very readable and suggestive book. The chapters are short, and the treatment bright and helpful. We welcome as a frontispiece a lifelike portrait of the author, whose racy style and reliable qualities are here displayed to excellent purpose.

Those who desire to possess a concise sketch of the life and labours of the late Mr. Kensit, will welcome John Kensit, Reformer and Martyr, by Rev. J. C. Wilcox, vicar of Shepscombe. Mr. Wilcox has given us a capital, popular biography of his friend, and the book, which is copiously illustrated, should have a wide circulation. (1s. Protestant Truth Society.)

Realities of Life. Being Thoughts gathered from the teachings of Rev. H. R. Haweis, M.A., compiled by Jessie M. Oliver, with brief memoir and portrait. (3s. 6d. Elliot Stock). Here are many beautiful things, along with some that are ordinary, and others that, from a doctrinal point of view, are indifferent if not misleading. Mr. Haweis was not an exponent of Christian truth from the decidedly Scriptural and Evangelical point of view.

We have greatly enjoyed reading Some Fathers of the Reformation, which has been added to "The Quiet Moment Series" (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society), by Rev. Ivor G. Farrar. It is difficult in a small book to say much that is new on such a subject; but Wycliffe, Luther, Ridley, and Latimer are set in such a light as will attract many readers, while less trodden paths are opened up in the accounts of Tauler, Coligny, and Savonarola. The book will win friends for itself wherever it is introduced.

God Answers Prayer. Some Experiences in the Life and Labours of John Wilkinson. (1s. Marshall Bros.) A deeply-interesting narrative, from the pen of one who has realized much of the goodness of God. Naturally the pages relate in considerable measure to the origin and development of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, of which Mr. Wilkinson is the honoured founder and director. The story is worth rehearsal again and again; and, quite obviously, it is here set forth to the glory of God, and for the encouragement of His people.

Pitman's Shorthand Dictionary. The Twentieth Century edition of this work shows many improvements when compared with its predecessors of a few years ago. In all, some sixty-one thousand characters are given, alongside their equivalents in ordinary letterpress. Shorthand writers who would cultivate a precise and reliable style are strongly recommended to use this work, which is a marvel of typographical clearness, as well as a great advance upon earlier editions in its various distinctive features. (4s. Pitman & Sons.)

The Gordian Knot (2s. 6d. Funk & Wagnalls Co.), by Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, is a careful and painstaking examination of the question whether infidelity answers the inquiries of the human soul on the gravest matters, or leaves us in the midnight darkness where we most need light. Dealing with "the problem which baffles infidelity," he clears the ground with regard to both unbelief and disbelief. Those who are seeking light on their own account or on behalf of others will find the pages stored with the results of wide reading, careful observation, and thoughtful meditation.

Volume xlviii. of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit (7s. Passmore & Alabaster) contains sermons by the late C. H. Spurgeon, spread over the long period from 1859; and through all these breathe the same earnest purpose, insight into spiritual truth, and power of simple and attractive presentation which, in the memories of so many, are lovingly associated with the actual voice of that prince of English preachers. The expositions of appropriate lessons, which accompany the sermons, add much to the value of the volume, and provide invalids and others deprived of the ordinary privileges of public worship with efficient help for the setting up of the church in the home.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Rev. John McNeill at Bristol.

GREAT times have been experienced in Bristol during the last fortnight, and this is the third week of Mr. McNeill's mission, with interest increasing all the time.

The wisdom of looping up the two extremities—Kingswood and Bedminster—during the first week (as noted in last issue) has been apparent since the rallying forces were concentrated at Broadmead Chapel, Victoria Rooms, the People's Palace, and Colston Hall. These capacious structures have been hard put to to accommodate the overflowing audiences, and those responsible for the varied arrangements have been kept busily occupied.

The missioner has been at his best in physical and mental vigour, and has not only drawn but held his large congregations, among whom types of every class are found. His genial manner, pointed humour, mild or scathing satire, have served to deepen the impression of his earnest Gospel message; many a vulnerable point, left unguarded during the recital of some anecdote or homely illustration, has found itself pierced by the logic of his argument and the burning intensity of his words. But, above all, Christ has been uncompromisingly set forth; there has been no pandering to the flesh, nor mere winning of men to man. The Word of God has been paramount, and Christ exalted high, as only Lord and Saviour.

The dinner-hour services have been among the most inspiring, attended by many hundreds of artisans, factory-workers, clerks, masters and gentry; and to one and all the Word has been equally suited. The speaker's physique is a fitting background to the robustness of his message, which has been delivered day after day without fear or favour.

Daily this week three meetings are held—at 1, 3.30, and 8 p.m., enough to tax severely any preacher's strength (and Mr. McNeill by no means spares himself); but his reliance is not in man, but in God, who has without doubt stood by his servant and touched his lips, and, in some meetings especially, the presence of the Holy Spirit has been felt in power. An excellent choir, numbering 300, and representing the best consecrated talent of the churches, has added much to the enjoyment and usefulness of the meetings.

Sunday last was a day to be remembered—as no doubt it will be by large numbers. An indication that a spirit of seeking after God is abroad was shown by the fact that although special meetings were being held by Canon Atherton at St. Paul's Church, Dr. Harry Guinness at the Y.M.C.A., and Dr. Miniie at King Street, not only were Mr. McNeill's services full to overflowing, but the above and other places of worship suffered no diminution. Bristol may be said to be "looking up" in more than one sense, for which the people of God are offering grateful praise. G.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Bath.

The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. When we invited Mrs. Baeyertz she was but a name to us, and we only knew her from her written life, and from the reports we had read of her work in The Christian. Now she is one whom we esteem most highly for her work's sake, and whom we hope to follow with our prayers wherever she goes.

The spirit of prayer was very manifest both before and during the mission, which began on the 8th inst. in Manvers Street Baptist Chapel. Inquirers went into the inquiry room from the very commencement, which continued daily. From the first the meetings were crowded, occupying in succession the Y.M.C.A. Hall, the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, King Street Wesleyan Chapel, and during last week Argyle Street Chapel, the largest in the city, holding 1,500 people, each in turn being crowded out. The readiness of the ministers to lend their chapels has been one of the leading factors of success. No less than over 500 names (connected with more than sixty places of worship) have been taken as those seeking Christ as their Saviour, while the blessing that the Bible readings have been to God's people eternity alone will reveal, 700 to 800 being present at some of them.

Mrs. Baeyertz emphasized that Christ is the Indweller of the heart, that His life we are now daily to live, and that to recognize the Lordship of the Holy Ghost gives new power to the oft-repeated creed, "I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Giver of life." The Lord's second and near advent, and not death, as the hope of the believer, was strongly maintained.

Among many interesting cases in the inquiry room may be mentioned those of two drunkards, both known to be bad men. One had sold up two homes and was now separated from his wife. When asked to go into the inquiry room he strongly refused, saying he would "go out and fight any two men!" Several knelt round him and urged him to kneel too, but he still refused. At last he was persuaded to read some passages out of a marked Testament, and then he broke down entirely, and the next night he went into the inquiry room, is now rejoicing in the Saviour's forgiveness, and has already brought others.

Another was a destitute man, whom Mrs. Baeyertz saw near the door of the chapel, and invited him in. He said that as he was very tired he might as well, as it would be a rest. Seeing that he was destitute, Mrs. Bayertz slipped some silver into his hand, and on meeting him next day asked him if he had a praying mother. His eyes filled with tears at the remembrance of his mother's prayers, for she had prayed much for him. He said that he was by birth a gentleman, and had once been a Christian and a Sunday-school teacher, but had come to his present sad condition through sin. That evening at the meeting he was brought back to the Saviour who had so loved and followed His wandering sheep.

For the last night, was announced a "Holiness" meeting with admission by ticket, the eagerness to secure which showed how deep an impression had been made; 1,800 tickets were issued; the church was packed early, and a large overflow meeting was held in the hall at the rear of the church. Both meetings were full of power, and in the calm quiet the Holy Spirit worked so powerfully that many of those present were led to long, as never before, for the life of victory and power. What passed between the Lord and His children in this heart-searching time only He can know. The mission was brought to a close with the usual Bible reading for the unconverted, when thirty more precious souls decided for Christ for the first time. We trust and believe that Bath will for years feel the effects of this work of God in surrendered lives, and men and women possessed by the Holy Spirit and sent forth to let Him work through them in bringing others into like blessing. To God alone be the praise. G. E. Thomas, President Y.M.C.A.

The Weaver Brothers at Great Yarmouth.

The Weaver Brothers concluded last week a very encouraging mission at the Primitive Methodist Temple, Great Yarmouth. Careful and complete preparations had been made and carried out under the supervision of Rev. A. E. Calvert, the minister of the church. The services had been extensively advertised, and an invitation card left at every house in the town, a personal invitation being also given where possible.

Large congregations gathered nightly, while on the Sunday, the temple, capable of seating 1,200 persons, was crowded. The earnest Gospel address of Mr. Bewley Weaver made a deep impression upon the minds of many, and the singing of Mr. Frank Weaver undoubtedly attracted large numbers both to the services and to the Saviour. Open-air services were held most evenings during the mission. They were well supported by members of the church, and were the means of leading many to the mission. The results have been most cheering, over 120 persons having passed through the inquiry room. Every congregation in the town, including the Roman Catholic, was represented among the enquirers. A number also who had been quite outside all the churches were brought to decision, including dissolute, drinking men and fallen women, and it was gratifying to find that some of the people in whose interests especially the mission was held had been led to Christ. The labours of these devoted brethren will long be remembered. C.

Mr. Henry Thorne at Colwyn Bay.

A mission lasting fifteen days has just been held at Colwyn Bay, in the English Baptist Church (Rev. H. T. Cousins, pastor), by Mr. Henry Thorne. The afternoon Bible readings were greatly appreciated, and each day the attendance increased until the centre of the church was filled with earnest Bible students.

The perfectly natural and quiet way in which Mr. Thorne addresses his audience wins the listener. The evangelist simply "sows the seed," and awaits God's time for its growth and full development. Mr. Thorne has left behind him a quiet, thoughtful, and healthful influence, and the church has been strengthened and revivified. The Gospel services were well attended, and many were led to the Saviour.

Mr. Thorne delivered his well-known lecture "From the Stage to the Cross," to a crowded audience, and on the closing night we were favoured with another lecture, entitled "Off the Stage, or More Pages from the Story of My Life."

The mission throughout has been much blessed to all classes, and it is anticipated that a rich harvest will yet be gathered in through the faithful and earnest preaching of the Gospel of Christ. H. T. C.

Mr. W. D. Dunn in Scotland.

In the Baptist Church in Airdrie Mr. W. D. Dunn has just brought a fortnight's special mission to a close. A year ago Mr. Dunn conducted a mission in the same church, when a very large harvest of souls was gathered in, increasing greatly the Congregational life and membership. Many of the converts of that mission have been conspicuous as workers in the present mission. The meetings just closed were large and fruitful, many anxious souls having been dealt with. J. C.

The Church at Coalsnaughton is having a time of revival. Meetings have been going on for two weeks, conducted by Mr. Dunn. At every service since the mission began signs and wonders have been done in the Name of the Holy Servant Jesus. The meetings are filled every night, mostly with young men and young women. One man, who had not been at a religious service for four years, got awakened the first night he came and was saved on the next. The whole village is being moved, and many have been turned to the Lord. J. S.

Barnsbury Chapel, N.

The services continuing to be held by Mr. Leonard Weaver—assisted by Mr. Bennett Anderson—every evening (except Friday), and thrice on Sunday, are being remarkably blessed in the conviction of sinners and the building-up of believers, and it is encouraging to see every Sunday evening so many decisions taking place. Last Thursday evening Lord Radstock gave an impressive address in connection with the weekly service for shop assistants, and we shall not easily forget the clearness of the message and the solemnity of the appeal for decisions for the sake of God's honour and glory alone, and His wonderful love in the plan of redemption. The Business Men's Choir is taking part in these special services. Mr. Bennett Anderson's singing and help is much appreciated. Interest in the mission is spreading. F. Horne.

Mr. Walter Notman at Enfield Town.

The visit of Mr. Walter Notman, of the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, to Cecil Hall, Enfield Town, has been most fruitful in results. Preceding the mission Dr. Morris, of Brighton, gave a series of Bible readings of a heart-searching character, which were used to introduce many of God's children into the "life more abundant." Following upon such a good preparation, the faith and activity of God's people ran high. Mr. Notman's exposition of the Gospel was according to the old-fashioned doctrines of grace. Sin in every form was mercilessly dealt with and exposed, the power of the Blood of Jesus emphasized, and the Holy Spirit received due recognition. From the first service God has given evidence of His presence, and night by night souls have been won. One old man of eighty-four, who had been a church-goer all his life, said, "I never saw before to-night that He died for me." The blessing still continued on Lord's Day week, when Mr. Ned Wright conducted the services.

W. C. Durrant, Hon. Sec.

Breadalbane U.F. Church Presbytery.

For several months special evangelistic work has been carried on by Mr. Samuel McKenzie, evangelist, under the auspices of the Breadalbane Presbytery, resulting in the winning of many precious souls for Christ. Notably has this been the case among the young people, many young men and women having been gathered into the fold. Different congregations have been visited, and two weeks' services as a rule have been held in each church. The ground gone over lies without the beaten track of usual evangelistic effort, giving a novelty not belonging to it in other districts where such services are frequent.

Rev. William Ross, formerly pastor of Cowcaddens U.F. Church, Glasgow, paid a visit to the churches in advance of Mr. McKenzie, seeking to deepen spiritual life among believers, and in this way to make the work of evangelism all the more fruitful when entered upon. No better preparation could be made for aggressive work than by leading believers into fuller possession of the heritage of blessing treasured up for them in Christ, and in undertaking this pioneer work, Mr. Ross made the path for the evangelist all the easier and his work all the more fertile. J. C.

Mr. E. P. Telford at West Kensington, W.

A twelve-days' mission, under the leadership of Mr. E. P. Telford, has just been held at the Shepherd's Bush Road Wesleyan Church. The preacher's forceful style had a special charm for young men, while telling incidents, drawn from an experience of twenty-five years' evangelism in England and America, were full of interest for all. Touches of sanctified humour relieved the tension, without detracting from the solemn power of the services.

The attendance was good, the congregation of the second Sunday evening being one of the largest seen in the church for many years. Divine blessing richly crowned the effort; the Sunday evenings in particular were times of great spiritual power. At an early meeting on the closing night a good proportion of those who had decided for Christ intimated their desire for church fellowship. The Lord's people have been left encouraged and grateful, and the good work continues. The pastor, who has himself devoted much time to evangelistic work, greatly appreciated Mr. Telford's help. All praise to Him to whom it belongs! C.

Miss Mabelle Biggart, B.A., of New York, has been lecturing on Gospel Temperance in Islington and preaching in Wood Green, N. On March 9-11 she will be working in Bermondsey New Road, in connection with the Wesleyan mission.

Mr. J. Henry Brunton during the last week has been holding evangelistic services at Bowness-on-Windermere. The Hall was crowded, and the Word was preached with much power, and great blessing resulted. G. H. P.

An eight-days' mission was concluded on Lord's Day last in H.M. Prison, Manchester. Special solos and addresses were given by Mr. Arthur Hanson, of the Church Army, and every facility was given to make the services effective. The missioner personally interviewed a large number of the prisoners.

At Brazier's Yard Mission, Romford, a mission has just been concluded by Messrs. J. C. Gray and W. T. Parker, of the Open-Air Mission. The services were originally arranged for one week, but as they were so well attended, they were extended for another week. God's blessing has been present, and several cases of decision have occurred, for which we praise God. F. W. H.

Mr. Tennyson Smith conducted a very effective Temperance mission in the Centenary Hall, Middlewich, February 7 to 12. The building was packed night after night, numbers having to stand, on several occasions many being unable to gain admission. Four hundred and forty-two pledges were taken, mostly adults.

An encouraging mission has just been concluded in the Temperance Hall, Flackwell Heath, Bucks., conducted by Mr. A. Richings. The principal feature lay in the fact that numbers of men and women of the poorer classes came night after night. Much good was realized, and each night the presence and power of God were manifested in a marked way. The Gospel lantern service was also much appreciated.

Rev. John Thomas (late of Dursley, Glos.) has just held a ten-days' mission at Castle Combe, Wilts. The services were marked by spiritual power and blessing, the effects of which will be seen for many days to come. Mr. Thomas is now giving his entire time to evangelistic work, his present address being 33, Cavendish Road, Westbury Road, Bristol.

J. Holborow, Church Secretary.

At the Baptist Church, Longmore Street, Birmingham, a series of Gospel mission services has been conducted by Rev. W. G. Pope, formerly missionary in North Africa, and who laboured for eleven years amongst the Arabs. Many professed conversion. Mr. Pope's visit was not only the means of aiding to decision for Christ, but was productive of increased activity in others, and a strong desire to grow up into Christ in all things.

One of the most recent developments of the P.S.A. work is that of organizing evangelistic missions. Under the auspices of the Richmond (Baptist) P.S.A. Brotherhood, Liverpool, a series of meetings, extending over eight days, was conducted by Rev. H. and Mrs. Moore, of Bristol. The services were arranged for men, women, and children respectively. The Sunday gatherings were particularly well attended, and the faithful and earnest representation of the Truth by the evangelists carried conviction to many hearts. S.

We have just concluded a fifteen-days' mission, conducted by Mr. H. F. Pouncey, of the Evangelization Society, at the Primitive Methodist Church, Uxbridge Road, West Ealing. Mr. Pouncey has brought the truth before the minds of both believers and unbelievers in a clear and forceful manner. Christians were quickened, and some of the unconverted led to decision, and we believe there is more fruit yet to appear. The children of the Band of Hope and the Sunday-school also shared in the blessing. (Rev.) G. B. Cleghorn.

Mr. T. Carleton recently conducted a four-weeks' mission at Carlow under the auspices of the Irish Evangelization Society. The meetings were held in the Friends' Meeting House. Throughout the power of the Spirit was manifest. Interest in the mission increased daily; the heart-searching addresses were listened to with earnest attention, and seldom have we heard the Gospel message more faithfully given. The illustrated lectures on "The Pilgrim's Progress" were accompanied by powerful appeals to hardened sinners and careless Christians. T. T.

A fortnight's mission has been brought to a close in the Old Grain Store, Upper Largo, Fifeshire, by Mr. McGregor. The meetings in this novel place were well attended. God directed our thoughts towards it. We got it at once, had it cleaned, seated, and decorated with mottoes such as "God is Love" and "Now is the Day of Salvation." The mission was very encouraging. Mr. McGregor spoke with force, and gave pointed addresses; while he sang with a rich, clear voice. God's people received a great blessing, and a good number were brought from darkness into light. W. Laing.

Mr. W. R. Lane has recently given two very interesting addresses to young men at the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. The first was a lantern lecture on John Bunyan and his book, and the second on his "Barrack Room Experiences" while in the Coldstream Guards twenty years ago. The lectures were attended by audiences such as one usually gets in the City in the evening, namely young men between seventeen and twenty-four years of age—just the very class the Association exists to reach. On each occasion some young men were pleased to meet Mr. Lane at the close, and definite blessing resulted. B. H.

An eight-days' mission, conducted by Mr. Musa Bhai, Indian evangelist, has been held at East Ham Baptist Church, E. The meetings were very largely attended throughout the week, and the congregation numbered about twelve hundred each Sunday evening. Souls were led to Christ and believers quickened, and many thank God for the visit. On Monday week the evangelist lectured on "Hinduism, and Some of the Social and Religious Problems of India," and there was an audience of over six hundred. The lecture, which was delivered with power, was most interesting, and was listened with great attention. On the Tuesday he spoke on "India's Famine," where again there was a large attendance. S.

In the mission just concluded at Newtown, Upper Norwood, by Mr. William Collard, "Sailor Evangelist," the attendance on week nights was very encouraging, and on Lord's Day evenings the large hall was well filled. The earnest and Scriptural addresses of the missioner were listened to with attention, and a good number of hopeful cases of blessing are known to the workers. An interesting fact with regard to several is that their decision for Christ occurred on reaching home after the meetings. On two Sunday afternoons Mr. Collard spoke at the men's meeting in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church (Rev. J. G. Train), where his services were much appreciated. George Willoughby.

Ten years ago, as a youth, Mr. Charles Noakes, now of the Evangelization Society, left Holcombe, his native village, to engage in evangelistic work in the north of England. He has returned at various times to conduct meetings in the Wesleyan Church, and has recently conducted a fifteen days' mission there. Between ninety and a hundred persons have penitently sought the Lord. One in every five of the population, we believe, has been savingly converted to God. Many were young men, and there were several married couples also. There was an absence of excitement, but a deep sense of Divine presence, so that no pressure was needed to get the people to yield to Christ. A Grateful Reader.

At Lydbrook (Glos.) Baptist Church we have just concluded a fortnight's mission which was conducted by Mr. McLean, of Liverpool. From the beginning of it we were blessed. The Lord gave the preacher favour with the people, and throughout the mission he preached the Gospel faithfully. In making plain the way of salvation, he appealed to the head as well as to the heart, and his words were really helpful and stimulating to the believers present, so that they have expressed a wish to have Mr. McLean again, and very soon, in their midst. We rejoice, too, that many made a decision for Christ, and it is evident that the word is still bearing fruit. "To God be the glory, great things He hath done."

(Rev.) D. J. Perrott.

Master Fritz P. Wood (the Irish Boy Preacher) has been holding a fortnight's mission at West Malling, Kent. The first part of the time the services were held in the Rose Coffee House Mission Room, but it proved all too small for the numbers who crowded to hear him; so the ladies who carry on the mission work, and who had convened the meetings, had to requisition the Public Lecture Hall for the remainder of the time, and it was packed nightly. The earnestness of the youthful preacher, as he spoke and sang the Gospel, had encouraging results. It was a soul-searching time, and Christians of all denominations have been stirred up and blessed, while precious souls have been won for Christ. C.

Mr. John Hawkins concluded on February 2 a sixteen-days' series of meetings at the Milverton Railway Mission, Warwick. The evangelist set forth the Gospel in a striking manner, and with a tenderness that seldom failed to touch the heart. One was never left in doubt as to the issues at stake. His addresses were listened to with rapt attention by deeply moved audiences. His life story, "From Gipsy Caravan to Railway Mission," given on the last night, was closely followed by a large and sympathetic congregation. During the mission a number of souls, young and old, have been led to Jesus; while the whole spiritual tone of the work has been raised. To God be all the glory. C.

Irish Notes.

MR. B. S. ROSENTHAL, Hebrew Christian assistant missionary in Dublin, has been addressing a series of meetings with good effect in Londonderry and neighbourhood, and his account of Jewish life and worship, with his explanation of the modern passover ritual aroused much interest.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the Lisburn branch of the Bible and Colportage Society for Ireland has just been held in Lisburn, when a most encouraging report was presented as to the working of the Society in the town and neighbourhood. A large number of good and useful books were sold by the agent during the year.

The late Mr. John Wilson, whose estate was valued at £74,956, left £2,000 each to the Wesleyan Missionary Society and the Bible Society, and one-fourth of the residue subject to a life interest has been left to pay £450 to the Methodist societies at Tramore and Waterford, the London City Mission, and the Moravian Foreign Mission, and the remainder to be held in trust for the Bible Society and the Wesleyan Missionary Society.

Welsh Notes.

AN important question is under consideration at the present time in religious circles in South Wales. It has reference to the advisability of starting a daily newspaper, which shall lend its influence and aid to the cause of righteousness. Horse-racing and betting news will be excluded from its columns, and other objectionable features of the ordinary newspaper will be absent.

The mediation of the North Wales Free Church Federation is being sought in connection with the Penrhyn Quarry dispute. The Arvon Liberal Association have decided to write to the Federation urging it to draw up a memorial for signature by every church in North Wales. The memorial will be in the form of an appeal to the Board of Trade to take action under the Conciliation Act of 1896.

An earnest appeal is being made by the clergy of the Barry district, in Glamorganshire, on behalf of a new scheme of church extension. The population of the district has grown in seventeen years from 700 to 27,000. To meet the demands thus made the Church of England has only accommodation for 1,750 worshippers. It is now intended to build a new church at Barry Island, another at Barry, and two more at Cadoxton-juxta-Barry.
